The Maharaja Gaekwar's Jubilee: Baroda celebrates next week the fiftieth anniversary of the accession of Maharaja Sayaji Rao Gaekwar to the gadi of the State. His Highness' administration has been a pioneer in many important directions. It was one of the first to introduce social legislation against infant marriage and we are glad to see that steps are being taken to stiffen its application. Baroda took the lead in introducing universal free and compulsory education and, as a part of it, a system of circulating libraries which have proved very successful throughout the State. The position of the untouchables engaged the sympathetic consideration of the Maharaja long before any Depressed Classes Mission was thought of. The measures adopted in Baroda for bringing up these classes, are among the most effective and sagacious that we have come across. His Highness' activities, however, have not been confined to his State. In the days before Indian politics assumed the intensive form which has made the co-operation in national matters of personages in his position difficult, His Highness freely participated in all-India movements, his special interest being reserved for those connected with the amelioration of the conditions of social life. Education and elevation of women's status, reform of the caste system, removal of untouchability, encouragement of foreign travel and other reforms, always had in him a warm champion and supporter. He has thus a prominent place in the roll of the builders of modern India. It is unfortunate that, for the sake of his health, His Highness has had to spend the greater part of his time in recent years in Europe. But we hope that this necessity may no longer exist, and that the Maharaja will be able to live among his own people whose affection and loyalty to him are reflected in the great demonstrations which are projected for the jubilee celebration.

The All-India Social Conference: We are now in receipt of fuller details of the Social Conference held along with the Liberal Federation at Calcutta to which we referred last week. It will be seen from the summary of the proceedings which we publish elsewhere, that it was an influential and well-attended gathering. Mrs. Saraladevi Chaudhurani, the well-known lady worker from the Punjab, presided. It was the Bombay Provincial Social Conference held recently at Poona that first chose a lady for the honour, and the All-India Social Conference ought to be congratulated on keeping up that tradition, for nothing is more calculated to impress upon our women the part they are to play in the social regeneration of India. The President in her forceful address compared the Indian National Congress of forty years ago when it was a purely political body with that of to-day which, under the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi, no longer looks upon the Indian National Social Conference as a rival, but as a powerful ally and guide. She laid stress upon the necessity of educating the "selfish, narrow-minded, and unenlightened priesthood" and the "ignorant, superstitious and small-visioned womanhood", who act as regular drags on the progress of social reform in this country, and also appealed in eloquent terms for the social reconstruction of India. "Social reconstruction", she said, "goes to the very root of nation-building in India. Social solidarity is the progenitor of political privileges. A renovated social India, a socially compact Hindusthan, could alone stand shoulder to shoulder with the modern mighty countries of the World". One feature of the Conference was that many ladies took active part in the discussions. The resolutions on the abolition of the purdah system and the dowry curse called forth strong speeches from two Bengalee ladies.

The Trade Union Congress: If the leaders of the Trade Union movement direct as much attention to reforms in the life and condition of the workers as to enable them to fight for higher wages, the impression that the movement is devoid of an ideal would not have become prevalent. The movement, if conducted on proper lines, is one which should be welcomed by employers in as much as the sober habits, health and efficiency of the workers are calculated to advance their own interests as well. The address delivered by Rai Saheb Chandrika Prasad as president of the second session of the Bombay Provincial Trade Union Conference which was held on the 2nd instant in Bombay, was a sober exposition of some of the needs of the movement in India. We have, during the strike of the textile workers in Bombay, pointed out the helplessness of the workers to enforce their claim in the absence of proper organisation and sound leadership, and we do not underrate the importance of organisation. But organisation should not be understood to be complete if a large number of workers join the Union. The education of the workers and their children, the habit of temperance, punctuality and regularity, which come under what may be called "reforms from within" should not be neglected. Out of the very large number of resolutions passed at the Conference, there is hardly any that deals with the duties and responsibilities of the workers to themselves. We note with pleasure that the Conference has passed a resolution drawing public attention to the growing menace of the liquor traffic, to the large proportion of hard-won earnings spent on liquor amongst the working classes and to the close relation between alcohol and prostitution, and urging Government to remove all liquor shops from industrial areas. The resolution on Local Option and Prohibition and the one appealing to all lovers of India to work for a drastic reduction of drinking facilities and to remove this great social temptation are very welcome from a body representing the interests of manual workers. We trust that the movement which is in its infancy, will, by its constructive as well as protective work, command the sympathy and respect of all classes of the community.

Indian Muslim Youths' Nationalism: The debate on the resolution, moved by a member in the Aligarh Muslim University Union at its meeting held on the 28th December, expressing the opinion of the Union that the solution of the Indian problem lies in the immediate supersession of communal programmes by a national one, shows the spirit of revolt among Indian Mahomedan youth against the narrow communalism which the leaders of the community find hard to break. Not long ago, we observed in these columns that, if Indian Mahomedan youths were not hampered by their worldly-wise elders, they would make a clean sweep of the purdah and polygamy. The resolution which was carried by the Union in spite of the opposition of such eminent leaders like Mr. M. A. Jinnah, Sir Mahomed Shafi and Sir Ali Imam; is symptomatic of the tremendous volume of idealism among young Muslims, which is seeking an opportunity for expression. We regard the passing of this resolution by the Aligarh Muslim University Union as a very encouraging sign of the possibility of finding a solution to the question of Hindu-Moslem unity which has been the despair of Indian leaders.

Gambling in the Name of Charity: The experience which the Rev. F. Perril narrates in his letter which we print to-day under the caption "Gambling in the name of Charity" is not uncommon. We have received on more than one occasion books of lottery tickets which we have been obliged to return in spite of the senders not having had the courtesy to enclose stamps to cover the postage for returning them. The object of the lotteries is, as in the case noted by Mr. Perrill, to find money to support some Orphanage or other useful or philanthropic institution. That lottery is a kind of gambling, which differs from horse races only in degree, goes without saying. The tendency to make a virtue of this evil by associating it with objects worthy of public support is on the increase. We, therefore, cordially endorse the timely protest made by Mr. Perrill. The law relating to all sorts of gambling is sufficiently strict but the arm of authority is paralysed in enforcing it, because authority supports what is perhaps the biggest as it is the worst kind of gambling, namely, race course gambling. It is a pity that gambling of the kind of "lucky dip" and other things is permitted at fairs and fetes organised by enlightened persons, whose motive cannot be questioned for a moment, for the purpose of raising funds for social and humanitarian objects. The lottery ticket-books have become a nuisance, and there is reason to believe that the motives behind all such lotteries are not above suspicion. It is time some measures were taken to prevent unscrupulous people from exploiting the credulity and weakness of the public. We appeal to organisers of fairs and fetes in aid of noble causes to take particular care to see gambling excluded from their programme. We hope Mr. Perrill's communication will receive the attention it deserves from enlightened public.

The Sengundar Conference: We are glad that there has been a great awakening in recent years—thanks mainly to the efforts of Mr. N. Lakshmanan of Coimbatore,—among the members of the Sengundar community in South India among whom the custom of dedicating girls to temples as Devadasis, resulting in such girls leading a loose life, is prevalent The Sengundar Mahajana Conference which was held last week at Avanashi (Coimbatore) under the presidency of Mr. Vadivelu Mudaliar, has passed a number of resolutions some of which clearly show the determination of the community to remove this long-standing stigma from it. The Conference, without contenting itself with merely passing a resolution condemning the evil, has launched a vigorous programme of work and has resolved that the members of the community who violate their oath that girls shall not be dedicated to temple service and their abettors, shall suffer social ostracism. The Conference also expressed its opinion that the question must be taken up by the Madras Religious Endowments Board as well. We do hope that the members of other communities, who are no less sinners in propagating this grave social evil, and the Religious Endowments Board, if it survives the attempts at its obliteration by Swarajists like Mr. Satyamurthy, will respond to the appeals addressed to them by the Sengundar Conference. We are glad that Mr. N. Lakshmana Mudaliar has been re-elected Secretary of the Sangham, and we are sure that his sincerity and enthusiasm will win the support the cause richly deserves from the public at large.

Disabilities of Depressed Classes: The disabilities of depressed classes in this country are only too well-known, but seldom have we come across such a case as that reported from Wadhwan. It would appear that there was recently a motion on the Municipal agenda that the Antyajas or people of the depressed classes should not be allowed to take water from pools in the river sands, but, strange to say, contrary to expectations, it was carried by a majority, the Mussalmans and other non-Hindu members voting for it. The result is that the depressed classes do not even get the necessary drinking water. One cannot find sufficient words to condemn the mentality of a set of people occupying the position of Municipal Councillors, who would not allow the depressed classes even drinking water. However, it is some comfort to know that at least the Hindu Councillors did not vote for this motion. We hope the enlightened Ruler of Morvi, the celebration of whose 49th birthday recently was signalised by some valuable boons to his subjects in the shape of remission of land revenue and a handsome donation to the Social Service League to carry on social reform work among the people, will follow in the footsteps of the Maharaja of Kolhapur and banish untouchability from his State.

Muslim Ladies' Conference: Coming close upon the action of the Secretary of the All-India Muslim Educational Conference refusing admission to ladies to the Conference, the holding of a Conference of Muslim ladies at Aligarh last week under the leadership of Atiya Begum is a distinct sign of the awakening conciousness among enlightened ladies of the community. We hope with the Leader of Allahabad that the Conference marks the beginning of a healthy movement on the part of women to take their legitimate share in public activities associated with the moral and material advancement of the community.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JANUARY 9, 1926.

TWO NON-POLITICAL CONFERENCES.

It is a healthy sign of the times that conferences devoted to subjects other than politics are beginning to engage an increasing measure of public interest. Last week two such Conferences were held, one in Bombay and the other in Madras, which have attracted an amount of public attention which they have not done hitherto. The first was the thirteenth session of the Indian Science Congress and the second, the ninth session of the Indian Economic Conference. Although the Science Congress did not include the social sciences in its programme, the accident of the President being an eminent exponent of the Agricultural Science, gave his address an economic significance. It was a pronouncement of outstanding merit, both for freshness of views and independent outlook. The central theme of Mr. Albert Howard's observations was that quality has been sacrificed to quantity in some of the great irrigation schemes which have been carried out in modern times. The areas brought under cultivation by these schemes yielded for a time abundant harvests. But the quality of the wheat or rice grown in them was inferior in nutritive contents to that grown in rain-fed or well-irrigated areas. Malaria appeared in them after a time and Mr. Howard was inclined to attribute its appearance more to the deficient nutrition supplied by the food-grains grown than to any other single cause. The soil also rapidly deteriorated and became ultimately unfit for cultivation. Its reclamation required an expenditure incommensurate with the yield which may be expected to be derived from it. The boast often made that so many million acres have been brought under irrigation and cultivation, was thus often illusory. The address was in effect a plea for a more cautious policy of extending irrigation. Showy schemes involving enormous expenditure have not been productive of permanent benefit to the country. It is worthy of note that the irrigation projects carried out by Indian engineers in pre-British days, have not been attended by the deleterious consequences of modern projects. Mr. Howard cited in a foot-note the opinion of a considerable authority on the science :

> In his "Irrigation and Drainage" (London 1900) King concludes an interesting discussion of this question in the following words, which deserve the fullest consideration on the part of the irrigation authorities in India; "It is a noteworthy fact that the excessive development of alkalies in India as well as in Egypt and California, is the result of irrigation practices modern in their origin and modes and instituted by people lacking in the traditions of the ancient irrigators who had worked these same lands thousands of years before. The alkali lands of to-day, in their intense form, are of modern origin, due to practices which are evidently inadmissible and which in all probability were known to be so by the people whom our modern civilisation has supplanted."

The moral is that in our schemes of progress it is unwise to neglect the experience of those who have gone before us.

The Economic Conference in Madras began with an admirable welcome speech by Sir R. Venkataratnam, in which he summed up in a few pithy sentences the features of a new economic era when "labour would mean service more than wage-earning and the capitalist would cease to be a profit-maker and would become the captain and director of industries". He went on to observe that India had a right to expect and evolve an Indian School of Economics based on the principle of ekam sat (One alone is), meaning the one truth that all life is one. "To such a stage of economic federation of humanity man would grow step by step and stage by stage. When such a state was reached all men would work in Universal Brotherhood". The high note struck in Sir Venkataratnam's speech was not maintained in those which immediately followed it. Lord Goschen, the Governor of Madras, opened the proceedings of the Conference, and his remarks were strongly coloured by the economics of exploitation. His Excellency went out of his way to refer to the anti-Indian policy of the South-African Whites, which, he said, was "a conflict of standards of living, and must be regarded as such". If it was a question of standards of living, nothing can be more easy for the Whites than to say so, instead of adopting an anti-Asiatic or anti-Indian attitude. In that case, whether they like it or not, Indians in South Africa will try to accommodate their standard to those of their White neighbours. What after all is meant by the "standard of living"? If it means cleanliness of person and surroundings, education of children and bringing them up in wholesome ways, and a pure and healthy home life, it will be all to the good if Indians are obliged to observe a superior standard of living. Do all the Whites in South Africa conform to such a standard? It is no use Lord Goschen shutting his eyes to facts in order to find support for a pre-conceived theory? Then, again, if the South African Whites are entitled to object to Indians on the ground of the latter's lower standard of living, the African natives there have an equal right to object to the European's higher standard of living which they do not want. That two communities are entitled to persecute each other because their "standards of living" are different, is nothing but the modern equivalent of the medieval persecution of one another by rival sects. Then, why on earth, did the Whites want Indians to go and work for them in South Africa solemnly promising them full rights of citizenship?

Professor Hamilton's presidential address was a plea for maintaining or rather restoring the industrial system which prevailed in England in the last century. He described this system as "the individualistic capitalist system", and asked whether it was possible and desirable from the highest standpoint of human welfare to work for a return to it. That system was broken down by the Great War,

and in the opinion of many it directly led to that War. A restoration of it, were it possible, might mean the restoration of conditions which may lead to yet another war. It is hardly necessary to say that such a result cannot be regarded as conducive to the highest good of humanity. The Professor, however, seems to think otherwise. "I believe," he said, "that the ethical no less than economic progress of mankind rests fundamentally upon the maintenance of the forces of competition." He quoted "a very powerful writer"—perhaps Nietzsche—who said that progress through competition was the condition of the abolition of poverty. He also said that without competition the powers both moral and physical of the human species will atrophy and die. "I believe", said the President, "that this judgment is fundamentally correct." This is an argument not only against socialism or communism, as he used it, but for militarism and even slavery. "Nature red in tooth and claw" is apparently Professor Hamilton's ideal of an economic system. "If real progress is to be made," he said, "we must do our best to safeguard two things: competition and freedom." But the competitive regime does not make for freedom. In order to compete successfully with its neighbour, whether in trade or war, the freedom of individuals, of thought, speech and conduct, has to be placed under strict regulation. The competitive system is culminating in dictatorships, direct or veiled, in the western world.

MYSORE ADMINISTRATION.

Mysore is the second largest Indian State (the first being the Nizam's Dominions), having an area of 29,475 square miles with a population of 5,978,892. The administration is conducted by the Dewan in the name and under the direction of the Maharaja. The present Maharaja is a pious, simple and God-fearing Ruler who has kept up the high traditions of the ancient Hindu kings. In one of the recent series of articles contributed to the Swarajya, Madras, Mr. S. S. Setlur, a shrewd lawyer who has made a thorough study of the administrative affairs of Mysore, wrote that Mysoreans "are extremely lucky so far in having a Ruler who combines in himself the best of Eastern and Western cultures and who may be justly claimed to be a true Kshatriya king of the type of those of ancient India. He is ever on the alert, takes time by the forelock and gives to his people, unasked, the rights and privileges for which we in British India have to fight inch by inch for months and years". The most distinguishing characteristic of the Maharaja is his strictly impartial attitude towards the various religionists. As we recently noticed in these columns, the Maharaja has set an example as to what a national Government can do in solving the vexed problem of Hindu-Mahomedan unity. It is specially noteworthy that the Mysore Government has taken the initiative in preparing a scheme regarding reciprocity between Hindus and Mahomedans in the matter of the stoppage of music before mosques and cow-killing. Besides taking personal interest in every detail of the administration of the State, the Maharaja has been always ready to help social and humanitarian activities outside the State, which are calculated to advance the larger interests of the country. The Yuvaraja of Mysore, who recently returned from Europe, is an enlightened prince who moves among his people freely, and although he has no direct functions connected with the administration, he keeps a close watch over all the important activities in the State. The present Dewan, Sir A. R. Banerji, whose Dewanship of Cochin has marked him out as a far-sighted statesman, has, even according to the sharp critics of his administration, been conducting the administration with firmness and ability with the result that, even under abnormal depression, he has been able to save the State from financial trouble. Now that his term is about to expire, there is a strong public opinion in the State that, as it would be difficult to find one who will be as good as he is in State finance, it will not be in the best interests of the State to allow him to go in April. It will thus be seen that, although the constitution of the Government cannot in any way be characterised as responsible Government, the interests of the State are quite safe in the hands of the present Maharaja and his Dewan who have completely identified themselves with the interests of the people.

Coming to the general administration, the Administration Report of Mysore for the year ending 30th June 1925 shows that, in spite of adverse circumstances, the State has continued to make steady progress in all departments affecting the welfare of the people. Along with other parts of South India, Mysore suffered very badly from the devastating floods which created no small misery in South India in July 1924. It is gratifying to note that the Mysore Government acted with commendable promptitude, and mobilised the resources of the State for the relief of the sufferers. The interest taken by the Government in what may be called rural reconstruction is specially noteworthy. Agriculture is the mainstay of the people of India, and the Mysore Government has taken every care for the improvement of agriculture. The report records an increase of 3,55,747 acres in the area under cultivation and also considerable increase in various crops, notably paddy, ragi, horsegram, cholam and cotton. Various irrigation works were undertaken, such as construction of new tanks across the Maralvadi stream and the Vadli stream, etc., and the State incurred an expenditure of Rs. 3,51,258 for the construction of tanks and channels. A large sum spent during the year on sanitation has resulted in much improvement in the sanitary conditions, both in urban and rural areas. The expenditure incurred on sanitary measures by the Municipalities alone amounted to Rs. 1,03,636. Improvement of drains and wells, removal of congestion, filling up of insanitary pits and the construction of public libraries were some of the items on which considerable amount was spent during the year. It is stated that the provisions of the Village Sanitation Regulation were introduced during the year into 223 villages. 620 wells were sunk in villages and 353 wells were improved. 56 villages were shifted to healthier sites including 47 which were affected by floods in the Shimoga District.

The standard of education among the people is said to be the standard to measure the progress of a country. In this respect, Mysore, though not as advanced as its sister States of Cochin and Travancore, is ahead of British India. The University of Mysore with Rajatantra Pravina Dr. Brajendra Nath Seal, M.A., Ph. D. D. Sc., as Vice-Chancellor, has continued to make steady progress. The scheme for the reorganisation of the University has been undertaken, and in the latter part of the year the several Sub-Committees appointed by the University Reorganisation Committee met and submitted their deliberations which are under the consideration of the Senate. During the year, the B.A., and B. Com. degree examinations of the University were recognised by the Bombay University for the purposes of admission to the B. Com. degree of the latter under certain conditions. So also the University of Paris recognised the B.A. and B. Sc, degrees for the purposes of admission to the degrees of Doctor in Science or Arts of that University. The total number of students on the rolls of all colleges was 1,199 against 1,161 in the previous year, thus showing an increase of 38 students during the year. Out of the successful candidates in the B.Sc., one was a girl, and in the B.A. degree examination one Adi-Karnataka (a member of the so-called depressed classes) was successful. Special attention is paid to the education of Mahomedans, and five Mahomedans became eligible for the B. A. degree during the year. Various important measures of reform such as completion of the educational survey, reconstitution of School Committees and revising their powers and duties, remodelling of the courses and the revision of curricula in primary and middle schools, making vernacular the medium of instruction in the middle school course, revision of the S. S. L. C. Scheme, revision of Grant-in-aid Code, systematisation of scholarships, etc., were carried out during the year. The total number of institutions, both public and private, on the 30th June 1925 was 8,002 with a strength of 3,06,105 as against 9,084 with a strength of 3,03,092 in the previous year. In spite of the fall in the number of schools by 1,082 there was an increase of 3,103 in the number of pupils under instruction. The percentage of boys and girls at school to the total population of school-going age taken at 15 per cent. of the total population according to the Census of 1921) was 34·83 against 34·48 in 1923-24; that of the boys alone to the total male population of school-going age was 55 21 against 55.03 and that of girls alone to the total female population of school-going age was 13·89 against 13.14 during the previous year. On an average there was one institution for every 3·68 sq. miles of area and for 732 persons of total population. One out of every 2·87 of the population of school-going age was under instruction and the proportion of pupils to the total population was about the same as in the previous year, viz., 1 in 19. The percentage of boys under instruction to the total male population was 8·24 and that of girls to the total female population was 2·03 and that of both boys and girls under instruction to the total population was 5·23. Encouragement is given to the study of Sanskrit and there are three Sanskrit colleges in the State besides 48 Sanskrit Pathasalas. The State has 11 Training Institutions including 4 for the training of school mistresses with hostels attached to them, 17 industrial schools, a School for Engineering, 4 Commercial Schools and the Central Institute for the Deaf and the Blind. The Government had constituted an Advisory Committee for Mahomedan education which dealt with important questions connected with the education of Mahomedans. Encouragement is given to the education of the depressed classes and the State has 609 schools in all for the education of the children of the depressed classes. We do not know whether the existence of separate schools for separate communities implies that restrictions are imposed on such communities being admitted into the public schools in the State. The language difficulty is a serious one in Mysore where there are separate schools for children speaking Kannada, Tamil, Telugu, Marathi and Urdu. It is said that "the Compulsory Education Scheme has been in operation in 240 centres but in many of them it is not working satisfactorily. As one of the main causes for the unsatisfactory working of the scheme is the failure of the local authorities to prepare an annual Census of children of the ages of 7 to 11, the attention of all Presidents of Municipal Councils and Deputy Commissioners of Districts was invited to the provisions of the rules and action has been taken by many local authorities in this respect. On a close examination of the working of the scheme in the areas concerned, it is found that the amount required to give full effect to the Scheme may be roughly estimated at Rs. 96,840 as recurring and Rs. 14,365 non-recurring. The total number of children of compulsory age attending schools in the several centres was 43,530 as against 32,938 in the previous year."

The worst part of the report is that which deals with the Excise department. It is our unpleasant duty to say that the Mysore Government's excise policy is utterly inconsistent with the best traditions of the State and especially of its beneficent Ruler. The Government maintains a Central Distillery just as in Cochin and acts as the sole agent for the distribution of liquor to the people. We regard this state of affairs as humiliating to the dignity of the largest Hindu State in India. We find the consumption of molasses arrack during the year has increased by 1,122 gallons. It is some relief to find appreciable decrease in the consumption of liquor in the Kolar district. But the explanation that "the heavy decrease in Kolar District is attributed to the poverty of the drinking classes, (mostly coolies), reduction of wages and payments made to them in kind and to heavier retail prices charged by vendors under

the high duty system", distinctly shows that the drink evil is wide-spread among the labouring classes of the district. We hope the evil will attract the attention of temperance workers in Mysore and that some effective measures will be taken to check its growth. The consumption of ganja also shows an increase. The drink and drug evil prevails to a considerable extent in Mysore, and it is the duty both of the State and of enlightened people to see that this blot on the fair name of Mysore is removed as early as possible. But for this dark chapter, the Report is a record of progress maintained in all departments of the State for which the Government can rightly claim much credit.

GAMBLING IN THE NAME OF CHARITY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have just received through the mail a book of lottery tickets called "The Grand Raffle, in aid of public Libraries and other Charitable Purposes." I am asked to sell the tickets at as 8 each. There are twenty-two tickets and I am to either sell them all and keep one rupee for my trouble or to keep two tickets for myself. Presumably the books have been sent broadcast throughout the United Provinces. The total must be for Rs 60,000 or more since Rs. 36,000 are offered in prizes and 40% is reserved for the special object of the raffle.

The organizers of this raffle did not know that personally I am a determined opponent of gambling on both moral and economic grounds. Of course this would not interest them aside from the fact that they would naturally regret wasting the book and the postage. But they have tried to safeguard themselves by suggesting that if I happen not to be interested they will appreciate my handing the book to someone who may make use of it. And of course since it is all a gamble anyway they no doubt expected to draw some blanks

However I am led to wonder why they concluded it would be even a worth-while gamble to send a book to the "Manager of the Mission" at Ballia. Is the general estimate of missionaries such as to lead the public to conclude that they as a class encourage and support gambling? I fear it is a case of "chickens coming home to roost," for it is a sad fact that there are Christian Institutions in India that do promote lotteries in the name of charity. We cannot expect our friends among those who are not Christans to make any fine distinctions in estimating their Christian brethren. Christian organizations and individual Christians need to cast out the money changers from their temple, as Jesus did long ago. The Christian has instructions to "abstain from all appearance of evil," and when he lends himself to gambling, he shows how far short he falls in at least one particular.

But the fact that such a lottery can be thus organized and launched with any hope of success gives one pause. To what extent does Indian public opinion favour such a thing? Government has compromised itself to the extent of placing a tax on betting in Bombay. Does this mean that Government is prepared to countenance lotteries of all sorts and to permit the mail to be used to send out books of tickets to any and all, without reference to the desires of those who receive them?

The ingratiating feature about this raffle is that it purports to be linked with a seemingly worthy object. The organizers send out the books from a district headquarters, and the impression is given that a Memorial Library is to receive help from the raffle. But the "Other Charitable Purposes" mentioned, seem delightfully vague and leave a big loop-hole for the escape of funds. A Rai Sahib, who is described as a "Special Magistrate with First Class Powers," is to be present at the drawing. But no names or responsible organizations are given as the promoter,, simply certain initials along with the address And this lottery in the name of charity is asking 120,000 people to give as. 8 each with the prospects that a total of 1705 will draw prizes.

So far India seems to have steered pretty clear of this sort of thing. Care is needed that she keeps clear. There should be effective publicity against it, making it impossible for men of position and influence to become a party to such a conspiracy against the morals of the land. All the promoters' desire is that those who oppose lotteries should remain quiet. They are not trying to invade any one's convictions. They will find dupes enough for their purposes if allowed to operate undisturbed But such gambling should be prevented by law and it should be a criminal offence to use the mails for such a purpose. No distinction should be made between Christian Institutions, public charities or private enterprises; all such raffles and lotteries are a public menace; they should not be tolerated. Public opinion can stop them, but it will not be a silent, inactive public opinion that does so.

Methodist Episcopal Church, Yours etc.,
Ballia, U. P. (Revd.) FRED M. PERRILL.

THE ALL-INDIA SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

We are indebted to the Servant, Calcutta, for the following summary of the proceedings of the All-India Social Conference held on Thursday the 31st December at Calcutta along with the meeting of the Indian National Liberal Federation :—

The All-India Social Conference was held on Thursday at the Albert Institute Hall. Srijukta Sarala Devi Chaudhurani presided.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen attended. Among those noticed on the dais were : Sir M. V. Joshi, C. Y. Chintamani, Dr. Paranjpye, Rao Bahadur Daubly, Rao Bahadur Thakur Hanuman Singh, Mr. D. G. Dalvi, Mr. Surendranath Varma, Mr. G. C. Banerjee, Mr Bipin Chandra Pal, Mr. G. K. Gadgil, Dr. Abdul Gaffur Sidhique, Rai Bahadur Dr. Chuni Lal Bose, Mr. Devaprosad Ghose, Mr. P. N. CHAIRMAN OF THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE'S SPEECH.

Babu Muralidhar Banerjee, Chairman of the Reception Committee, in welcoming the President, delegates and the visitors explained the object of the Conference. He said that all the leaders of the country have now devoted themselves to social service which had become the all-absorbing theme. In beginning social reform they must strike at the root of all social evils which lay in the ignorance and civic disabilities, and in the utter helplessness of their women. So long as the mothers of their nation remained in that abject condition, there could neither be any social reorganisation nor the growth of any independent nation.

Without improvement of social and economic condition of the depressed classes and without their sanitary improvement, "Swaraj" was only a dream. Unless they could elevate their women and the masses all talk of "Swaraj" and self-Government was meaningless.

Sir M. Joshi in proposing Srijukta Sarala Devi Chaudhurani to the chair said that Bengali ladies were going to dominate over them. This year's deliberations of the Indian National Congress were guided by that gifted lady Mrs Sarojini Naidu and to-day he was proposing another gifted lady Srijukta Sarala Devi to conduct the deliberations of the All-India Social Conference. He knew Sarala Devi Chaudhurani, and of her hard labour for social welfare work.

Rai Bahadur Dr. Chuni Lal Bose seconded the proposal.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

In the course of her speech Srijukta Sarala Devi said, that she felt honoured to have been asked to guide the deliberations of a Conference which owed its birth 40 years ago to the far-sighted genius of Mahadeo Govind Ranade. Referring to herself she said that she had been born under a more enviable position than many of her countrymen, and that she had been served with the highest culture of the East and West in unstinted measure. She called upon her countrymen and countrywomen to rally under the flag of social reform. She invited fresh recruits, the young lovers of their race and of humanity, to throw their strong arms around the sick and the weary, to cheer the faint and to lighten the burden of those whose future was black and hopeless. Unless, said Mrs Chaudhurani, their house was set in order, they could not step out, claim or bear the burden of political rights in the outside world. Continuing, she said that a selfish, narrow-minded, unenlightened priesthood was hampering the nation's march for freedom at every step, and it was doomed to advance at a ridiculously crawling pace. Either the women and priests must be left to take care of themselves or they must be turned into trained allies by education of mind etc., and made to add to the strength of the nation and the happiness of the units.

The historian of the Mahrattas must have been faced with this alternative when he conceived of founding the Social Conference, alongside of the Indian National Congress.

POSITION OF WOMEN.

Mrs. Chaudhurani said again that the average woman had been kept intellectually unfed for ages by the average man in India. It was only when the armed ships of the West anchored in her harbours, and foreign aggressors sucked Indian's blood away that Indian men were conscious of their self-created handicap—its unresponsive womenfolk. Female education abolition of purdah, widow re-marriage, prohibition of early marriages, child protection, drink prohibition, removal of untouchability, taking back to the social fold repentant apostates, were made the planks of the Social Reform platform. The Indian National Congress, she said, now looked upon the Social Reform Conference as a powerful ally and has engrafted much of its programme.

UNTAPPED NOOKS.

Continuing the speaker said that there were countless nooks and corners where its messages had not reached yet, where human hearts had not reverberated to the call of social uplift and lives were being wasted away in misery and ignorance, in subjection and tyranny, in selfishness and sordid materialism. The speaker said once more that a vast mass of humanity awaited the torch-bearers of reform to help to disentangle the tangled threads of their lives.

In conclusion the President said that she prayed that the usefulness of the Conference might not wave for the want of focussing.

DR. PARANJPYE.

Speaking about woman franchise, Dr. Paranjpye said that many questions were daily arising in the local bodies such as Municipalities and the Legislative Councils and the speaker thought that those questions could be easily solved if the women were given equal rights with the men. It would be a great loss to their national organisation if they kept back the women of their country any more.

MRS. KUMUDINI BOSE.

Mrs. Kumudini Bose said that so long as the women of the country were not given full freedom, the attainment of Swaraj would be a dream only. The country wished to attain political salvation and that would not be done so long as the women of the country would be kept behind.

MR. BIPIN CHANDRA PAL.

Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal in proposing the resolution on the relaxation of the caste restrictions said that they had not completely driven out those ideas of caste restriction from the country. There was a talk about raising the status of the depressed classes. How could that be done if those backward ideas were still predominating in the country? Hindu society was doomed if those backward ideas were not completely driven out of the country.

MR. CHINTAMANI

Mr. C. Y. Chintamani in speaking about female education said that the country was still in darkness because the men so long kept their women in darkness. The men who were responsible for the improvement in India should now wake up with a firm determination to educate their womenfolks. Without female education they would not expect to do any good to the country. Before they started social reorganisation work they should pay immediate attention to female education.

MRS. M. DUTTA.

Mrs. M. Dutta said that Swaraj would not be attained only with the efforts of men. Both men and women should stand shoulder to shoulder and struggle hard for the attainment of Swaraj as both were responsible for the prosperity of the country.

MRS. KAMINI ROY.

Mrs. Kamini Roy in speaking about the evil of dowry said that if anybody thought over the present dowry system it was nothing but the sale of young men in the marriage market. She appealed to the younger generation to shun that evil practice and thus save the distressed parents and their daughters.

MISS LINA ROY.

Miss Lina Roy in speaking about the present system of purdah said that it was due to Mahatma Gandhi that the women of the country could realise that men and women stood on common ground and both of them were responsible for the prosperity of the country.

Continuing she said that so long as the Indian women could not break their purdah, political freedom could not be attained. They, both men and women, should stand shoulder to shoulder as true citizens and good daughters of the country and struggle hard to attain salvation.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously:—

This Conference notes with satisfaction the growing interest of the people in female education and urges upon all Social Reform Associations and workers to make greater efforts to accelerate its progress both on general and vocational lines.

This Conference, while recording with satisfaction the rise in the age of marriage, emphaises the need for further raising the age both for boys and girls in view of physical degeneration and other evils resulting from early marriage.

This Conference is strongly of opinion that the system of purdah is prejudicial to the physical and moral development of women and ought to be abolished.

This Conference condemns the practice of charging dowries at marriage as well as the practice of making extravagant expenditure at social functions as involving a heavy drain on the purse and being calculated to lower the moral tone of the people.

This Conference views with satisfaction that opposition to the remarriage of widows is growing less and less, and urges that renewed efforts should be made to ameliorate the condition of widows and remove restrictions on their remarriage.

This Conference urges that the baneful restrictions of caste should be relaxed so as to promote the growth of nationality and the upbuilding of society on the foundations of justice and equality.

This Conference records its firm conviction that the evil custom of regarding some castes as untouchable is unjust, degrading and humiliating and should be done away with. The conference urges that measures should be instituted for improving the condition of the neglected classes of the society.

This Conference calls upon the people to admit to society women and girls who have been innocent victims of crime and thereby save them from a life of perpetual misery and shame. In the opinion of the Conference, this measure of reform will help in effectively checking the crimes of kidnapping and abduction of girls which are rampant in the country.

This Conference urges the necessity of giving women political franchise entitling them to become members of Legislative bodies and Municipal and other local Corporations so as to enable women to take their proper share as citizens in the national affairs of the country.

This Conference is of opinion that the educational institutions should take up the cause of temperance and urges for the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks and intoxicating drugs except for medical purposes.

This Conference urges upon the Government to exercise a strong supervision by a special agency over Theatres and Cinemas with the object of safeguarding the moral character of the people in the country.

This Conference views with alarm the growth of the perinicious habit of gambling at races, which is bringing about discontent and distress in families and appeals to the people to make earnest efforts for its discontinuance.

This Conference urges the establishment of rescue-homes and welcomes the enactment of legislation for the protection of children in some provinces and calls upon the other provinces to pass legislation on similar lines.

This Conference strongly appeals to the people to make vigorous efforts for securing the better administration of religious trusts and endowments in the country and in this connection it lends its support to the general principles of Mr. D. P. Khaitan's Bill introduced in the Bengal Legislative Council.

This Conference calls upon the people to ceaselessly strive for the maintenance of cordial relations between Hindus and Mahomedans by cultivating a spirit of mutual trust and forbearance and by removing all hindrances to the growth of amity and fellow-citizenship in the country.

THE NATIONAL LIBERAL FEDERATION.

The following are extracts from the presidential address delivered by Sir M. V. Joshi at the National Liberal Federation of India which met at Calcutta on Monday the 28th December:

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM.

The one theme of paramount importance to our and other political parties in the country is the possibility of the realization in the near future of responsible government and dominion status for India or as near an approach to it as possible. All of us have set our heart on the common goal and the existence of different political parties is based only on differences as to the methods of attaining the ideal. Expectant India awaited with extraordinary interest the result of the Viceroy's conference with the Secretary of State. This was the first time a Viceroy could, under statutory provisions, leave and did leave for England during the tenure of his office and the extraordinary step evoked a deal of curiosity and much speculation about its outcome.

LORD BIRKENHEAD'S SPEECH.

The Secretary of State spoke at last and so did the Viceroy, and weighty pronouncements were made by them. The speech strikes me as a curious blend of light and darkness, of half truths and fond misconceptions, of rays of hope and a dismal trail of disappointment. It lays extraordinary emphasis on the preamble of the Government of India Act and is obviously saturated with a mentality adverse to any acceleration of the pace of reform and largely influenced by the recalcitrancy, real or supposed, of the political party now dominant in this country in not co-operating with the Government in working the quantum of reforms effected by the Government of India Act. Strangely enough, it takes absolutely no notice of the reasons which led to this obstreperous conduct of the Swaraj party. The Swarajist mentality had for its foundation an almost complete mistrust of British policy and purpose caused by broken pledges and deferred hopes,—distrust which, I may say, has permeated not only the intelligentsia but the non-vocal strata of society. It was born of deep disappointment and desperation which found expression in non-co-operation and reached its adolescence in the attempt to create a constitutional deadlock by open though frantic obstruction in the Legislature. It was natural for people to expect that the highest functionary dealing with the Indian affairs expressing solemn views on such a momentous issue, would be able to deal with the reasons which gave birth to the Swarajist mentality and would, if possible, show what scant justification there was for its existence. Lord Birkenhead might have argued to himself that it could not be out of mere cussedness that men like Mahatma Gandhi, Messrs. Das and Nehru opposed the Act and took up an attitude of hostility. A heavy burden lay upon his lordship not only to show that they could, and should wisely, have taken a different attitude, but that the position taken by them was wholly unjustifiable. His lordship told us that no decision had been reached and none could be reached without expressions of opinion by the Government of India and the Indian Legislature. But when he said this, a decision of paramount importance seems to have already been reached, viz., that the Minority Report of the Muddiman Committee which recommended a wider inquiry to propose a radical alteration of the present constitution, could not be accepted by the Government at this stage.

His lordship has authoritatively declared his view that the ten years' limit for the setting up of the statutory commission is not decisive against an earlier reconsideration for further advance and said that one of two conditions was essential to such a reconsideration—loyal and cheerful co-operation by all political parties in India in working the present system or the disclosure of grave and glaring defects in it. He has discussed the former condition but said nothing about the latter, which is much the more important—unless indeed his opinion is implicit in the conclusion reached by him that diarchy has neither failed nor succeeded. His lordship speaks of the high trusteeship of India as if it were a perpetual tutelage though he no longer relies on the doctrine of holding the gorgeous East in fee, and calls upon India to associate with England in a fruitful and harmonious partnership. He asserts that India is not a nation and doubts if she ever will be, notwithstanding the fact that India is a recognized unit in the League of Nations and the Imperial Conference and her assent would be required if she with the Dominions is to agree to the Locarno Pact. He wrongly imagines that India is asking for an immediate repudiation of Britain's responsibilities in India.

I have said that Lord Birkenhead has laid undue emphasis on the preamble of the Act of 1919. His lordship is an eminent lawyer and so is the Viceroy. They know that a preamble can only be a recital of the circumstances of the occasion, the reasons, the motives for enactment. But Lord Birkenhead insists that the preamble is the all-important part of the Government of India Act and the Act itself is fluid and experimental. The feeling in India is that the declaration of policy in 1917 was the most important factor and was merely embodied in the preamble. Indians have a right to expect that the policy so announced would endure and the Act could only be changed in order to make a further advance in the direction of responsible government. Such a statement coming from such an authoritative quarter is liable to misconstruction and would hardly work towards 'expelling and exorcising the demon of suspicion.'

The Liberal party was never wholly satisfied with its provision. In the provinces much less than it urged has been conceded while, contrary to its emphatic and repeated demand, no responsibility whatever was introduced in the central government. That the attitude of our party was not one of unqualified support, any one can see who would read the reports of our proceedings during the last seven years and the evidence of our representatives before the Joint Select Committee. The principle of diarchy was novel and apprehensions were expressed as to how it would work. We feared that it would be an imperfect instrument for the main purpose of training the Indian people for full responsible government. It may be mentioned that official opinion was even more opposed to it. The British officials with faith in their own superior efficiency and doubtful of Indian capacity, were also faced with loss of power and initiative, and stubbornly resisted the introduction of diarchy.

The National Demand.

The motion carried by the Legislative Assembly last September may be said to meet all reasonable objections. It was an agreed statement of claim made with the consent of the Liberals, Swarajists and Independents. It requires the Government of India to be responsible to the Indian Legislature in all branches of administration except Military and Foreign and Political.

Mr. Nehru's amendment implies that the constitution will be framed by all interests concerned in India and that the eventual sanction of Parliament to necessary legislation for legalizing the constitution framed will be taken. The finality of the powers of Parliament is thus acknowledged. The framing of the constitution by the parties concerned is exactly what has been several times done under British suzerainty and is by no means a novel procedure. The question is not about existing difficulties but about the will of the British nation to let Indians govern themselves.

Plea for Unity.

Whatever a Britisher may think, the Liberals have no reasons to reckon themselves enemies of the parties that do not agree with them in the methods adopted to secure the goal. However unfortunate and deplorable their methods might happen to be, the Liberals realize that all are working for common objective. Circumstances which drive persons like Mahatma Gandhi and Messrs. Das and Nehru into a mentality that spurns co-operation and advises obstruction are certainly unfortunate and deplorable and the Government responsible for them must reconsider its attitude. From our national point of view, the union of all political parties is extremely desirable at this juncture. It is quite conceivable that the Liberals, Independents, Conventionalists and Responsive Co-operators would not find it difficult to have a common platform and the efforts that are being made in this direction will, I hope

realpatidar.com

prove fruitful. The greatest difficulty in achieving union is perhaps the desire of each party to have its own policy and methods adopted by the rest. A great deal of the energy that is now wasted in mutual recrimination and individual abuse is urgently required for the more beneficent purposes of common effort and achievement. This must be realized by all, and it should not be impossible for all parties to unite by means of give and take. Obstruction is certainly not a method that has appealed to all in India. The proceedings of provincial Councils outside Bengal and the Central Provinces have failed to prove the universality of the feeling. Those who stood sponsors for the method had per force to go back in it, and have in practice made as near an approach as possible to responsive co-operation which is really a Liberal doctrine though they may not like to own the fact. Obstructionists in the Bombay Council, hopeless of being effective, had to be a dumb show in the Council. Everywhere there is impatience of results. Civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes are the avowed sanctions behind continuous obstruction. But they are impossible on account of the unpreparedness of the masses to make the sanctions operative. If the Congress at the present stage will declare that civil disobedience and the threat of non-payment of taxes are no part of its policy, the way for all parties joining on the Congress platform will be easier. The Congress can then concentrate its attention on intensive political propaganda with a resulting pressure on Government. If this is impossible for any reason a combination of constitutionalists against those who are for direct action ought to be quite within the bounds of practical politics.

Party Organisation.

In my opinion the Liberal party ought to be better organised for work. We have now a chance to go to the electorates such as we seldom had during the last five years, and party coherence and party discipline must be strictly enforced. We have to popularise the gospel of constitutionalism as against the creed of non-co-operation or obstruction. Younger men in larger numbers are required in the party and the freshness and vitality of youth must be combined with experience and long vision of old age.

THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY SOCIAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Satya Shodhak Conference: The All-India Satya Shodhak Conference was held on the 28th December at Amraoti under the presidentship of Mr K. G. Bagde. Vedshastra Sampanna Anand Swami, Chairman of the Reception Committee, welcomed the delegates. He dealt with the object of the movement which was regeneration of Hindu society and extermination of distinctions based on birth and wanted the sphere of its activity widened. Mr. Bagde in his presidential address emphasised the religious aspect of the movement and believed such movements to be the only means capable of bringing about the social changes most necessary to fit the country for democracy.

All-India Non-Brahmin Anti-Untouchability Conference: The ninth session of the All-India Non-Brahmin Anti-untouchability Conference was held at Amraoti on the 29th December, under the presidentship of the Hon'ble Mr. Jadhav, Minister to the Government of Bombay. About two hundred untouchables were present besides others. The Hon'ble Mr. Jadhav in his presidential address remarked that untouchability was a great stigma on the Hindu religion which must be removed at the earliest possible date. Referring to Lala Lajpat Rai's presidential address at the Bombay Hindu Sabha the Hon'ble Jadhav said that apart from other objects with which Hindu Sabhas are being formed there is unanimity between all sections as regards the removal of untouchability. Amidst most disorderly scenes and acute communal tension the Conference adopted a resolution, by a majority of few votes, throwing open private and public wells and temples for the members of the depressed classes and untouchables. The Conference also adopted a resolution regarding the granting of Government posts to the members of the depressed classes.

All-India Libraries' Conference: The All-India Libraries' Conference, over which Mr. N. C. Kelkar presided, was held on the 29th Dec. Rai Bahadur B. Vikramajit Singh, as Chairman of the Reception Committee, welcomed the President and delegates. Mr. Kelkar, in his informing address, dwelt on the importance of the multiplication of libraries all over the country, and the part that they were likely to play in the regeneration of the country. The growth of the library movement, he admitted, was recent, but all the same, it was making satisfactory headway. He dwelt on the necessity of making a co-ordinated effort in this direction, just as it was being done in the same form in the Maharashtra and Andhradesa. Two resolutions, one on the establishment of libraries and reading rooms all over the country, and the other, for the creation of a central organisation for the purpose were duly passed.

All-India Local Bodies' Conference: A meeting of the All-India Local Bodies' Conference was held on Dec. 27th and 28th at Cawnpore in the Congress camp under the presidentship of Mr. B. N. Sasmal, President, District Board, Midnapore. Many provinces were represented officially and unofficially. Among the resolutions passed was one appointing a Committee (1) to consider the provincial Self-Government Acts and to furnish information as regards the improvements desirable and practicable, with special reference to primary education; (2) to see how far the underlying principles can be made uniform for the whole of India and (3) to find means for publicity and propaganda.

Indian Students in America: The Hindustan Association of America, whose headquarters are now in New York, has been helping in the landing of the incoming students from India in any port in the U. S. A. But before it can do anything the students must have satisfied all conditions as stated below. Advance notice as to name of the incoming student, date of arrival, name of ship and class of cabin should be sent to the office at 500, Riverside Drive, New York, U.S.A. Cable address: Hindustan, Inhouse, New York.

Untouchability Work in Kerala: On the representation of Mr. T. K. Madhavan, Editor of Desabhimani, Lala Lajpat Rai has sanctioned Rs. 10,000 out of the Hindu Sabha and other funds at his disposal for conducting untouchability work in Kerala.

Nadars' Rights of Procession: The Tuticorin correspondent of the Hindu, Madras, wrote to that paper sometime back: The caste-Hindus of a certain village near Koilpatti filed a suit in the District Munsiff's Court of that place praying for an injunction restraining the Nadars of the said village from passing in procession through certain specified roads. Along with the plaint they also filed a petition for a temporary injunction. The learned District Munsiff held a summary enquiry and came to the conclusion that the roads in question were public roads, and that the Nadars had every right and privilege to pass through them and accordingly dismissed the petition. Against this order an appeal was filed in the Sub-Court here in which judgment was recently delivered confirming the Lower Court's order and refusing the injunction prayed for as the roads mentioned were admittedly public.

Budh Gaya Temple: We recently noticed in these columns the Buddhist Mission headed by Dr. Heivaritarne which arrived here from Ceylon to discuss with the Hindu Mahasabha the question of the control of the Budh Gaya Temple. The Committee appointed as a result by the Congress and Hindu Mahasabha, consisting of Mr. Rajendra Prasad, Mr. Brij Kishore, Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, Swami Jayanda and others, regarding the settlement of the Budh Gaya controversy, have signed their report. They have found that the temple has all along been a Buddhist shrine, but the Hindus are also interested in it as a sacred place; and the position of the Mahant of Budh Gaya is that of a Sabait, i. e., Serviter Trustee. They recommend that the control of worship should be vested in a committee composed of five Hindus and five Buddhists, and the Hindu Minister in Bihar and Orissa Government for the time being. They recommend that a bill should be introduced in the local Legislature to declare the rights of the Buddhists and to regulate the control of worship both to the convenience of the Buddhists and Hindus.

Rural Development in U. P.: The U. P. Legislative Council has taken up the problem of rural development in right earnest by passing at its recent meeting a resolution recommending the Government to allot the sum of Rs. 56 lakhs remitted by the Central Government for rural development and to form a development fund for this purpose to which this sum and future remissions may be transferred. This fund is to be spent by the Hon. Ministers in accordance with the advice of the Development Board to be constituted with a non-official majority.

Registration of Marriages and Divorces in Baroda: We understand from the United India and Indian States that an Act has been published in the "Baroda Government Gazette" amending the Act for the Registration of Marriages and Divorces. It provides that the officer registering marriages and divorces should send to the Vahiwatdar of the Taluka a true copy of the entries for every month and the Vahiwatdars should submit an annual statement to the Suba. The Suba should afterwards send a similar statement for the whole Prant to the Sarsuba. The officer registering should immediately bring to the notice of the Judge having jurisdiction those marriages which contravene the provisions of the Infant Marriages Prevention Act and the Judge should consider that a complaint has been submitted to him under that Act and should take the necessary steps.

The Y. W. C. A. Activities: The Publicity Secretary writes:—Indian girls are just beginning to go into business. The Y. W. C. A. was recently made aware of the fact when an Indian girl asked the Y. W. C. A. Secretariat in Madras to start a small club for business girls like herself. Inquiries showed that there were sufficient numbers to start a small club in Madras and the Association is taking steps to form one. In connection with the North Calcutta Union Hostel for Students, opened a few months ago, a small Y W C. A. Club has been formed. The members are mostly residents from outside. The club meets once a week and its activities include a Bible study circle, debates, discussions and social meetings. "The Adventure for World Brotherhood" is the title of a Study Circle booklet which the Y. W. C A. (5, Russel Street, Calcutta) are publishing next week. The book deals largely with the work of the League of Nations.

College Cruise Around the World: Four hundred and fifty American College students are on a eight-months' voyage around the world. The College Cruise Around the World is expected to provide an opportunity for college students to secure the educational advantages of extensive, directed travel and at the same time to complete a year of college work. A passenger line has been specially equipped for this purpose with class-rooms, gymnasium, library etc., and a teaching staff of fifty professors and instructors. Thirty-five countries and fifty important cities will be visited under the auspices of the Government and the educational leaders of each country. They are due to arrive in Bombay on January 24th 1927.

NOTES

The South African Indian Position : We shall give next week a full report of the proceedings of the great public meeting of the citizens of Bombay held yesterday evening under the distinguished presidentship of His Highness the Aga Khan. Among the speakers to the several resolutions were leaders of all political parties and communities. The presence of the South African Indian deputation, led by Dr. Abdur Rahman, is most valuable at this juncture and we cannot but repeat our regret that the Government of India should have courted a rebuff by sending their Committee of Enquiry to South Africa instead of waiting to hear what the Abdur Rahman deputation had to say about the situation in that country. A message from South Africa says that the Union Government have not recognised the Government of India's Committee and that it has had to get all its information from subordinate officials. This studied affront to the Government of India is of a piece with the anti-Indian policy of the Union Government. Mr. C F. Andrews who was deputed by the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association to South Africa, is doing splendid work in rousing the better mind of the Whites to the injustice of the measures proposed or projected by the Union Government against Indians domiciled in that country.

The Baroda Jubilee Celebrations : In commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the assumption of the Government of the State by His Highness the Maharaja Gaekwar, enthusiastic celebrations were held all over the State. His Highness made a touching impromptu speech at the Durbar where numerous addresses were presented to him, expressive of his devotion to the interests of his people. There were great expectations that His Highness would announce a measure of constitutional reform, but these were not realised. We cannot help thinking that a great opportunity of signalising the happy event of the Jubilee by a larger association of the people with the Government, has been missed. The remission of a few lakhs of rupees, the release of some prisoners, and the extension of telephone facilities, are hardly measures which strike the imagination. In passing, we must express our regret that the obsolete custom of nautch-girls performing at Durbars, was allowed to be observed in the Maharaja Gaekwar's Durbar.

Wanted a Single Standard of Morality : We have often pointed out in these columns that the Solicitation Law, wherever it exists, is more rigorous in its operation against the unfortunate women who are described as "common prostitutes", as it leaves the male partner in guilt practically untouched simply because the term "prostitute" is not applied to man. The "prostitute" is thus made the scapegoat for everybody's sins. The one outstanding merit of the Bombay Prostitution Act is that it has made no legal distinction between the man and the woman in the matter of punishment for solicitation. A recent case in Bengal noticed in the current number of the Modern Review shows how unjustly the law, as it exists in Bengal, affects only one party in the commission of the offence. Our contemporary calls public attention to a case in which four unfortunate and very young women recently charged with soliciting, were hauled up in a Bengal court. Neither the names nor the addresses of the men had been taken by the police and their whereabouts were unknown. The Magistrate without calling any evidence fined each girl Rs. 8. There is much truth in the comments of the Modern Review when it says that "injustice of this sort is being done everyday, and not only in India. Never until there are equal laws for men and women will conditions in the streets of great cities be decent. Soliciting in the streets is, and must be made so legally, an offence for both men and women; the accused should always be in Court to uphold his or her charge; police evidence is not sufficient in such cases. What is wrong conduct in a woman is also wrong conduct in a man, and we demand an equal moral standard as the ideal for all children of Mother India." Even where there are equal laws for men and women as in the case of the Bombay Act, the law operates more severely against the women. The modification of the law, if it is one-sided, as it appears is the case in Bengal, is urgently called for. Much can be done by the Magistrates if they insist upon the production of the male offenders by the police who should be made to appreciate properly the underlying principle of the law.

The All-India Trade Union Congress : Of all the various conferences of manual workers held in Madras during what was called the "Labour Week" which commenced on the 5th instant, the most important was the sixth session of the All-India Trade Union Congress held on the 9th instant under the presidentship of Mr. V. V. Giri, Bar-at-Law, the President of the B. N. Railway Union. That, unlike the Bombay Provincial Trade Union Conference to which we referred last week, Mr. Giri recognises the importance of social work among the labourers, is clear from his exhortation regarding the duties and responsibilities of Labour Associations,

"It is the duty of Labour Associations", said Mr Giri, "not only to look after the economic welfare of its members, but also to the improvement of their social and moral conditions. It is a matter of great pity that the mill-hands and other manual labourers are addicted to drink, gambling and other vices; habits such as these not only land the worker and his family into interminable debts but would be a very bad example to their offsprings." Mr. Giri referred to the Purity Mission started in Bombay by the Central Labour Board and eulogised the services of Mr. Jhabwala for the work of social and moral uplift he is doing among the working classes in Bombay. Mr. Giri emphasised the necessity of the labourers having the right sort of political education and suggested the formation of a Labour party within the Trade Union Congress. That a subject country like India cannot eschew politics from any sphere of national activities is a fact which bears no contradiction, as the moral and material welfare of the people of whom the labouring classes form a very important section is so inextricably bound up with the system of administration.

The Skeen Committee: The Skeen Committee has begun its deliberations after the Christmas recess and interesting evidence continues to be given before it. The evidences range from the most reactionary to the most revolutionary. One witness suggested that the regiments should be divided according to class and community, while another, an officer of the Gwalior State Army, urged that the class and caste restrictions now observed in recruitment to the army should be abolished and that the service should be thrown open to all alike. He added that he would not even wait for social unity in the country before introducing it in the army. Thus, according to the former, a Hindu should be in charge of a Hindu regiment, a Mahomedan in charge of a Mahomedan regiment, a Madrasi in charge of a Madrasi regiment and so on. Already, the artificial distinction made between martial and non-martial classes has retarded non-communal recruitment and, if regiments are organised on communal lines as suggested, the unhappy rivalry and jealousy between some communities which are on the increase at the moment; will only be extended to the field of military defence also. The other witness was equally radical in his suggestion that orthodox people should not join the army. If a man promises to be a good soldier, his orthodoxy should not stand in his way of joining the army. We have no doubt that, given proper education, all distinctions based upon caste, community and religion will vanish for ever.

Nambudiris and Social Reform: We had occasion recently to point out that social reform is permeating even such an intensely orthodox community as the Nambudiris of Malabar, and that the younger members of the community are taking a prominent part in it. Our readers need not be told of the peculiar marriage system in vogue among the Nambudiris by which only the eldest member of the family is allowed to marry, the junior members having recourse to what is known as Sambandham, a sort of customary alliance with women of the Nair caste. The Yuvajana Sangam that recently met, at which many Nambudiri youths were present, urged radical reforms in these directions. The President, among other things, laid stress upon the necessity of educating girls so as to make them good wives and mothers. It is noteworthy that, among the resolutions passed, was one supporting the claim of the untouchables for freedom of passage along public roads. Whatever may be the attitude of the elderly die-hards of the community towards this question—our Travancore Letter published elsewhere will show that many among them are slowly coming to realise the injustice of the ban on the untouchables—it is a matter for gratification that at least the younger members hold liberal views on the subject. We are glad to note that the Nambudiri Conference also held at Chowarah adopted a resolution asking the Hindus of Kerala to grant to all Hindus the right of passage to which a convert from Hinduism to any other religion is entitled.

Ezhava-Aryas and Agraharam Entry: The sensational case in which one Mr. P. C. Sankaran, an Ezhava convert to Arya Samaj, who stood charged under Sec. 295 I. P. C. before the Sty. Sub-Magistrate, Palghat, with defiling a place of worship and insulting the Brahmins of Kalpathi Agraharam (Palghat) in that he, in contravention of old established custom, passed within the polluting distance of a certain temple, has ended in his acquittal. It definitely establishes that the Ezhavas on becoming converts to Arya Samaj drop their 'theendal' and thus cease to be polluting castes. The Magistrate, in the course of his learned judgment, observed that the long standing custom proved by the Prosecution applies at best only to Ezhavas and other 'theendal' castes and that no such custom appears to have been proved to apply to Ezhava converts to Arya Samaj. There is no reason, however, to feel jubilant over the decision, for it only solves the problem of Ezhava converts to Arya Samaj and not that of unapproachability itself.

Primary Education in Belgaum: The Belgaum District Local Board has set a commendable example to other local bodies in this Presidency in the matter of primary education by simultaneously opening 150 primary schools in the District. It is expected that not a single village with a population of 500 or above will be left without a school. Sanction has also been obtained from Government for a scheme of opening agricultural classes for giving vocational training to the students in the primary schools. Agriculture is the mainstay of India and, as the majority of primary school-goers are likely to resort only to agricultural pursuits, the necessity for equipping them with such vocational training as to make of them successful agriculturists, cannot be over-emphasised. A large measure of credit for these innovations is due to Mr. Chikodi, the energetic President of the District Board.

Reduction of Railway Fares: We believe it was the E. I. Ry. that first announced a reduction in passenger fares and we congratulate the G. I. P. on its recent decision to reduce the railway fares from April next. While a flat reduced rate is fixed for first and second classes, the fares for third class passengers are so designed as to benefit the long-distance traveller. We have no doubt that these reductions will be followed by an increased traffic which the railway anticipates. The other railways will also do well to follow this example. We would also urge upon the railway authorities the necessity for increasing the amenities and comforts of the third class passengers which are often scrupulously neglected.

Our Overseas Supplement: In view of unexpected developments in the South African situation, we have decided to hold over till next week the Overseas Supplement generally issued along with the third number of the month.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, JANUARY 16, 1926.

THE MORAL FOUNDATIONS OF NATIONAL GREATNESS.*

In this small and well-written book of about 130 pages, Mr. Timur has succeeded in presenting to us the moral foundations on which true national greatness should rest and with special reference to India. As he himself admits in the Preface, he does not pretend to have discovered any new ideas, but it must be said to his credit that he has done his best to convey to the average reader ideas which, though they may seem to be very commonplace, do not lose their freshness owing to the bracing style in which they are written. In the Introduction the author points out that national greatness is not due to the natural and geographical advantages of a country as it is sometimes claimed, but to the character of the individuals composing the nation, the natural resources acting only as accessories. There are two elements in the character of an individual, viz., the intellect and the will. The one great defect in modern systems of education is that too much attention is paid to the intellect and the mere accumulation of knowledge and too little to the moral qualities which are of greater importance for success in practical life; and Mr. Timur's plea for the cultivation of these qualities is, therefore, most opportune. First among these qualities he places work. It is hardly necessary to point out that, without industry and work, no nation can become prosperous. As the author says, the habit of regarding brainworkers and manual workers as two antagonistic sections of the population has proved a fatal mistake, and this is especially the case in India where the higher castes have relegated manual labour to the lower. It must, however, be acknowledged that a remarkable change for the better has occurred in recent years in the mentality of these classes. Work for work's sake, unmindful of the considerations of money—this is the ideal which the author places before his readers. As he says, the man who works for money alone and takes no interest in the work itself can never do it well. But one finds it difficult to accept his rather sweeping assertion that men in India love money more than Art or Science and that the Mammon worship of Europe is nothing as compared with the Mammon worship of India. As modern societies, however, are concerned not with individuals, but with groups of individuals, the author next places before us the ideal of co-operation, the habit of working together towards the same end. It is needless to point out here that it is this quality which distinguishes modern from ancient societies and that it dominates almost every detail of our every-day life. Here also the author is rather unfair when he says that the inclination to obey and the tact required for ruling are both absent from our people in a remarkable degree, and that there is a striking contrast between the people of the West, whose whole national life is such an admirable example of co-operation, and those of the East who find it difficult even to run a small commercial company with success. We cannot help thinking that the author has rather overshot the mark in pointing out some of the deficiencies in the Indian character.

In the next two chapters, the author tries to prove that justice and veracity are the two valuable qualities without which it is impossible to ensure a peaceful atmosphere for co-operation among human beings. He defines justice as the virtue of not interfering with each other's belongings, and veracity as the habit of speaking the truth which aids justice by establishing trust in society. The cultivation of these two qualities, he says, is even more important for national development than the introduction of self-governing institutions, for institutions are worthless without men possessing the requisite moral qualities. The author next discusses the qualities of self-consciousness and courage. Self-consciousness, he defines as the recognition of on's own personality and rights as ends in themselves. He regards men imbued with this quality as the steel frame-work of society without whom society would be all flesh, no bones. The self-conscious man, however, need not necessarily be selfish or self-conceited. What self-consciousness is for an individual to maintain his dignity and individuality, so it is for a nation. As the author very rightly remarks, as long as there is a single weak nation in the world, there is little likelihood of permanent peace. Self-consciousness, however, should be based upon the valuable moral quality of courage without which it degenerates into mere impudence. Courage is not mere strength or even fearlessness or control of fear. It is that quality of facing risks and a stern determination to sacrifice what one loves. A few types of such courage are the sacrifice of one's life or the readiness to suffer bodily pain, the sacrifice of property and facing the disapproval and ridicule of the society in which a man lives and the good opinion of which he loves. In this connection, the author readily concedes that, though the courage of the passive resister is non-aggressive, it is not fundamentally different from active courage, and that it may sometimes demand even greater sacrifice than active fighting. The author then dilates at length upon Perseverance, Thrift and Practical Wisdom, all qualities as important to nations as to individuals, into the details of which we are precluded from entering for want of space. It is but fitting that the author should end with a chapter on Hope which, of all qualities, young India is more in need of at present.

KESHUB CHUNDER SEN, THE PIONEER REFORMER.

(By Prof. S. V. Phadnis).

Keshub Chunder Sen, whose forty-second anniversary was celebrated on the 8th of January, was a great pioneer reformer who was not a little instrumental in the making of Modern India. It is no exaggeration to say that every good seed that is now blossoming may be traced to him. When he passed away forty-one years ago, the great orientalist, Max Muller, wrote: 'India has lost her greatest son.' His greatness can be realized only by a contrast with the state of society in which he was born. He belonged to the second generation of English-educated Hindus in Bengal and in his time strong tendencies of a remarkable social transition had set in. There was hardly any enthusiasm for public life and the social system neither stimulated the intellect to originality nor influenced the heart to profound impulse. The alien missionary, the state official, the youthful writer and enthusiastic reformer, were all united in raising the war-cries of the times. The advancing tide of an aggressive and new civilization, with as much evil as good in it, threatened to carry almost everything before it. Amidst such an environment of pregnant circumstances, Keshub Chunder Sen with an unbounded enthusiasm sprang into public life and carried on a vigorous propaganda and fervent crusade in the cause of the nation's progress and undertook the re-orientation of its springs of life.

His entire being was a protest, a revolt; it was a protest against ignorance, against tyranny, and against blind prejudice. His catholicity, no doubt, embraced all people; every philanthropic work, whether it was education of the young, emancipation of the widows or amelioration of suffering, found in him an ardent and forceful champion. But after a deep study of his lectures, sermons and prayers, the student will be able to perceive that he was more than a philanthropist, more than a learned man or a man of letters, more than an educationist; he was 'an inspired interpreter of life and its beauty, an indicator of human needs and human joy.' And for the office of the religious and social reformer, Keshub had great talents joined to a singular depth of an earnest conviction. Only two years before his death, he thus spoke of himself: 'If I ask thee, O Self, in what creed wast thou baptized? The self answers in the baptism of fire. I am a worshipper of the religion of fire. It may take time to know whether I am a sinner or not but it is easy to know whether I am alive or dead, warm or cold.' He possessed, to a remarkable degree, the rare power of stimulating idealization—as Mahatma Gandhi possesses in our days—, the power to create a vision which has to be included as the most effective agency of social progress. Hence, perhaps, from this point of view, he has idolized those factors and forces, upon which the progress of his age depended and thus the 'Reformer' in Keshub bids fair to become almost a prophet, one of the most powerful agents in the promotion of human well-being. This may serve as a possible explanation of his orations taking the form of rhetorical effusions suitable for moods of prayer and faith. 'Their practical value,' as a biographer of his has put it, 'is in the strengthening of faith and hope, in the deepening of love and enthusiasm.' Swami Vivekanand, himself a gifted orator, is said to have borne testimony to the soul-stirring oratorical and preaching powers of Keshub Chunder Sen, while James Martineau likened him to a second Paul bringing refulgent light from the East to the West.

Keshub may also be said to be eminently fitted for the mission of preaching, inasmuch as he could look with extraordinary insight into the present. He possessed, it is true, no occult powers of foretelling the future, but he had the power of seeing into the present what the future must bring, and perhaps that is the reason why he came to be misunderstood. Only to those who understand the depth of his spiritual nature he can be correctly interpreted. His was a personality impressive and there is no wonder that the effects of his visits to England should be to raise questions that are still awaiting serious consideration:

An Indian teacher in the West! What could he teach but Hindu mythology and Vedic hymns? Had not Europe a higher plane than that? Should the West go backward Eastward instead of onward Westward?

Had Christianity fallen so short of the teachings of the Prophet of Nazareth that it should need a preacher and exponent from the shores of the Ganges?

These were some of those questions. But more than his teaching must be mentioned his influence which was brought to bear upon the barriers of racial and national prejudices which have prevailed in Europe respecting India and the East generally. His work may further be credited with sowing the seeds of the permanent foundation of soul-sympathy between so divergent cultures as the Indian and European, of which the realization is yet to come.

Incessant as his activities were, they were all responsive to the great mission with which he was imbued. He endeavoured to derive strength from the religious culture of Bengal and inspiration from the religious treasures of India, and, as much as in him lay, he also attempted to explain its centrifugal tendencies. The Hindu-Moslem question of to-day would come nearer solution by recognising the essential features of the principal phases of religious development as it is in Keshub's system. His prayer was the same as Maitreyi's. The Buddhist mode of life and its faith in elevating humanity through human effort found a distinct place in his work. He, it was, who made the Brahmo Samaj movement an All-India movement and his greatest contribution perhaps from the point of view of inter-religious fellowship has been his scheme of synthesis and harmony of the principal religious creeds of the world. At any rate, his doctrine of Harmony of Religions must save the political struggle of the Indian nation from the impending perils of communal canker and religious bitterness. Even after a generation which has pulsated with high aspirations, with education widened in its scope and deepened in its influence, with a strong sense of national awakening capable of developments on all sides, it will be found that still both the Government and the people have been tinkering with many a social tragedy. 'If our educated countrymen initiated themselves in the living truths of religion,' Keshub wrote addressing young Bengal, 'patriotism would not be a mere matter of oration and essay, but a reality in practice. Drunkenness and all other fashionable vices would be effectively extirpated from this land. Mutual jealousies and enmity, so fearfully prevalent, would gradually fade away and unity and nationality would be established. Our countrymen, consolidated, would realize all the benefits of united exertions and mutual sympathies and effectually would surmount many of the difficulties in the way of Social Reform'. How prophetic was the vision of Keshub, who, in the words of Sir R. N. Mukerji, 'was an embodiment of that culture in action which was fed and nourished by the noblest traditions of Hinduism and blossomed in the light and true knowledge of the West.'

HINDUISM AND PROSELYTISM.

(By Mr. Kalyan Chandragupta).

The Shuddhi and Sangathan movements recently inaugurated by some leading Hindus have brought to the fore certain problems which are vitally related to the Hindu community. Of these problems the most important are : Should the Hindus make regular and systematic attempts to convert the followers of other faiths to Hinduism ? And, granting that proselytism is henceforth to be a regular feature of Hinduism, how should the current practices of the Hindus be remodelled in the light of the new demand that is now being made on their faith ?

There are persons for whom such problems have no interest at all. Among them may be counted those who declare their readiness to renounce their ancestral faith at any moment if that could win political freedom for their country, and also those who would like to demolish all places of worship and abolish all religious customs in order to put an end to communal quarrels. They attach little value to religion as such. But those who realise the supreme place that religion holds in the life of a people know that it is absolutely impossible to do away with religion altogether and hence they cannot shut their eyes to the immense importance that attaches to problems relating to religion.

Hinduism has hitherto been noted for its attitude of toleration towards other religions. Hinduism has seldom been aggressive. The Hindus are not in the habit of preaching their own religion to the followers of other faiths. On the other hand, they have hitherto seldom taken any organised and effective steps against the inroads of other faiths into Hinduism. They have neither attempted to restrain those of their co-religionists who are eager to embrace other religions nor cared to find a place in their community for apostates who are willing to come back to Hinduism. Such an attitude of tolerance in so far as it is born of a catholicity of temperament is no doubt commendable, but when it becomes only another name for intellectual lethargy or religious indifferentism, it can no longer claim our admiration.

For example, it is a widely known fact that every year thousands of Hindus are being converted to Christianity, and yet up till now the problem of this growing menace to Hinduism has very seldom been dealt with in the right manner or looked at from the true standpoint. The Hindus in general no doubt object to their co-religionists being converted to an alien faith, but if they are asked to give their reasons, it will be seen that most of them have not thought the matter out to the end. It will generally be found that the objection of the Hindus to the conversion of their co-religionists to Christianity is not based on any considered judgment on the superiority of Hinduism as a creed but on their aversion to proselytism as such. The conversion of a person professing a particular faith to another is held to be wrong or unnecessary in as much as all religions are equally true and the ancestral religion of a person is alone suitable for him. It is said, for instance, that men professing different religions worship the same Deity, though the names used by them may vary, and that the different religions are like different paths which lead to the self-same goal. Hence there is no necessity for changing one's religion at all. A man's own religion, whatsoever it may be, is the best for him.

Now, the theory that every religion of the world has some truth in it may ultimately turn out to be true, but it must be based on a searching analysis of the teachings of different religions. It must not be put forward as a convenient plea for shirking every strenuous attempt at a critical and comparative study of different religions and evaluating their worth. It is evident, for example, that a religion which inculcates bloody sacrifices and another which teaches non-injury to sentient beings as the highest virtue cannot both be equally true. A religion which regards a particular historical individual as the one and only saviour of mankind and another which looks upon a different person as the sole mediator between man and God cannot both claim our unconditional acceptance. Theism, atheism and agnosticism cannot be all equally good. Thus, so far as the teachings of different religions conflict with each other, they cannot be accepted as equally satisfactory. To say, again, that every religion is exactly suited to the temperament or capacity of its adherents and hence a man's ancestral religion is the best for him is to ignore the fact that the most absurd superstitions and abominable practices can be and have sometimes been sought to be justified on this ground.

Hence by advancing such arguments we cannot hope to stem the tide of a proselytising religion like Christianity the followers of which are always ready to preach the superiority of their own faith. Neither can we do this by emphasising the fact that most of the Christians do not practise the precepts of their own religion, by pointing out, for example, the huge barbarities perpetrated in the name of the so-called modern European civilization.

It is only when we are ready to prove that the teachings of Hinduism are on the whole more elevating than those of other religions that we are justified in attempting to prevent Hindus from being converted to other faiths. And in so far as we ourselves are convinced of the superior spiritual value of the Hindu religion and culture we are perfectly justified in trying to convert the followers of other religions to Hinduism.

But the all-important question is whether this is in fact the case, whether we ourselves sincerely believe that the religious ideals of Hinduism have supreme worth in connection with the moulding of our lives and that the basic principles of Hinduism are founded on eternal verities. If we really cherish such beliefs, then it is obviously our duty to preach the tenets of Hinduism to every one without any distinction of race and nationality and without any reference to political or other extraneous considerations. For this purpose we must be always ready to show by a critical and comparative study of different religions that the philosophy of life inculcated in the Hindu Shastras is nobler and more profound than those taught by other faiths and that by adopting Hinduism one is elevated to a higher spiritual level.

It is obvious, therefore, that it should never be our sole aim to increase merely the number of Hindus. On the other hand we should never shrink from admitting into the fold of Hinduism anybody who sincerely wants to accept its teachings as the guiding principles of his life and believes that such a step will be conducive to his spiritual progress.

It is no less evident that the forsaking of our old attitude towards proselytism will entail a great many changes in our religious traditions and customs. We should, for example, fight ruthlessly against corrupt and degraded forms of Hinduism and try to distinguish between things which are essential to Hinduism and those that are not. Our ideas about caste should be revolutionised and our society should be re-organised in the light of modern requirements.

OUR TRAVANCORE LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Angle of Vision Changes.

The two public meetings which were held at the instance of a few high-caste Hindus in some of the important centres of orthodox Hinduism ought to be an eye-opener even to the red-hot social reformer who despaired of his work. In the one that was held at Ettumanur, the seat of a well-known and sacred temple dedicated to Siva, the attendance of influential high-caste Hindus was large including some Numbudiri Brahmins who, it is generally said, are the obstructionists as a community to the slightest change in social liberty and customs. The chairman of this meeting was a Nair gentleman of high social status and family respectability. The chief speaker was Mr. T. K. Madhavan, the Ezhava leader. The theme of Mr. Madhavan was conversion of Ezhavas and Pulayas to Christianity and other faiths. He said that, as a result of the age-long oppression of the depressed classes like the Ezhavas, Kuravas, Pulayas, Parayas etc, these people have been induced to embrace other religions on the lure of bettering their material condition. They have seen the large mass conversions taking place at the instance of Christian missionaries. Somehow or other those converted have access to places and institutions closed against them till the moment of their conversion He asked them whether that was a tolerable or desirable state of affairs from the point of view of Hindus. Was it right on the part of the Hindus to deny the depressed classes ordinary rights as human beings, their own kith and kin, men and women who contribute to the agricultural wealth of the land? He asked the Jenmis, land-holders and other Hindus holding large areas of lands to conceive for a moment what their position would be if all their tenants and actual workers in the land—the huge colony of men and women forming their serfs practically—had embraced Christianity and were thus lost to them. Was it not a disgrace and an insult to their sense of self-respect as Hindus that they who have been tilling their soil and producing paddy (their food) and other accessories to sustain life should be driven to the painful necessity of leaving their old fold as a result of oppression and denial of things to which they are entitled as men and women? From an economic and political consideration also the frequent depletion of large numbers of Hindus should be stopped and Mr. Madhavan appealed to the audience to pause for a moment and think of the consequences of their own ill-considered and short-sighted action. He was not prepared, he said, to attribute any evil motives to his high caste-brethren who, like the sheep in a fold, were only following what their forefathers have been doing. But the times have changed and the old ways would not stand more. From the point of view of their own selfishness, the larger interests of Hindu society and the intrinsic merits of their hoary religion, they should not move in the old groove. To the members of the depressed classes he would say that, while recognising the need for the immediate amelioration of their condition, they should realise and admit their grateful allegiance to their Hindu masters and take note of the fact that a state of affairs which has been in existence for centuries could not be changed in a day. They should not try to bring about a revolution and should always proceed without causing serious disturbance. He then asked them to give up drink and observe absolute personal cleanliness which would be the first step towards their personal liberation.

This speech was well received by the caste-Hindus present. An old Numbudiri Brahmin Jenmi present stood up and said that he was prepared to do all he could to ameliorate their condition and also influence the members of his own community towards the immediate removal of their social disabilities. This announcement was received with great applause. The Chairman and other caste-Hindus also agreed to support the Numbudiri speaker.

The meeting ended with the greatest cordiality and harmony among all classes of Hindus.

Another meeting held at Thiruvarppu, near Kottayam, achieved more substantial things. It was attended by Pulayas and the attendance included high-caste Hindus among whom were Nambudiri Brahmins, other Brahmins, Nairs etc. A Nair gentleman presided and resolutions were passed to the effect that they had no objection to the public roads, canals and other highways being thrown open to all classes of Hindus. Some of the supporters were again Numbudiri Brahmins belonging to very respectable families.

These two meetings should be congratulated on the solid achievements gained in behalf of real, practical, earnest social service. It is this way social reform of every kind lies and not in the militant form of agitation, in the spoon-feeding method of social legislation

I have always been of opinion and have frequently given expression to it in these columns that, unless there is social unity and concord among the different classes of Hindus, it is impossible to effect any social reform of a permanent nature. The high-caste Hindus are not as a community, such drudges as to ignore or brush aside the impact of western influence that is so overpowering in its liberalising tendency. Possessing as they do a fairly high percentage of literacy, they could be brought down from their high estate by reason and argument in the same manner as the Nair community has come round. The change of attitude on the part of even a single Numbudiri Brahmin, of his own accord and free will, is specially significant, and I am sure that it will achieve considerably more in future, without any extra pressure from outside. Such a mentality has to be well reckoned.

BIRTH CONTROL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The public must be aware that Prof. Karve, the advocate of Birth-control, has issued a pamphlet giving his address and the contraceptives to be had there for both the sexes to control birth and to prevent venereal diseases. The object of this propaganda, as given out, is to improve the economic condition of India; but such kind of things, in my opinion, cannot but have evil effects. After so much controversy on this subject, it is not understood why Birth-control by self-control could not be the approved method of a land where the most rigid cult had greatest followers, where hovel and the palace were alike sanctuary, and where every function of life was a sacrament. India, the land of Buddha, of Ramkrishna Paramahamsa, the land where there are homes where widows still minister as divine deities of self-control and self-sacrifice, cannot view the artificial methods of Birth-control without a sense of shame and disgust. Is not the secret-key of India's vitality and power, spirituality and honour, home and society, self-control? Whether the masses are capable to attain this high standard or not, is no reason to abandon it. The elevation of a man or a woman is not solely dependent on individual endeavour. It is interdependent on the high standard of life as much as on the general atmosphere that pervades. A high standard of life, a faith in the infinite possibility of man's innate powers, these fundamentals are to be developed to perfection.

Marriage has a providential plan to accomplish and self-control is its greatest factor. This is the agency to chastise and elevate humanity.

Self-contol is itself a great education for the parents and the example of such parents and the atmosphere of such a home alone can be the fostering nursery of true manhood. Purity of life and high character are the underlying principles of all prosperity and happiness of home as well as that of a nation. The solution of the problem of India's poverty lies entirely on humanitarian and not bestial lines.

Indulgence in sordid ways, where a vital moral factor is concerned, is to seriously endanger all social, moral and religious reform and much more the prosperity and happiness of home and nation. The Gita says: "The passions unless kept under strong control will dash you against the wall as does the horse whose rein is relaxed."

To manipulate so serious a problem with a light heart is to bring about various kinds of evils to society which none of these propagandists will be ever able to remedy. I would request the Bombay public not to be passive over such a dangerous doctrine. Thoughtful men and sound physicians should protest against the propaganda of modern birth-controllers, which is doing great harm in the West whence it is imported.

3, Club Road, Byculla, Bombay. Yours etc., (Mrs.) Kumudini Ganti.

THE ALL-INDIA MUSLIM LEAGUE.

The following is the Associated Press summary of the presidential address delivered by Sir Abdur Rahim at the 17th session of the All-India Muslim League held at Aligarh on the 30th December :—

Sir Abdur Rahim in his presidential address dwelt upon problems bearing on the present political situation in the country. He said that India's best future lay in giving all the different communities that lived or worked here the fullest genius. It was not true that Muslims would not like to see a Self-Governing India; provided the Government of the country was made as much responsible to Muslims as to Hindus there was no reason why Muslims should oppose the grant of immediate Self-Government.

Hindu-Moslem Problem.

The solution of the Hindu-Moslem problem which they had in view was to bring about a state of things in which the conditions of the life of the entire population would be so improved economically and intellectually and political power so distributed in the general population that the domination by a class of monopolists and intelligents, whether Hindu or Muslim, would have disappeared, and with that all strife between the different communities. They had to be satisfied at present with much less than the full ideal of Responsible Government for reasons:

(1) That it was not practicable for sometime yet to come to extend the franchise to every adult man and woman to rely upon the general body of voters to understand their responsibilities so as to make an intelligent use of their vote,

(2) That for the present it would be impossible to institute a common general electorate for all classes and communities without jeopardising the interests of large and important minorities and thus giving rise to serious trouble in the land. Besides other possible safe-guards for the protection of minority interests generally the two communities, Hindu and Moslem, should be represented in Legislatures in proportion to their respective populations and neither community should have less than 33 per cent. of seats in India and the Provincial Legislatures,

(3) That not merely the goodwill but the co-operation of Englishmen in Government, administration and the Legislatures of the country was necessary until the people were sufficiently united among themselves and politically advanced and strong enough to resist outside aggression.

Subject to these limitations the present constitution should be so modified as to remove all difficulties in the way of the representatives of the people securing unhampered the progress of the country politically and economically.

The Mosul Award.

Regarding the happenings in the Muslim world outside India he said that the most disquieting news was the award of the League of Nations on the Mosul question. It would surely be wiser in England's own interests to help Iraq to find its proper place in the confederacy of Muslim States rather than extend the mandate and make her position in the Near and Middle East still more complicated.

He asked them not to lose time in forming a solid Muslim party in the Indian as well as the local Legislatures which he considered most essential and the foremost need of the situation. His concluding words were: "It is neither by the English alone nor by the Hindus or the Mussalmans acting singly but by the earnest and united efforts of all the 300 millions of India's population she can be led to a higher destiny."

SUGGESTIONS FOR MUSLIM IMPROVEMENT.

Sir Abdur Rahim referred to the position of Indian Muslims and made some practical suggestions for advancing their moral and material progress. He strongly defended the attitude of Muslims towards their co-religionists and criticised a section of Hindu politicians whose mischievous activities, according to him, were a serious challenge to Islam and a grave menace to the political status of Muslims.

He supported the proposal for communal electorates not only for Muslims but also for Englishmen and advocated the formation of a solid Muslim party in the Legislatures as the essential and foremost need of the situation and without which he feared the political ruin of the community would be brought about by their own men. He suggested the appointment of a strong committee fully representative of the different communities and interests to investigate the entire position in regard to the question of making Provincial Governments entirely responsible to the Legislature and ascertain the opinion and desires of people on as large a scale as possible on different concrete political and administrative problems that might arise and then recommend a constitution which would meet the requirements of the situation. He dwelt on the political importance of the Muslim League and deplored the attacks on the Muslim community in the form of Suddhi, Sangathan and Hindu Mahasabha movements and activities led by politicians like Lala Lajpat Rai and Swami Shradhananda. Some of the Hindu leaders had spoken publicly of driving out Muslims from India as the Spaniards expelled the Moors from Spain. Muslims would be a big mouthful for their Hindu friends to swallow.

Thanks to the artificial condition under which they lived they had to admit that Hindus were in a position of great advantage and even the English had learnt to dread their venomous propaganda. Hindus were equally adept in the art of belittling in every way possible the best Muslims in public positions excepting only those who had subscribed to the Hindu political creed. They had in fact by their provocative and aggressive conduct made it clearer than ever to Muslims that the latter could not entrust their fate to Hindus and must adopt every possible measure of self-defence. Muslims must tell these politicians frankly and explicitly that their claim that India belonged solely to Hindus was preposterous and unfounded and was unjust to India itself. Any one who was at all acquainted with the history of Muslim races throughout the world would never deny that they were the greatest patrons of human talent, energy and enterprise without any consideration of race, colour or creed. Politicians could realise that it would be impossible to establish self-Government without Muslim help.

INCONGRUOUS MIXTURE OF SWARAJ PARTY.

He criticised the Swaraj Party and its incongruous mixture and said that unless the Swarajists made up their minds definitely to free their party from the influences of monopolists and capitalists it was not possible for them to act as a genuine people's party.

He defended the accusation against Mussalmans that their patriotism was not wholly confined to this country and said that Mussalmans were proud of their international outlook and India could have been a happier country if she was not embarrassed by caste and untouchability. He sympathised with the gallant Riffs and brave Druses. The most disquieting news to him was the award of the League of Nations on the Mosul question. The decision was pregnant with sinister possibilities affecting relations between England and Turkey and he fervently hoped that matters would not be pushed beyond limits of friendly negotiations.

Referring to Hindu-Muslim problem Sir Abdur Rahim declared that it would perhaps be years before a substantial fusion of the two peoples came about and probably it would be as a result of some general social upheaval. He instanced the position of Muslims in Bengal, their past glory and their present abject position and pleaded for the reconstruction of the community. English and Bengalee were substituted for Persian and Urdu and in one generation Muslims were swept out of the administration. The motive was mainly political though it was supported on administrative grounds.

After dealing with the great value of Muslims to India he narrated his own experience in public positions and acknowledged without reserve that he had much to learn from his English colleagues at every stage of his career, and he would have been a great loser if he had not the advantage of working with them. Most of the progressive measures were initiated by Englishmen themselves, and he could not recall a single occasion when there was agreement on any question among the Indian members of the Executive Council and their opinion was disregarded. If the Indian point of view had not prevailed on any question where it should have, then it must be attributed more to the weakness of Indian Members and Ministers than anything else.

As regards Indians in Government Councils it was alleged that the system was such that the Indian majority in Government Councils could not enforce their views. Even without any formal rules enunciating joint responsibility there was nothing to prevent all members of Government in any province acting together in enforcing their views if the Governor over-ruled any of them or all of them in any measure of importance.

NEED FOR EXTENSION OF REFORMS.

He emphasised the necessity that the Imperial Conference should be given a constitution in which India would have an honoured and equal place and he looked forward to the time when the League of Nations would become a greater league of humanity. India, he said, was far off from the ideal of responsible Government in this essential respect, that her electorate was not educated and it would be years before every man and woman could have a vote. Nor was it possible in the present circumstances to have one common general electorate. Subject to these limitations the present constitution should be modified for securing the political and economic progress of the country unhampered.

He also referred to the useful work of the Khilafat Committee and Tanzeem and pleaded for a common language and common name for Indian people. He had no objection for Hindi with this compromise that Muslims would use Arabic script.

THE ALL-INDIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The twelfth session of the All-India Christian Conference was held in Bishop's College, Calcutta, under the presidentship of Prof. K. L. Rallia Ram of Lahore. In the course of his address Prof. Rallia Ram, after referring to the main object of the Conference which is "to help forward the building up of that solidarity which the Indian Christian community lacks and to knot together into genuine unity the heterogeneous material out of which our community has been composed, and discuss and consider such problems which confront us to-day, with a view to arrive at a satisfactory solution in regard to them, and to give our considered opinion on other issues which beset the country as a whole and to contribute our mite, in our own humble way, to the efforts towards the realisation of India's hopes and aspirations", said:

According to the last census the Indian Christians in India numbered four millions and a half, the vast majority of whom lived in villages. The primary need of these is education. Next to education, their economic condition needs to be improved. A vast majority of these people live on the cultivation of land. They are able-bodied, but a very small number, an almost negligible number, own lands of their own except in a few colonies which were given to the various Missionary Societies in several places and even, in most of these, they have not got the proprietary rights. Their salvation greatly lies in their improvement in this direction.

This leads to my next subject, i. e., the change for the better in the relationship between the Foreign Missionary Societies and the Indian Christian community. One cannot help offering his felicitations to some of the Missions who have shown a great liberality in changing their constitution and giving Indian Christians a proper share in all their deliberations and throwing real responsibility on them.

AN INDIAN CHURCH.

Another matter that needs constant attention and closest co-operation between the missionary bodies and ourselves is the evolving in India of one Indian Church and minimising the present denominational divisions which are very detrimental to our growth and progress. There are over 160 denominations working in India with their traditions and differences. The situation thus created is most serious and is bound to retard our progress in more than one way. It is a happy augury of the times that the Foreign Missionaries and Missions have begun also to realize the baneful effects of these differences which practically only amount to difference in forms of worship.

There are other problems and very intricate ones too, concerning our people. It is no secret that, under the present changes inaugurated lately, our position has become far more difficult than before. We are face to face, at this juncture, with the question of un-employment, the question of the education of girls, the problems of marriages and many other kindred matters.

ATTITUDE TOWARDS POLITICAL MOVEMENT.

As I said in the beginning though we are here chiefly to represent the views, aspirations, and obligations of the Indian Christian community and ponder over matters concerning their welfare and well-being by concerted organized action and develop their economic, social and industrial resources and consolidate our relations with one another, yet we cannot overlook the broader issues with which our motherland is now confronted. We are Indians. India is our motherland: its blood runs in our veins and its history and traditions are the springs from which we draw our inspiration. Our countrymen are engaged to-day in the great struggle for attaining Swaraj for their motherland, and the whole of the country is pulsating with a new vision and awakening. Our destinies and future hopes are closely interwoven with theirs. It is as much our land as it is theirs. We have to live with them, and our connections with them are of a permanent character. Therefore it is highly desirable that we should identify ourselves with all healthy and constitutional movements started and encouraged by our fellow-countrymen. We stand accused to-day of being denationalized and being westernized not only in our ways and manners of life and dress but in all our modes of thinking and general mentality. We have shown great antipathy in the matter of cultivating our own arts and important branches of oriental science and mastering the vernaculars of our country. We bring up our children in an atmosphere which is mostly foreign and unnatural so much so that when they grow up their sympathies are entirely alienated from what is best in the culture and knowledge of our country. We lack a decisive, uniform and fixed policy in matters civic. We have no political creed of our own. We should try to bring about a change. It is true that there are a number of things in the West which are worth imitating but our own motherland has to teach us many virtues which are by no means to be despised. The Indian Christian, in my opinion, should combine in him the qualities and virtues of the West and the East and not, as in some cases happens, lose the virtues of the East and get the vices of the West.

We must be at one with those who are for progressive and constitutional development and advancement within the British Empire. We must join also with those who are trying to reform the present system and redress the wrongs and purge the administration of some of the evils which have become inherent in it. It is an accepted principle that, in these days of freedom, there should be government of people for the people and by the people. Any nation which prepares itself whole-heartedly and disinterestedly to take those responsibilites on itself has always achieved that end. God alone is the true Maker of nations and He will not keep any country or nation down for an indefinite period of time if the people of that nation, taken as a whole, are fit morally, intellectually and socially to govern themselves. Therefore, all our future hopes and aspirations lie in action—organised action—and not in mere speeches and pious resolutions. We, Indian Christians, are specially fitted to carry on this work since we have got the opportunity of imbibing in us the good and strong points of both the East and the West. Wherever our people have joined any movement, they have commanded respect and attention on account of their disinterested, impartial and sincere views and vision of things.

We should take a more active part than we have hitherto done in all social matters in cleansing the community of social evils. We should stand for temperance and prohibition in India. It will strengthen and help those who have taken the lead in such matters. Mahatma Gandhi alone has accomplished more in this direction by his moral force and saintliness of character than all the efforts made by the different societies for half a century. We should be with him entirely in all his noble efforts to better the condition of the people. Similar should be our attitude towards our other leaders of this country. We should be proud of them and should make them feel that we appreciate their self-sacrifice, their convictions, their courage, even though, at times, we may differ, and differ very widely, from some of their views.

It is very gratifying to learn that the Legislative Assembly, in Simla on the 2nd of September last, passed a Resolution for the Prohibition Movement in India with a very preponderating majority; and we congratulate the mover, Haji Waji-ud-din of Meerut, on the splendid victory he has gained. Next month, the energetic Secretary of the All-India Temperance Society, Mr. Herbert Anderson, is calling a big convention to discuss as to how to give effect to this resolution and take steps as well to expel the Demon of Drink from this country and make India entirely dry. I hope the members of this Conference will give their whole-hearted support to the Movement and do whatever lies in their power to advocate and advance its cause.

BANE OF COMMUNALISM.

We should set our face against communalism which seems to be rampant in some provinces. It is a canker which is undoubtedly eating into the very vitals of our national life and progress and is diametrically opposed to all true priniciples of democracy, which are to form our basic principles of Government. An analysis of the cult of communalism indicates that it is nothing but an acknowledgment of one's own inferiority. Under its guise, individuals, here and there, might gain or secure something for themselves, but the spirit which it engenders and fosters is largely prejudicial to the best interests of the country. As Christians, it behoves us to stand for the highest ideals of life and character; and being in a minority, if we have to forego some of the advantages which may accrue to some of us, let us forego them for the sake of the common good. Let us set a good example to others, and, I am sure, the good sense of those, who are its advocates, will enable them to see their folly, and higher considerations and nobler thoughts will permeate them and consequently they will give them up.

REFORMS.

The Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms have been in operation for the last five years—a long enough period of time, certainly, for a full understanding of its character and full test of its value. Opinions differ as regards their efficacy and usefulness, and, in certain quarters, a good deal of agitation has been carried on asking the Government to overhaul the whole system and make it more acceptable to the people. The nomination of a Royal Commission will be received with great satisfaction, and I am sure that the Government will appoint and associate with it Indians of standing and ability and those who have enjoyed the confidence of the people in order to make the work of the Commission really effective.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE ON BIRTH CONTROL.

The Birth Control Review, America, publishes a letter dated Shantiniketan, Sept. 30th, 1925, written by Dr. Rabindranath Tagore to Mrs. Margaret Sanger, which runs as follows: "I am of opinion that the Birth Contol movement is a great movement not only because it will save women from enforced and undesirable maternity, but because it will help the cause of peace by lessening the number of surplus population of a country, scrambling for food and space outside its own rightful limits. In a hunger-stricken country like India it is a cruel crime thoughtlessly to bring more children to existence than could properly be taken care of, causing endless sufferings to them and imposing a degrading condition upon the whole family. It is evident that the utter helplessness of growing poverty very rarely acts as a check controlling the burden of over-population. It proves that in this case nature's urging gets the better of the severe warning that comes from the providence of civilized social life. Therefore, I believe, that to wait till the moral sense of man becomes a great deal more powerful than it is now and till then to allow countless generations of children to suffer privations and untimely death for no fault of their own is a great social injustice which should not be tolerated. I feel grateful for the cause you have made your own and for which you have suffered. I am eagerly waiting for the literature that has been sent to me according to your letter, and I have asked our Secretary to send you our Vishwabharati Journal in exchange for your Birth Control Review.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Allarkhia Rehemtulla Sonawalla Charity Fund: This fund consists of valuable immovable property bequeathed by Haji Allarkhia Rehemtulla Sonawalla having a rental, according to the receipts for the year 1924, of Rs. 19,970-10-0, besides Government of India Loan notes to the face value of Rs. 20,000 which realized an interest from 13th June to 30th September 1924 of Rs. 216-10-4. According to the second Report of the Charity Fund, the rents realized during the year were Rs. 9,756-14-0 less than those of the previous year, the deficit having been due to the general depression. The Fund is managed by trustees consisting of six members of whom Rahimtulla M. Chinoy is the Chairman, and Haji Allarkhia Rehemtulla is the managing trustee. The funds are devoted to various philanthropic activities, and it is significant to note that handsome donations are paid to public institutions such as People's Free Hospital, Bombay, Virashram Institute, Baroda, St. Joseph's Home Nursery, the Cutch Mundra Khoja Ismailji Boarding House etc., which clearly shows that the trustees have risen above communal considerations. The benefit of the Charity Fund is made available to the needy irrespective of caste, creed, religion or colour. In 1923 the trustees sanctioned a sum of Rs. 18,000 to the Gokhale Education Society, Bombay, towards the cost of building an industrial school in the name of the Donor at Bordi (Golwad Station on B. B. & C. I. Ry.) besides the free Primary Gujarathi School opened at Satpati near Palghar Station. They have also favourably disposed of 49 applications out of Mahatma Gandhi on Christian Missions in India: Mahatma Gandhi writes in Young India of the 17th December in reply to an inquirer: In my opinion Christian Missionaries have done good to us indirectly. Their direct contribution is probably more harmful than otherwise. I am against the modern method of proselytising. Years' experience of proselytising both in South Africa and India has convinced me that it has not raised the general moral tone of the converts who have imbibed the superficialities of European civilization, and have missed the teaching of Jesus. I must be understood to refer to the general tendency and not to brilliant exceptions The indirect contribution, on the other hand, of Christian missionary effort is great It has stimulated Hindu and Mussalman religious research. It has forced us to put our houses in order. The great educational and curative institutions of Christian missions I also count amongst indirect results, because they have been established not for their own sakes, but as an aid to proselytising. The world, and therefore we, can no more do without the teaching of Jesus than we can without that of Mahomed or the Upanishads. I hold all these to be complementary of one another, in no case exclusive. Their true meaning, their interdependence and interrelation, have still to be revealed to us. We are but indifferent representatives of our respective faiths, which we believe more often than not.

Dean Inge on Anglicanism: It is often said that it is difficult to define Hinduism except that it is a conglomeration of different sects each having a separate social entity. That Anglicanism resembles Hinduism in one essential respect, that it covers every variety of religious belief, is evident from what Dean Inge of London Anglican Cathedral says in the course of his review of a recent work by Canon Carnegie, another Anglican dignitary. Writes Dean Inge :—"Anglicanism can hardly be defined except as the Established Church of England. It covers almost every variety of religious belief. It is divided into factions which do not worship in each other's churches, rarely exchange pulpits, and would gladly expel each other from the Society. The favourite newspaper of the Anglo-Catholics look forward to a time when the Liberal Churchman will be driven out and when the Evangelicals will join the Non-conformist Churches. The Evangelicals ask why the Anglo-Catholics do not leave a protestant Church and become Roman Catholics in name as well as in fact. The Liberals cannot find the slightest tincture of Christian spirit in the organ which claims to be the living voice of the High Church party. To all appearance, it is only the Establishment which prevents the ill-asserted mass from flying apart into its component elements. One faction is already flirting with Roman Catholic Cardinals, whose terms are known to be unconditional surrender; another desires reunion with the other Protestant bodies in our own country."

Spinning in Public Schools in Cochin: The Mysore Chronicle writes:—Our sister Indian State, Cochin, deserves to be congratulated on the resolution to introduce spinning in all schools in the State being passed in the Legislative Council without one dissentient. A very instructive and beautiful part of the affair is the earnest plea made by a lady Councillor, Srimati Madhavi Ammal, in support of the proposition. She was a practical worker, she said, and could spin 150 to 200 yards in an hour of about 30 counts, and she preferred khadder to mill-cloth, foreign and Indian. She preferred Cochin khadder to any importation from outside as that would ensure greater economy for the State citizens. Let us contrast this with what happened in the Representative Assembly in Mysore. The idea appeared ridiculous to most! The extra-member pronounced himself against it. Some members pleaded in the name of kindness to pupils that spinning should not be introduced. We fancy these members have never even witnessed the spinning wheels at work. And a sub-committee of the Board of Agriculture takes the cue and sees no good in spinning. Our representatives and public men and public servants seem anxious to show that they are super-civilised. Our men will do well to take their cue from the Cochin lady, and ponder over what she said.

An Inter-Communal Dinner: Under the auspices of the Rajahmundry Students' Cosmopolitan Association started in August 1925, a dinner party was given in Sri Kanchumurthi Venkata Krishna Rao Garu's garden on Sunday (6-12-25) which was attended by about sixty persons, of whom twenty-seven were the members of the Association. Among those that took part in the function, College students formed the majority being forty-five in all. Only three were High School students and the gentry numbered 11. On the whole Brahmins counted nine, Brahmos two, Adi Andhras four, Christians two, Devangis one, Telugus twenty-five, Mohammadans five, Velamas five and Kammas six. Among the prominent persons that participated in the function may be mentioned Messrs. Peddada Sundara Siva Rao Garu, B.A., B. L., J. Ganganna Garu B.A., L.T., M. Appa Rao Garu B.A., B.L., S. L. Prakasa Rao Garu B.A., B L., Ch. Atmaram Garu B.A., B.L., T. Purushotham Garu and Mr. T. Ramamurthy Garu B.A., L.T. The Association expresses its heartfelt thanks for all those that attended and made the function a success, and also for those that kindly responded and gave donations.

Child Labour on Indian Plantations: We strongly protest, says Stri Dharma, against the demand of the Indian planters that "lofts" on plantations shall be excluded from the definition of "factory". If this was granted, planters would have the right to employ children without any restriction of hours of the children's work. It is a cruel demand and the Labour Commissioner should see that the rights of small children are not interfered with by Western planters sitting at a Planters' Conference thinking only of coin and not of helpless, immature humanity. How can Indians ask for better conditions for their labourers abroad in the Malay States, in Fiji etc, if they allow the factory laws relating to the proper care of their own children to be disregarded right here in their own motherland?

Widow Remarriages in Lucknow: We are requested to announce that from June to December 1925 seven widow marriages (3 Kayastha, 2 Brahmin, and 2 Khatri) in respectable families took place through the Hindu Widow Reform League, Lucknow.

The New Dewan of Kolhapur: We congratulate Rao Bahadur A. B. Latthe on his appointment as Dewan of Kolhapur.

Bombay Art Exhibition: The annual exhibition of the Bombay Art Society will be held at the Town Hall from January 15th to January 29th. There will be no "At Home" or formal opening ceremony this year, but invitations have been issued for a Private View on January 14th. The exhibits which have been received indicate that the exhibition will reach the high standard of previous years, and that the various sections, oil and water colour paintings, black and white drawings, sculpture, photography etc., will be fully representative. The charge for admission will be, as usual, one rupee.

The Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha: The Hon. Secretary, writes:—Reports of 296 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, (Punjab) throughout India in the month of December 1925. The total number of marriages held in the current year i e., from 1st January 1925 to the end of December 1925 has reached 2663 as detailed below:—According to Caste:—Brahmin 447, Khatri 508, Arora 570, Kaisth 76, Aggarwal 180, Rajput 202, Sikh 251, Misc. 429; Total 2663. ## NOTES

The Viceroy on the South African Indian Problem: His Excellency the Viceroy, in his address at the opening of the Legislative Assembly at Delhi on Wednesday, spoke with great force and feeling on the anti-Indian policy followed by the South African Union Government. Lord Reading recounted the measures which that Government had passed in contravention of the Gandhi-Smuts Agreement of 1914, and condemned the Class Areas Bill now in contemplation as opposed to the fundamental principle of Imperial Unity. We reproduce in the Overseas Supplement the part of His Excellency's address relating to the South African Indian problem, from which it will be seen that on this occasion Lord Reading has completely identified himself with the Indian point of view. It was a very grave accusation that the head of the Government of India brought against the South African Union Government. He denied that their anti-Indian policy was a purely domestic affair with which the rest of the Empire had no concern. "In our view," said His Excellency, "there are far wider considerations involved in this legislation than local economic policy alone. In our opinion they have an important bearing upon the Empire as a whole. The proposed measures are not in our view in accordance with those principles which bind the Empire together in a community of sentiment, and we hope that this aspect of the proposals may yet commend its If to South African opinion." We do not expect General Hertzog to be much impressed by imperial considerations. We had it from the late Mr. Gokhale that when he pressed them upon a South African Minister, the reply was that they might have weight in London but that they did not care for it in South Africa. They (the Minister was an ex-Boer General) had been dragged into the Empire against their wishes, and they could not be expected to show excessive solicitude for it. The strange thing is that the Britishers in South Africa have adopted the Boer view in this matter.

Lord Lytton on Prison Reform: Speaking before the Calcutta Rotary Club, Lord Lytton gave a thoughtful address on prison reform and the treatment of criminals. He strongly pleaded for the substitution of reformation for retribution as the basis of the Penal Code. The prison system that obtains in India is intended to be deterrent; 'it instils fear,' to use His Excellency's words, 'and enforces habits.' The fundamental teaching of the science of penology and criminology seems to be definitely against a morality which is only enforced by 'pains and penalties.' Those, therefore, who want to secure acceptance of moral standards should turn to other methods and, as a result of the labours of the humanitarian reformers, the International Prison Conference has been holding its sessions. Civilized nations have brought their Penal Codes and Prison Systems in line with progressive ideas. India, however, has done almost next to nothing. No doubt, her representatives have attended and taken part in the deliberations and resolutions of the International Prison Conferences, but the great work of reclaiming the prison population yet remains largely undone. Lord Lytton pleaded for the adoption of a lenient mode of punishment of criminals and it is time that he brought his theories into practice. It is almost a truism that punishment alone is ineffective to produce goodness; hence the need of moral doctors and moral hospitals i. e., probation officers and reformatory institutions.

The Madras Students' Congress: It was a happy idea of the students of the Madras Presidency to resuscitate the Students' Convention which used to be held some years back, and we hope that it will continue to hold its session every year. Mr. B.C. Pal, who delivered the presidential address, gave some sound advice to the young men. Speaking of politics, he said that, while students should study politics earnestly, seriously and honestly as any other branch of knowledge, they should not identify themselves with any party until called upon to participate actively in political work. He then placed before them the ancient ideal of education which inculcated in the young men the highest principles of democracy and common humanity. The resolutions passed by the Congress embrace almost all the subjects which are now agitating the student world. The demand of the students for speedy arrangements to be taken to introduce compulsory free primary education in the Presidency is evidence of the deep importance they attach to the spread of literacy in the country. We are glad to see that the Congress also passed a resolution viewing with apprehension the growing sense of communal distinctions and hatred, for it is a sign of the change that has come over our young men; and it is a comfort to see that at least the younger members of the society who are the future citizens are coming to chafe at the caste, creed and colour distinctions that are being fostered in the country by a class of short-sighted politicians. Resolutions were also passed advocating compulsory military training and expressing concern at the growing seriousness of the unemployment problem among university graduates.

The Bombay Swaraj Party: The Responsive Co-operationists of the Bombay Legislative Council at a meeting held last week, decided not to resign their seats in the Council. The meeting, while congratulating Messrs. Jayakar, Kelkar, Moonje and Aney on the resignation of their membership, unanimously resolved that those members of the Swaraj Party who are Responsive Co-operators should merely issue a statement that they belong to the new party of Co-operation. They have thus given a chance to Pandit Motilal to challenge them to resign their seats and seek re-election on the Responsive Co-operationist ticket. If the Pandit takes up the challenge, they will then immediately resign and seek re-election on the issue of Responsive Co-operation. If, however, the Pandit, quietly ignores it, they will accept all the offices After the Cawnpore Congress, nothing has been heard of the Pandit's crusade against Responsive Co-operation, due probably to his illness, and the Pandit's action in this respect is therefore to be eagerly awaited. In all probability, he will not force things to a crisis, especially after his bitter experience of Bombay and C. P., and in that case, he will have to reckon with a strong body of Responsive Co-operationists in the ranks of his party who, though small in number now, are sure to gain in strength and popularity as time goes on.

Municipal Elections in Bombay: The Municipal Election campaign in Bombay is in full swing and several candidates are in the field with their manifestos, some recounting their past achievements in the Corporation, and others presenting alluring prospects of their future achievements. The Bombay Municipal Nationalist Party—for that is the name by which the Swarajists in the Corporation are known—is the only organised party that is contesting the elections. We have, in this connection, to deprecate the attempts that are being made in certain quarters to boycott candidates who have a distinguished record of civic service to their credit, simply because they happen to hold advanced views on social reform and religion. We also regret the cry of each one for his own community that is being raised by some communal zealots. At least, let our Municipal politics be free from the poison of communalism, which is eating into our very vitals. The two European candidates who are standing for the Fort ward have in this respect set a good example by declaring that they are standing for the Corporation not as Europeans, but as citizens of Bombay. We are pleased to notice among the names of candidates those of a son of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta and a son of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar.

Helping the Blind: We have received a copy of the Blind Relief Association's Report for the year 1924. During the six brief years of its existence, the Association has found it possible not only to carry on blind relief work in Bombay City but also in some of the mofussil towns. The number and nature of the cases treated at Bijapur, Chalisgaon, Bulsar and Surat show that with properly equipped and suitably located buildings, there is enough scope for these centres to develop into first-class eye hospitals. In addition to the prophylactic and curative treatment given to patients, the Association helps persons "who are totally blind or of defective eyesight to acquire literary and industrial knowledge and training, and to obtain employment." The Victoria Memorial School for the Blind, Bombay, is one of the institutions fulfilling the latter aim. The Association further undertakes the training of students willing to enrol themselves as field-workers. The number of totally blind in India is something like one and a half millions and the Blind Relief Association with its excellent work has been able to help only the fringe of this huge population. Mr. H. D. Chhatrapati, Honorary Secretary of the Happy Home for the Blind, Bombay, has issued an appeal for funds in aid of an All-India Movement for the relief of the homeless blind and it is proposed to celebrate the first "All-India Day for our Blind" on the 24th instant. We are sure that the generous and philanthropic public of Bombay will take this opportunity to raise for the Association a permanent source of income derived from endowments.

Education in Baroda: The brochure entitled "Education in Baroda" issued by the Commissioner of Education in the State in connection with the recent golden jubilee celebrations, aims at instituting a comparison in matters of education between the Baroda of the early seventies and that of the present day and shows what progress has been made in that direction. It is interesting to read that fifty years ago an Education Department was not thought necessary in that State and all the education that was given was done by private elementary schools which numbered two hundred, all told. Now Baroda not only has an Education Department at the head of which is the Commissioner, but it is the pioneer State to adopt Free and Compulsory Education, thanks to the efforts of the present enlightened ruler who is a staunch believer in education. In the State there are 2,838 primary schools in which 2,02,713 pupils receive instruction, 47 Anglo Vernacular Schools and 22 High Schools including one for girls. Besides these there are Secondary Training Colleges for both men and women, an Arts College, the Kala bhavan and industrial schools which provide for the technical and industrial education of the students. It is noteworthy how the problem of the education of the backward classes is dealt with by His Highness' Government. There are 219 Schools meant only for the children of the backward classes and, according to the report, 13,936 children of the depressed classes or 8 per cent of their total population in the State receive primary education. In the Boarding Schools meant exclusively for the depressed classes the pupils are supplied with free boarding, clothing and lodging. Books and materials are also provided free to them by the State The aboriginal tribes also occupy a prominent place in the scheme of education. There is a special library department which controls libraries in the State. The total expenditure of the State on education is over thirty and a half lakhs of rupees. We, however, note a discrepancy in the number of boys and girls receiving instruction in vernacular schools. While the figure for boys studying in the vernacular schools is given as 1,59,032, the number of girls is only 66,093, just a little over half the number of boys. Does it mean that the girls do not take advantage of the facilities of education afforded by the Act to the same extent as the boys? The report would have been more informing if it had worked out the percentage of students studying in different institutions to their total population in the State.

Grant to Indian Deputation from South Africa: The Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association has made a grant of Rs. 50,000 to the Indian Deputation from South Africa, headed by Dr. Abdur Rahman, for their work.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, JANUARY 23, 1926.

THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT.

During the last few days Bombay celebrated what may be called the "Co-operative Week," by holding the ninth Conference of the Registrars of Co-operative Societies and the first All-India Provincial Co-operative Banks' Conference. Mr. Calvert, Registrar of the Department in the Punjab, presided over the former while Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas was the President of the latter. As in the field of politics and social reform, so in the field of Co-operation also, such All-India Conferences are calculated to bring together men from different parts of the country so as to exchange views and mutual experience and devise better means of carrying on the work efficiently. The presence of a large number of delegates from Indian States proves beyond doubt that there are many directions in which workers from both British India and the Native States can work together for a common purpose. His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson, in opening the Registrars' Conference, made a brief survey of the origin and progress of the Co-operative movement and pointed out the main directions in which it has to develop in future. From its modest beginnings in 1904 when the first Co-operative Societies' Act was passed, the movement has indeed made rapid strides, and its progress especially after the introduction of the 1919 Reforms when Co-operation was made a provincial subject and transferred to the control of Ministers, is remarkable. While in 1917-18, the total number of Societies was about 28,000, in 1924-25, it went up to 71,500. The membership also during the same period rose up from 10½ lakhs to over 26 lakhs. The working capital has also risen from 14½ crores to nearly 48 crores.

It is impossible to estimate the many boons which the Co-operative movement has conferred upon the poor raiyat. It has supplied him with credit for his current agricultural needs. It has taught him the valuable virtues of thrift, mutual help and self-help. It has also broadened his mental horizon. But, in one respect, the movement has not touched him and that is with regard to his indebtedness. It is found in some cases that members of the Co-operative Societies are indebted to a greater extent to the sowcars than to the Societies, and this is because the latter give loans for a longer term than the Co-operative Societies. The problem before the Co-operators now is, therefore, how to supply the raiyat with sufficient long-term capital and free him from the clutches of the usurious money-lender. Both the 1904 and 1912 Acts, however, did not touch this problem. But, the Punjab and Madras have already tried to solve this question by starting Land Mortgage Banks, and we are glad to see that a similar scheme for Bombay is under the consideration of the Government. The redemption of mortgage on agricultural lands, the improvement of the methods of cultivation and the encouragement of the wholesome habits of thrift, self-help and mutual help in the agriculturist, are some of the objects of these Banks. The scheme is as follows. A number of raiyats who own landed property in a specified area and have mortgaged lands to money-lenders, will combine to form a Co-operative Land Mortgage Bank. They will remortgage their lands to the Bank which will then proceed to issue debentures on the security of these mortgages. The debentures would generally be issued for a pretty long period and would be sold in the open market, the sale proceeds to be utilised by the Bank in lending to its members in exchange for their mortgage deeds. In this way, gradually, all areas will be tackled. Both the Registrars' Conference and the Provincial Banks' Conference devoted much attention to this subject and passed resolutions urging the early establishment of Co-operative Land Mortgage Banks.

Mr. Calvert's address was mainly a plea for not forcing the pace of Co-operation and for spreading education among the illiterate agriculturists. He is of opinion that the economic future of India is closely bound up with the extension of the Raiffiesen type of village credit societies which has enabled Germany after fifty years of effort on co-operative lines to break the power of the money-lender. Referring to the importance of education he said: "Our leaders must realise that "better living" is the real goal of all our efforts. "Better farming, and better business" are merely means to an end. Scientific agriculture is an essential means, but scientific agriculture will never achieve much amongst the masses without the education to make use of it." Mr. Calvert in the end pointed out that, for successfully solving the problem of Indian poverty, the cultivators and their families here as in Europe must devote every spare moment to subsidiary industries or to work of a nature calculated to raise the general standard of living. The resolutions passed by the Conferences deal for the most part with administrative details. The resolution passed by the Registrars' Conference that three of the nation-building departments, viz., Agriculture, Co-operation and Industries should be brought under the control of a single Minister, is important in as much as it brings out the interdependence of these three. As His Excellency pointed out in his speech, Co-operation cannot do much for the agricultural classes, unless its activities are extended beyond the organisation of credit to the popularisation of agricultural improvements and the organisation of the sale of the agricultural produce. Similarly, the Agricultural Department should actively help agriculturists when they avail themselves of the benefits of the Co-operative movement in improving their lands. The occasion of the presence of the delegates to the two Conferences was availed of by Mr. Devadhar, that indefatigable social worker and co-operator, to bring them together at a meeting when it was resolved to appoint a Committee to concert measures for bringing an All-India Co-operative Congress into existence. The need for such an organisation to co-ordinate the propagandist and educational activities of all the Provinces and Indian States in India cannot be overemphasised and we hope that, by next year, it will be an accomplished fact.

MEDICAL INSPECTION SCHEME IN MADRAS.

(By Mr. A. S. Venkataraman, B. A. L. T.)

"Better late than never" is a motto before men who are not enamoured of ideas of rapid progress. The scheme of medical inspection now hatched by the Madras Government is an off-spring of that mentality. In some of the progressive countries of the West, medical inspection has become a systematic feature in school life. Any school which does not provide for it easily takes the place of a back-number.

The necessity for finding recruits in the South African War brought in its train an increased attention to the medical examination of grown-ups and this in turn led to the examination of pupils in schools where men were in the making Being essentially a pre-war scheme, it was however held in abeyance during the Great War. With its termination, however, a fillip was given to the movement as a sine qua non of any scheme of national reconstruction.

In India, however, some more time had to pass, before any consideration could be paid to it. Apart from the stray and spasmodic efforts here and there made as by a Theosophical Educational Trust in its primary schools, no State-wide scheme was launched. The attempt in Travancore was only a modest beginning. Probably this example is being followed by the Madras Government. While other Provincial Governments have not yet thought of it, Madras can claim the credit of having introduced it. The scheme was sanctioned in 1920, but it was not brought into operation for four more years. Important matters like the scope of inspection, the agency and arrangements for the co-ordination of results, did not engage the serious attention of the Government at first. By the time the Government had a solution ready, it was four years since the inception of the scheme.

The scheme, as sanctioned, provides for inspection of pupils in Secondary Schools and in secondary departments of Colleges and Training Schools. When he is admitted, every pupil is to be examined and once a year thereafter. Such an examination will be conducted by registered medical practitioners selected or approved by the Director of Public Instruction in consultation with the Surgeon-General. Civil Assistant Surgeons in Government employ are to be preferred. They will be given a remuneration of 12 as per pupil for the first inspection and 6 as. for every subsequent inspection. Of the actual expenditure incurred on this account, 1/3 will be borne by the Government, 1/3 by the management and 1/3 by the pupils themselves. Besides the inspection of school children, the school-building, premises, boarding schools and hostels should also be inspected. The medical officer is to advise also the school authorities on the necessity for the temporary exclusion of pupils suffering from infections or contagious diseases or infected with vermin. He will also advise as to the closing of the school during outbreaks of epidemics or infectious diseases.

For obvious reasons, the scheme is defective.

1. It is applicable only to secondary schools. Properly speaking, the pupils in primary schools should also be examined, as they are the seminaries where foundations both of virtue and vice are laid. To produce the best results, medical examination should be held early, so that the defects may be rectified early. One plea brought forward is that the medical inspectors are few, and are not available for schools in rural areas. Probably that was true of the conditions of three or four years ago. But now far from there being a dearth of qualified medical men, there is a plethora, most of them swelling the ranks of the unemployed. This is a source which may usefully be tapped, if the scheme of medical inspection becomes comprehensive enough to include pupils in elementary schools. Another plea is that the children cannot be traced upwards, and so the first year or the second year examination will all be a waste. But then it cannot be denied that the first examination has its own intrinsic value and might serve as an eye-opener to many an otherwise ignorant or careless parent.

2. A significant omission is an examination of girls. One wonders why it is so. In those places at least where qualified lady doctors are available, provision might be made for the examination of girls also.

3. As it is, medical inspection is not obligatory on every school. One school authority, if it is so minded, might not arrange for medical inspection and yet with impunity conduct its institution as before. The Government will have simply to wink at it. Our contention is that it must be made an essential condition of recognition. Otherwise a school not sufficiently alive to the importance of the scheme or, for that matter, a management pursuing a cheese-paring policy, cannot be coerced into accepting the scheme, especially when it involves some expenditure out of its own pockets. Pupils reading in such an institution, whose existence is necessarily hand-to-mouth and precarious, are easily placed at a disadvantage.

4. Again, the most unhappy drawback is that relating to the treatment of diseases. A not unnatural fear entertained in some quarters is that this medical examination might result in the exclusion of children from schools. I would put it, however, that the success of the scheme is conditioned on the assumption that the unfit pupil should be made more fit and that the fit should be prevented from becoming unfit. That is the right stand-point from which the scope of medical inspection should be viewed. If it is so, some provision should be made for the treatment of diseases. It seems that this can be done in two ways: (a) by starting what is called school clinics. The medical inspector should make arrangements for treating the common ailments of school children like scabies, adenoids, tonsils, etc. This is quite a simple thing not costly though and at the same time likely to inspire confidence in the minds of parents; (b) a second way is to allow the management to choose its own medical inspector. The proposal to appoint a

Civil Assistant Surgeon as medical inspector is meaningless on this among other grounds. Almost always he is a bird of passage, often a victim to the exigencies of service. Before he begins to acquaint himself with the town and its neighbourhood, the people and their ways of living, and before he can take stock of the situation, he is obliged to go out in search of "pastures new," not, of course, after exausting all the pastures he had in its old station. And what can be expected of him in the direction of acquainting himself with the people, their habits of living, the conditions of the locality? Does he come into live contact with the home environment of the school child? For that matter, as I am inclined to think, a local popular qualified private practitioner is perfectly competent. Besides having a knowledge of the people, their living and their surroundings, he is the person to inspire confidence in the minds of the public on that very account. He is an effective link functioning between the school and the home. He is better fitted than the Civil Assistant Surgeon to treat diseases, common to the people and peculiar to the locality. In most countries where medical inspection is a regular feature of school life, the correction of defects is done by the State. Besides making no provision for it, shall the Government dictate to the management the choice of medical inspectors also? If it does, such of the school authorities as are denied the choice of their own medical men, would rather forego any supposed advantages of the scheme than submit to an examination of pupils by a doctor who is here to-day, there to-morrow and nowhere the day after to-morrow.

Defects apart, the scheme has its own value. It provides a convenient link between the school and the home, which, if taken advantage of, is likely to be productive of immeasurable good to the school, the community and the nation at large. At present the school and the home are separate entities, each moving in a world of its own. The scheme of medical inspection is likely to bring them together, full of promise for the good of both. For the school it guarantees sound minds and for the home it guarantees healthy children, happiness and comfort. We have heard much of a sound mind in a sound body, but we are yet to hear of a scheme which makes a comparatively physically unfit boy fit for the world, and this want is supplied by the scheme.

Another inestimable benefit is that the children understanding the value of periodical examinations, will look after their children in a better way when they become the parents themselves. The scheme presents an object lesson on the practice of healthful living.

GAMBLING IN THE NAME OF CHARITY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer,

Sir,

In your issue of the 9th inst., there appeared a letter under the above heading from the pen of the Rev. F. M. Perrill who seems to have omitted some of the important facts which deserve distinct publicity. I have seen several kinds of lotteries organised in the name of some 'humbugging' institutions, but most of the ticket-books come out from Christian Orphanages and they are not at all sanctioned by Government. I have seen on several occasions that the word "Private" is printed in bold type on each book and each ticket, and the selling agent of the lottery can have a bright prospect of dupes for transacting his nefarious trade. The proprietors of these lotteries represent a large number of selling agents everywhere and the maximum number of tickets are sold in villages and among the illiterate classes. An agent who indents for a large number of ticket-books can enjoy the privilege of having the maximum commission, or, at times, the total collection of sale proceeds may be utilized by the agent himself. To the ticket holder who makes an enquiry of the proprietor of the lottery whether the counterfoil and the money have been received by the latter, the reply comes in the affirmative. The ticket holder who expects to win the first prize and builds castles in the air has to depend upon his agent to obtain the prize list and content himself with blank numbers. Unless the police authorities take a keen interest in the matter and detect some of the cases, the unwary public is likely to be grossly deceived.

CONGRESS AND SOUTH AFRICA.

The following is the resolution adopted by the Indian National Congress with regard to Indians in South Africa :—

"The Congress extends its cordial welcome to the South African Indian Congress Deputation and assures Indian settlers of South Africa of its full support in the struggle against the consolidated forces which threaten their very existence in that sub-continent. This Congress is enphatically of opinion that the proposed legislation known as the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill is in breach of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement of 1914 in that it is racial in character and is calculated not only to make the position of the settlers much worse than it was in 1914, but it is designed to make residence in that country of any self-respecting Indian impossible. In the opinion of the Congress, if the interpretation of the said Agreement as put upon it on behalf of the settlers is not accepted by the Union Government, it should be decided by reference to arbitration, as was done in 1893 in connection with matters affecting Indian settlers of the Transvaal and in matters arising from the Administration of Law 3 of 1895. The Congress heartily endorses the suggestion that a Round Table Conference containing among others proper Indian representatives should be called to settle the question and trusts that the Union Government will accept that reasonable suggestion. In the event of the proposal of a Round Table Conference and the proposal regarding arbitration failing, the Congress is of opinion that the Imperial Government should withhold Royal Assent to the Bill, should it pass through the Union Parliament."

MAHATMA GANDHI'S SPEECH.

Mahatma Gandhi, in moving the resolution, said:

The Bill proposed by the Union Government marked the limit to which the Union Government could go to expel Indians. The Deputation had come to seek their help and the resolution he was proposing promised that help in full measure Before the Congress adopted this he wanted them to remember what they were pleading themselves to. They must not treat it lightly. If the South African Indians resorted to Satyagraha, as they did before, for they were tried soldiers of Satyagraha which took birth there, then India would have to help them financially and otherwise. There were both Hindu and Muslim traders in South Africa and he wanted an assurance about Satyagraha. Though he was looking very weak, he would be strong and start Satyagraha here for South Africa. Dr. Abdur Rahman had claimed him as a South African. He accepted that plea. "I am here to tell you", said Mahatmaji, "that the Areas Reservation Bill is hanging like the sword of Damocles over the heads of our countrymen in South Africa. It is designed not merely to heap greater wrongs upon them, but virtually to expel them. This has been admitted by the Union Government. You can understand how keenly the South African Indians feel that when the Union Parliament's next session contemplates to legislate a bill to expel 100,000 Indians. In these circumstances, the deputation has come in our midst for support from the people and the Government of India and through the Viceroy for help of the British Government. Lord Reading has given them a long reply. I wish I had said also "a satisfactory reply." It is as unsatisfactory as it is long. If that was all that Lord Reading proposed to give to the deputation, he should have said it in a few words and spared them the humiliating spectacle of a great Government confessing its inability to render proper redress to those, who, for no fault of theirs, and who, as many Europeans would admit, are in danger of being expelled from South Africa. It was no comfort to us to be told that the Indian Government has always reserved to itself the right of making representation to the South African Government, the right of petitioning, that is to say, by a mighty Government (laughter.) This Government holding the lives of 330 millions of Indians in the hollow of its hands, confesses its powerlessness."

RUIN OF 100,000 PEOPLE.

Continuing, Gandhiji said: The Viceroy had remarked that the Imperial Government might not interfere in the domestic policy of a Dominion. That was the meaning of the domestic policy when that was calculated to bring ruin to homes of 100,0000 people, whom they were denying the common rights of humanity. Would such be the case, if the sufferer had been an Englishman, Mahatma Gandhi asked. He quoted the precedent that, when the Boer War was declared, the late Mr. Chamberlain had claimed it as his right to protect the aliens even in the then Independent Republic of the Transvaal. Then again it was Lord Lansdowne who said that his blood boiled because 12,000 Indians in the Transvaal Republic were put under disabilities and that was one of the causes of the Boer War. 'Where are those proclamations to-day, why should not the British Government go to war against the Union Government when the life, honour, and the livelihood of 150,000 people is at stake?", Mahatma spoke feelingly. Dr. Fisher had given an impartial testimony to the wrongs that were being heaped upon Indians. The South African Whites were only depending upon 'might is right.' Why were these wrongs heaped upon them? General Smuts had said, it was due to the conflict of two civilizations, and that, if Eastern hordes were let in, they would overwhelm them. There were thrifty Indians, men and women, who cut fruits and vegetables and carried them on their heads to sell them to the South African farmers, scattered abroad, possessing not a few bighas, as peasants in India had cut hundreds of acres. The Indian trading community consisted of many hundreds. They did trade both with Natives and Europeans. If, however, they were to live solely on the Indian population, such a large number of Indians could never earn their livelihood. Someone had said that Europeans dreaded the advent of Islam in South Africa. Why? Islam was a great brotherhood. The speaker knew that Zulu Natives, when converted to Islam were allowed by Muslims to live with them and eat from the same dish, while the Zulu Christians were not treated as equals by missionaries.

BREACH OF PLEDGE.

Gandhiji claimed that among South African Europeans he had some of his precious friends. He also knew Dr. Malan. He knew General Smuts, who was a party to the Agreement when the final settlement was made. General Smuts had acknowledged that Indians should not threaten passive resistance and Europeans should let them have rest, but the moment he (Gandhi) turned his back on South Africa a series of wrongs began to be perpetrated. General Smuts had pledged his words as a representative of his people and the Government. Before they would open their Parliament members of the Union Government must have read during Christmas their prayers, 'God was the same for all human beings, and even sub-human beings'. "I say to the South African statesman from this platform, and with the full responsibility, that they will deny their Bible, they will deny their God, if they hesitate for one moment and fail to render elementary justice that is due to Indians in South Africa."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Vivekananda Birthday Anniversary: Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas presided over a public meeting held to celebrate the birthday anniversary of Swami Vivekananda at the Marwadi Vidyalaya Hall, Sandhurst Road, on Sunday last. The meeting was addressed by several speakers all of whom paid eloquent tributes to the life and teachings of the Swami. Swami Yatishwaranand spoke of Swami Vivekananda as a practical Vedantist who had brought Vedantism from the level of a mere ideal or belief into the realm of practical application in everyday life. The Swami's patriotism transcended all bounds of race, language or creed while the central truth of his teaching was the realisation of God in man. He had the courage of his convictions, preaching truth as he conceived it to be, without fear or favour. He expressed the earnest hope that the spirit and idealism of the Swami's teachings would spur each one of them to catch a glimpse of the divinity in them and lead a life of usefulness and service to their fellowmen. ## SUPPLEMENT TO The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 11 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1926. Price One Anna.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN INDIAN POSITION.

We postponed the Overseas Supplement last week, because we had the alarming news from Mr. Andrews that the Anti-Asiatic Bill would be taken into consideration on the 14th instant. Since then, however, we have the reassuring news from him that it was not taken up on the 14th instant and that there is no immediate prospect of its coming up before the Union Parliament. The Government of India, in the face of universal opposition, sent a hastily-got-up Deputation to South Africa before hearing what the Abdur Rahman Deputation had to say about conditions in that country, and the Union Government has not even officially recognised the Deputation with the result that it has to content itself with an informal meeting with some official members. The Union Government has thus definitely set its mind upon this iniquitous legislation and is not prepared to budge even an inch from its position. Nor is this all. Some of the responsible Ministers of the Government are openly avowing their squeezing-out policy. Addressing an important gathering at Port Elizabeth, the Minister of Defence and the Minister of Labour declared that Government were going to tackle the Asiatic problem and were going to see that they (the Whites) in South Africa were masters in their own house and that they were not going to be ruled from Calcutta or Delhi or even from London, and were not going to be side-tracked by Dr. Abdur Rahman. At Transvaal, the Minister of Justice openly said that no new licenses would be granted to Indians and that the Asiatic Bill would have the effect of causing three times as many Indians to leave South Africa. While the Paddison Deputation is quietly collecting economic information, Mr. C. F. Andrews, in his characteristic way, has been rousing the Christian conscience of the Whites to the injustice of broken pledges and plighted troth. In a vigorous speech delivered before the European congregation at the Cathedral in Johannesburg, Mr. Andrews gave a history of the Indians in South Africa and quoted chapter and verse to prove that the proposed Anti-Asiatic Bill is a flagrant breach of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement of 1914. Referring to Natal, he said: "When the first Indian immigrants came to Natal in 1860, they were brought out from India at the special request of the Natal Government under pressure from the Durban Corporation. The desire was so great to keep them in the country that in 1870 it was enacted that any indentured Indian at the expiration of 10 years' residence in Natal might receive a crown grant of land instead of his return passage. The terms on which they came were those of "full domicile with freedom to engage in agricultural pursuits as soon as their indenture was over. The Government of India would not have allowed them to come under any other condition." It is, clear, therefore, that Natal was brought from the verge of bankruptcy more than once by the supply of Indian indentured labour, and it is from this province to the prosperity of which Indians have contributed in no small measure that they are now to be turned out bag and baggage and all for the fault of their being not white-skinned.

Mr. Andrews' terrible indictment could not but find converts from the Whites to his side, and to this should be largely ascribed Bishop Talbot's declaration that the proposed legislation is in violent contradiction to the pledges given in the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement. Meanwhile, the Cape Times is carrying on a poisonous propaganda against the Abdur Rahman Deputation which has come to our country to lay before us and the Government the grievances of Indians settled in South Africa. It asks us not to take too seriously the South African Deputation. But the country, however, knows better. It has accorded it a welcome and support commensurate with the nature of the struggle in which our countrymen in South Africa are engaged. Of the innumerable Conferences that were held during the Christmas week, there is not a single body which has not condemned the proposed Asiatic legislation and lent its moral and financial support to the Deputation. The very first resolution passed by the Congress was that relating to South Africa and no less a man than Mahatma Gandhi himself moved the resolution in a telling and impressive speech. Last Friday Bombay held a crowded meeting at the Excelsior theatre to protest against the unjust treatment meted out to our coutrymen there. From a full report of the meeting published elsewhere, it will be seen that it was a most thoroughly representative and well-attended meeting. His Highness the Aga Khan, who has always taken a keen interest in the subject of Indians abroad, presided, and the speeches made on the occasion were all full of that fiery indignation with which India is seething from one end to the other. We are glad to see that Madras also held a similar meeting, under the presidentship of Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, in welcoming the South African delegation which is now touring throughout the country to enlist the moral and material support of the people. The resolutions passed at the meetings suggest three courses to be followed. First, the Government of India is requested to urge for a Round Table Conference. If, however, the Bill is passed, the Imperial Government is asked to exercise its power of veto under Section 65 of the South African Act. And lastly, the Government of India, in consultation with the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State, is to send a deputation to England to put the case of the South African Indians before the British Government and the British public. And, so far as the people of India are concerned, they are asked to pledge their moral and financial support to the South African Deputation in India, and we hope it will not be slow in forth-coming. We are glad to be able to print also the speech delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy on South Africa in opening the winter session of the Indian Legislature. It will be seen that the speech stands in striking contrast to the cold reply which His Excellency gave to the South African Deputation, and, by declaring that the proposed measures are not in accordance with those principles which bind the Empire together in a community of sentiment, Lord Reading has for once identified himself with the best interests of India.

THE VICEROY ON INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The following is a summary of the speech with regard to South Africa delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy in opening the winter session of the Indian Legislature in Delhi:

Cause for Most Anxious Thought.

Let me now turn to a question which I know is uppermost in the minds of the members of the Legislature, and which is causing me and my Government most anxious thought. I need not recapitulate the whole situation as regards the position of Indians in South Africa, but I may observe that out of the total number of the Indian community in South Africa, about one-third, approximately 102,000, are South African born, and are the descendants of indentured labourers in Natal, who were permitted to settle in the country on the expiration of their identures. These people have made South Africa their home. I need not refer at length to the disabilities which have been imposed upon Indians in South Africa and are already in existence. They are of a serious and varied nature and embrace galling social disabilities, restrictions on the acquisition of political and municipal franchise, except in the Cape, regulations regarding inter-provincial movements, licensing laws and restrictions on the acquisition of land. There has been continuous progress in legislation in South Africa prejudicial to the position of Indians and tending to make it increasingly difficult for them to prosper or even exist in the Dominion. Against this legislation my Government has made repeated representations with varying degrees of success. In reply to an address recently presented to me by a deputation from South Africa I have dwelt on the representations made by my Government regarding past legislation in some detail and I need not traverse this part of the history again.

Compulsory Segregation.

In addition to these disabilities further anti-Asiatic legislation has been recently introduced and is now pending before the Union Parliament. The purpose of this legislation is to empower urban authorities compulsorily to segregate Indians and to confine their rights of trading and of acquiring property to the limits of the areas assigned to them. The Bill also contains further restrictive provisions regarding the acquiring or leasing of land outside the coastal belt in Natal, immigration, importation of wives and families and inter-provincial movements. The principle of segregation is not new. It was recognised by a Transvaal Act of 1885, but it was rigidly applied. Such locations as arose as a result of that Bill led the Asiatic Committee to condemn the compulsory principle. Indian sentiment has always been strenuously opposed to compulsory segregation as inflicting a racial stigma. It is felt to be a breach of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement and a repudiation of a policy believed to have been established consequent on the recommendations of the Asiatic Enquiry Committee. The principle has been denounced by the Government of India and in Kenya His Majesty's Government have decided that it is not to be applied in townships.

Objectionable Principle.

The Bill, therefore, contains what appears to my Government to be a radically objectionable principle and the existing aversion to this policy has been intensified by the statement of Dr. Malan in introducing the Bill in the Union Assembly last July, when he said that the measure was based on the general proposition that no solution of the question would be acceptable unless it resulted in a very considerable reduction of the Indian population. I and my Government have kept His Majesty's Government in continuous and close touch with our general views regarding the position of Indians in the Union, and this Bill in particular and with the strength of the feeling which the general disabilities imposed on Indians in South Africa and this measure in particular have evoked. We have also made it clear that we fully sympathise with the sentiment which all classes in India have expressed on these questions. Since April last we have been in continuous correspondence with the Government of the Union regarding this legislation and communications are still passing. We have repeatedly pressed upon them the suggestion that the situation in our view calls for a conference as regards their general policy towards Indians. In the alternative we invited them to make other suggestions likely to result in a permanent and satisfactory settlement. The Union Government have not found themselves able to agree to our proposals for a conference although they seemed inclined to agree to a conference restricted to the consideration of a more effective repatriation scheme, which in their words will result in a considerable reduction of the Indian population in South Africa and to proposals for the mitigation of economic competition between Indians and other classes in South Africa and they asked us to formulate concrete suggestions regarding the latter.

DESPATCH OF DEPUTATION TO SOUTH AFRICA.

We could not accept a conference whose main object would be to reduce considerably the numbers of Indians in South Africa. We were, however, prepared to consider the possibility of smoothing any difficulties that may have been found in their existing scheme of purely voluntary repatriation, and to make suggestions regarding vocational employment; when we had sufficient data, but we asked for assent before entering upon any discussion about voluntary repatriation or making suggestions regarding our sending a deputation to South Africa to collect information regarding the economic and general position of Indians in the Union. On November the 10th the Union Government acceded to this request and we forthwith despatched our deputation, the purpose of which has been announced and published. In sending the deputation the immediate object we had in mind was the collecting of information urgently required by us, and we still kept in view the possibility of a conference to which we attach the greatest weight. Some criticism was at first directed in India to the despatch of our deputation. This was chiefly based on the fact that news of the visit of a deputation of Indians from South Africa was received about the same time, but in fact our decision to send a deputation was reached long before the arrival of the first news of the deputation from South Africa, which only came to us in a Reuter's telegram on November 19, just before it sailed. It was obviously desirable for us to take immediate advantage of the assent of the Union Government to the visit of our deputation. We desired in the first place to lose no time in collecting information which would enable us to deal with the suggestions of the Union Government. We were faced, besides, with this critical situation that it was contemplated in South Africa to proceed at an early date in the New Year with this Bill. It was, therefore, essential that we should at once take steps to put ourselves in possession of facts which would enable us to make effective representations before the Bill passed to the second reading stage and became accepted in principle.

VALUABLE INFORMATION.

The interim reports received from the deputation have given us valuable information, and the deputation has collected facts which have been most useful to us in our representations and may assist in suggesting eventually a basis for fresh proposals. We still do not despair of persuading the Union Government that there is the strongest ground for a conference, or in the alternative for an enquiry before further parliamentary steps are taken in regard to the pending legislation. The deputation had to be hurriedly despatched. This was inevitable in the circumstances and I cannot too highly commend the expedition with which the members left India at very short notice and got to work on their task at a crisis when a delay of a few days even was a matter of very great moment.

Dr. Abdur Rahman's deputation is engaged on a different task and is putting the cause of Indians in South Africa before the Government and the people of India on behalf of the section of public opinion in South Africa which it represents. Its purpose is not therefore identical with the object of ours. Moreover the deputation from South Africa has been able to supply me and my Government with facts of considerable importance and to explain points which, in the absence of local information, may previously have been imperfectly appreciated or understood. The whole question at the moment is at the stage of negotiation. Bear in mind that in our attitude towards the position of Indians in South Africa and to the principle of the latest legislation, I and my Government are at one with the general feeling in India. You may have confidence that we are striving our utmost to find a basis of discussion with the Union Government before the latter are committed to the principle of the bill.

DOMESTIC OR IMPERIAL?

The question has now to be dealt with in South Africa and it must be remembered that the Government and the Ministry of the Union are responsible to their electorate, and that the legislation is regarded by them as domestic in its character. We have never doubted the right of South Africa to guide the course of their own domestic and economic legislation, but in our view there are far wider considerations involved in this legislation than local economic policy alone. In our opinion they have an important bearing upon the Empire as a whole. The proposed measures are not in our view in accordance with those principles which bind the Empire together in a community of sentiment, and we hope that this aspect of the proposals may yet commend itself to South African opinion. Even on the narrower issue of economic necessity we believe from the information now recieved by us that the situation may be capable of adjustment in other ways. Our negotiations are still proceeding, and we shall continue to press our views to the utmost of our ability. We cannot say whether we shall succeed in our endeavours, but I hope that a cause which, as it appears to us, has reason and equity on its side will ultimately prevail. Meanwhile I rely on the legislature to give me and my Government their confidence and support in a question upon which they are aware that our sentiments are agreed, and especially to remember, as I gratefully acknowledge they have hitherto borne in mind, that we are still in the course of negotiation with the Government of the Union, in whose hands the initiative in conducting their own legislative programme lies. The principle of the bill has not yet been finally accepted and I hope that a basis of discussion with the Union Government may be arrived at which will give an opportunity of stating and proving our case before any question arises of proceeding with this stage of the legislation.

BOMBAY'S INDIGNANT PROTEST AGAINST THE PROPOSED SOUTH AFRICAN ANTI-ASIATIC LEGISLATION.

A large and influential meeting of Bombay citizens was held at the Excelsior Theatre on the 16th instant

under the joint auspices of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, the Central Khilafat Committee, the Swaraj Party, the Bombay Muslim League, the National Municipal Party, the Rashtriya Sabha, the Parsi Rajkiya Sabha, the National Home Rule League, the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, the Bombay Progressive Association, the Bombay Presidency Association, and other Associations. His Highness the Aga Khan presided. The theatre was quickly filled, and when the proceedings commenced it was difficult to find even standing room. People with long memories were heard to say, after the meeting, that there has not been a parallel demonstration of the kind held in the city during the last ten years. In spite of its huge size, however, the audience maintained a most admirable order throughout the meeting which lasted nearly two hours and a half.

On the platform were seated leaders of different political associations and commercial organisations,—a fact which did not escape the notice of the audience and impressed every one with the great issues involved.

The proceedings began by the Hon. Mr. Ratansi Morarji voting His Highness the Agha Khan to the chair. Mr. Morarji said that His Highness was not only very well-known all over India, but he also occupied a unique position in the political world abroad. The speaker therefore thought that the promoters of the meeting were very fortunate in having been able to secure His Highness as the Chairman of the meeting.

The motion was seconded by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy.

His Highness the Aga Khan then took the chair amidst applause.

Messages of Sympathy.

Mr. J. B. Petit, the Honorary Secretary of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, read out the telegram received from Sir Dinshaw Petit, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, the South African Indian Congress and the Cape British Indian Association sympathising with the objects of the meeting.

Forty Years of Humiliation.

On rising to address the meeting, His Highness was received with loud cheers. He said:

It is thirty years since I first had the honour of presiding at a meeting of my countrymen to protest against the treatment of Indians in South Africa. I should be sorry indeed if I had to try and remember how many public meetings in this town and in other places in India, in the Caxton Hall, how many Committee meetings of the Indian Overseas Association in England, how many private consultations with Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, Bowngaree, H. Wadia, Sapru and Messrs. Gokhale and Polak and others, I have attended during these last thirty years. Looking back it seems to me one long and unending series. Nor can I forget that when in 1896 I first attended a meeting of this description,—this was already more than a decade,—it had been agitating the minds of our settlers in Africa and thinkers in this country.

Ladies and Gentlemen, the simple and dull statements of biographical facts are to my mind more eloquent than any words at my command to describe what our people have gone through in that part of the world. It means forty years of humiliations inflicted upon them, of harassing legislation and ordinances, of offensive rules and regulations, of constant pin-pricks and of many bludgeon blows, borne with characteristic patience, with forbearance, with fortitude, and these forty years have seen also on the part of the leaders of the Indians in South Africa and of the leading Indians in this country the succession of concessions of the so-called compromisers to give up the inherent rights for the sake of peace and in order to save the small number of our people out there from total ruin and the final destruction of their self-respect. Not only the claims of a common Imperial citizenship, not only the respect with their willing services to the cause of the development of South Africa, but many promises have been forgotten.

I need not now remind you of the heroic struggle carried on by Mahatma Gandhi in 1906, which lasted till 1914, of the Borough and Township Franchise Ordinances, of the Licensing Ordinances, and of the social and political humiliations which have been heaped on our people.

Gentlemen, you will soon hear from the representatives of our countrymen out there the disastrous effects of the now proposed legislation.

I hope I am not giving away a secret but I understand that Mr Petit is moving the Imperial Citizenship Association of which he is Honorary Secretary, to contribute Rs. 50,000 to the fund which the South African Deputation proposes to raise in this country to help them.

Ladies and Gentlemen, some twenty years ago I had the honour of presiding at a meeting of the citizens of this city in the Town Hall and of those who then addressed that meeting, I think there are but two now alive who will address you to-day, namely Mr. Baptista and myself.

I then urged immediate steps towards retaliation and reciprocity. But now to-day and on this occasion, and speaking as man to man, I want to make one final, and I hope not unfriendly, appeal to the leaders of South Africa. Before it is too late they should not finally close the doors of understanding and conciliation in our face.

The Smuts-Gandhi Agreement.

I appeal to them first of all that the great concessions made by Indians in the well-known Smuts-Gandhi Agreement should be accepted as final in the letter and in the spirit and that nothing should be done to go back on the Agreement. I appeal to the many right-thinking men in South Africa to whom Mr. Andrews has referred in his despatches to use all their influence that the spirit of that Agreement should be for ever kept alive. The overwhelming majority of the Indians in South Africa are African-born or natives of that country or are descendants of those who worked for Africa and they themselves work for the common welfare and development of that vast Dominion. Many were brought to labour on a mere pittance so that the capitalist Whites should prosper. I appeal to them to remember that the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement and the many present laws and restrictions make White domination in South Africa a certainty and that there is no real danger to their narrow ideas from our competition, which is in fact co-operation towards the economic development of that country. I appeal to the conscience of the White races out there and I should like to put a few definite questions to them. Do the statistics prove that the Indian is a law-breaker, a criminal? Certainly not. Is he an

realpatidar.com

anarchist, a revolutionary, a bomb-thrower? No. Is the Indian the owner of the dram-shop, of the house of ill fame, of the gambling-hole? No.

A United India in South Africa.

We are told by historians that the Arab dominions came to grief because they took good care to take with them the family feud of the desert beyond the Pyranees and as far as the great Wall of China.

Has the Indian taken his unseemly Hindu-Muslim squabbles, his caste and sectarian bickerings to South Africa? Certainly not. Out there and beyond the seas the instinctive common-sense of the Indian has asserted itself, and within the smaller India outside we do find United India.

Well then, gentlemen, let us take another series of accusations. We are accused of the sanitary dangers from our customs and habits. Has the Indian been the champion of conscientious objection to vaccination in South Africa? Has he objected to inoculation against plague or has he by his careless use of water helped malaria? Certainly not.

Is he a debaucher or drunkard? Most certainly not. Throughout that continent he has shown his qualities of patience, hard work, simple and innocent domestic enjoyment, and if in some ways his standard has not been that of the European, it is because as labourer he was not protected and was forced for the welfare of his master to accept wages which reduced him below the White standard.

One Final Appeal Before it is too Late.

Ladies and Gentlemen, once more I make this final appeal to the conscience of the White men out there not to forget our common Empire, our membership of the League of Nations, our common humanity, the earnest pleadings of Sapru during the last Imperial Conference, the many friendly concessions of Gokhale and Gandhi, and above all the loyal co-operation in the daily business of life for more than fifty years of the Indians of South Africa, and to voluntarily and graciously drop this needless and humiliating Bill.

Final "Round-up" of Indians in South Africa.

Dr Abdul Rahman next addressed the meeting on the present situation. After thanking the public of Bombay for the very cordial welcome accorded to the South African deputation and expressing his indebtedness to the Press for the publicity given to their cause and the manner in which their grievances were espoused, he expressed gratification at the bold stand taken by the Congress, the Muslim League and other Associations in India towards the sad plight of her countrymen and women in South Africa. He analysed the disabilities of Indians settled in that country and outlined the implications of the various pieces of legislation passed against them. South Africa, he proceeded, consisted of four provinces—the Cape Province, the Orange Free State, Transvaal and Natal with an aggregate White population of over ten millions and an Indian population of 160,000 only. In the Cape Province, the Indians lived mostly in the towns, more than one-half of them in Cape Town, and they had all gone there as free men and not under any system of indentured labour. But in the other provinces, particularly in the Orange Free State, miscalled a Free State but actually a slave State of the British Empire, no one, whether he was an Indian or a coloured man, was permitted to live except under certain prohibitive conditions. They were rigidly excluded and such of them as continued there could only do so as long as they continued to remain in the service of the White men. In the Transvaal, there were 15,000 Indians, free men, who did not go there under any system of indenture, and were mostly traders or in the service of the White men. In Natal, they had 140,000 Indians, most of whom went there as labourers from India in response to a very urgent appeal made by the Government of Natal to the Government of India to ship labourers out there to save the colony from bankruptcy and ruin. The Indians had transformed that colony into a prosperous condition it now held, and it was called the Garden Colony of South Africa.

What Indians Have Done For the Colony.

Dr. Abdul Rahman declared that what the Indians had done for the Colony neither the Whites nor the natives could do.

Continuing, he said, the Indian settlers, after serving their indenture, settled down there and by dint of hard labour, thrift and enterprise grew to be prosperous, so that to-day in Natal the Indians constituted a very important proportion of the population of the Colony. They fell under three groups, namely, traders, agriculturists, and the Colonial-born Indians, who though not quite as good agriculturists as their forefathers, had, nevertheless, built up a position of importance in South Africa. He said that the whole South African position, put in a nut-shell amounted to this, namely, that, except in the Cape Province, the Indian was virtually a political helot and he had no representation in Parliament or in the legislatures of the country or in any other local body.

It was a long drawn-out struggle which the Indians waged during the past quarter of a century or over for their rights and liberties, and matters had now reached a climax in the introduction of the Class Areas Bill which not merely sought to impose iniquitous restrictions upon them, but bade fair to bring about their total extermination from that country.

Dr. Abdul Rahman pointed out that the members of the deputation and other Indian leaders of the community had done everything possible to bring about some settlement before the deputation left South Africa. They had waited on the Minister responsible for the Bill and appealed to him to withdraw it and call for a round table conference consisting of representatives of the Indian people, the representatives of the Union of South Africa and the representatives of the Imperial Government. The Union Government had spurned this offer.

Implications of the Bill.

Dr. Abdul Rahman next dealt with the implications of the Bill which, he declared, struck at the very root of the existence of Indians in South Africa. He quoted examples to show in what way the different clauses of the Bill would affect them. For instance, an Indian dared not purchase or lease immovable properties either in the towns or in other proclaimed areas. The effect was that with the passing of the Bill and the proclaiming of areas, no Indian in South Africa to-day would be permitted to buy an inch of ground outside those areas. What was worse, if an Indian, who was fortunate enough to possess immovable properties in those estricted areas, happened to possess no progeny, his and would be sold to the Whites. Another clause laid down that no new trading licenses would be given to Indians to trade outside the proclaimed areas, nor the old licenses be renewed. The effect of all this, said the speaker, was that no Indian would be permitted to trade whatsoever. All new licenses would be sold to the Europeans at whatever price. As for the Indians who held properties or leases of properties, these would cease to be theirs either on the death of the property-holder or on the expiry of the lease. He quoted the opinions of the Chief Justice of Natal who had severely criticised the ethics underlying the system of segregation. The other offensive clause dealt with the agricultural population of Natal. There a thirty-miles belt had been proclaimed and no Indian could acquire immovable property outside this belt.

He said the whole intention and purport of the Bill was to crush the Indian trader outside the segregated areas and reduce them to a state of serfdom. The law made no provision for compensation for loss and deprivation of properties owned or leased by Indians.

A Negation of Smuts-Gandhi Agreement.

The Bill was a complete negation of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement. The provisions of the new Bill were not only absurd, but simply inhuman, for one clause laid down that if an Indian failed to bring his wife to the Colony within five years of his marriage, he would not be able to bring her at all (Cries of shame). The same clause applied to children as well.

Dr. Abdul Rahman referred to another bill which was in process of being placed on the Statute Book. According to it no Indian or native would be permitted to be in charge of any machinery. This was intended, he said, to keep the Indian engineer out of job.

He emphasized the fact that all these laws were intended to have the cumulative effect of hounding the Indians out of the land or else reduce them to abject slavery. That was the prospect before the South African Indians at the present moment.

With the loss of Parliamentary and Municipal franchise and the deprivation of all other rights of citizenship, it would end in a final "round up" of all Indians residing there. The prospect reminded the speaker of a wild hunt, where the animals were chased into the hills and the only escape was the relentless seas behind them. Moreover, the racial stigma which the Bill sought to inflict was keenly resented by every Indian. The Indians did not claim that they were superior to the White, but the fact remained that the Europeans had yet to show that they were in any way superior to them.

Appeal for India's Support.

The prospect before the Indians was no doubt gloomy, but the settlers were determined to fight to the last ditch. But they wanted the moral support of the people of their Motherland to stand by them in their struggle, because they were not fighting their own battle, but for the fair fame of India. They were like soldiers in the battle, and looked forward to their Motherland for generalship. But if India was to give no help they were going to stand their test in the final act in the long-drawn-out struggle to uphold the good name of India. (Prolonged cheers).

History of Broken Pledges, Insults and Humiliations.

The Chairman called upon Sir Chimanlal Setalwad to move the principal resolution, which read :—

(a) "That this meeting of the citizens of Bombay held under the joint auspices of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, the Central Khilafat Committee, the Bombay Swaraj Party, the Bombay Muslim League, the National Municipal Party, the Rashtriya Stree Sabha, the Home Rule League, Parsi Rajkiya Sabha, National Home Rule League, British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, the Bombay Progressive Association, and other Associations, views with the gravest apprehension, and enters its emphatic protest against, the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill, which is in violation of the 1914 Gandhi-Smuts Agreement, and has for its object the compulsory segregation of Indians, the deprivation of their trading and proprietary rights, and the ultimate elimination of the Indian community, as openly declared by Dr. Malan, Minister of the Interior.

(b) This meeting earnestly requests the Government of India to urge upon the Union Government the necessity of a round table conference before any further action is taken by the Union Government in respect of the proposed Bill ; and should their reasonable proposal be declined and the Bill forced through the Union Parliament, this meeting appeals to his Excellency the Viceroy to advise the Imperial Government to disallow the measure under section 65 of the South African Act."

In moving the resolution, Sir Chimanlal Setalwad said that the treatment of Indians in South Africa had been for many long years the history of broken pledges, plighted words and a series of insults and humiliations with the express and avowed object of squeezing the Indians out of South Africa. He recalled the period when the treatment of Indians was one of the contributory causes of the Boer War. When the Transvaal Republic was under President Kruger a legislation was introduced which provided for residential segregation of Indians Even President Kruger did not attempt commercial segregation. When the Boer War was declared, Lord Lansdowne mentioned that the treatment of Indians was one of the causes of the War. The speaker read out from Lord Lansdowne's speeches where the principle of residential segregation was condemned in unequivocal terms. Then came peace between the Boers and the British and it was hoped then that the policy of segregation would be a thing of the past, but, looking to the recent happenings since the declaration of peace and the establishment of the Union Government, it was no exaggeration to say that the South African Government had broken all their pledges. The inevitable effect of the new legislation, to protest against which the deputation had come over to India, must be to drive them out of South Africa. But what made their blood boil was the fact that such a treatment was made possible within the British Empire.

A Note of Warning.

Memories were short, otherwise those who were responsible for or condoned the present humiliating treatment of Indians in South Africa ought to realise that they were heaping coals on those very people who came

realpatidar.com

to the timely rescue of the Empire at a most crucial moment in her history. Have they forgotten the battle of the Marne? If India, which stood steadfastly by the Empire in her sorest trial, was going to be treated in this manner, and if the Imperial Government would not respond to their appeals for the barest justice, if these inhuman things could possibly happen under the British Empire, the speaker said he had his own serious misgivings about the future of the British Empire.

Sir Chimanlal concluded by warning the South African Government and its Ministers to take heed before things took a more serious turn and, if there was any statesmanship yet left in them, to set right the evil by vetoing the bill.

"Do Not Yield".

Mr. M. A. Jinnah, in seconding the resolution, said that the subject had passed the stage of discussion and debate. The matter had not been attempted to be treated as a subject that could be discussed on its merits by the Minister of the Interior who had from the beginning frankly told them that the Indians as a race formed an alien element. Not only this, but the Minister saw no other solution to the question except the one which would result in a very considerable reduction of the Indian population in South Africa. The whole object of the present Bill was meant to eliminate our countrymen, and thus carry out the recommendations of the Asiatic Enquiry Commission.

Commercial and Residential Segregation.

Mr. Jinnah pointed out that the provisions of the bill were intended to bring about commercial, residential and land segregation. The conclusion was obvious. The Union Government was trying to drive out the Indians. He referred to the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement which contained a most vital clause safeguarding the vested rights enjoyed by those Indians residing in South Africa. The Minister at the time had given a promise on behalf of the Government that they would always continue to administer the existing laws so far as it related to vested rights. But what do we find to-day?, asked the speaker. An additional law is being enacted before the Union Parliament to segregate the community commercially, residentially and with regard to land.

Mr. Jinnah said he had read in the past of some Czars who were capable of such inhuman deprivation of property, but here they had a member of the British Commonwealth trying to legislate for the complete destruction of the vested rights of the Indian subjects within the Commonwealth. That was the situation, and although they were indignant and grieved, he felt that they were helpless to redress their wrongs.

Lord Readings's Reply to Deputation.

Referring to Lord Reading's reply to the deputation which waited on him, Mr. Jinnah said that he did not consider it a full and real statement of the Indian position. The Viceroy had stated that he fully understood the depth of the Indian feeling with regard to the bill, but he told the deputation to remember that the issue was now in South Africa. South Africa was a Dominion and its Parliament had full power to pass legislation regarding its internal affairs. Mr. Jinnah said that he most emphatically protested against that statement (cheers). When the Union Government Act was passed a section was deliberately provided in the Statute under which his Majesty had power to disallow any measure that the Union Government might propose. He wished to know whether that was not the time to veto a bill, which was calculated to deprive the Indians of their property. He urged the Viceroy to reconsider the position and ask the Imperial Government to disallow the bill.

Mr. Jinnah next took exception to the Viceroy saying that they could not interfere in the "domestic affairs" of another Government. He wanted to know whether protection of a number of their British subjects from an illegal piece of legislation was interfering with "domestic affairs." The situation was a grave one. He could only say this: that the case of the South African Indians was morally and legally and in every other respect a just one. He assured the deputation that the country would help them to keep the fair name of India (cheers). He added: "Do not yield, do not yield even your elementary rights." (Loud cheers).

Ignoble Attempt to Go Back Upon Smuts-Gandhi Agreement.

Sir Stanley Reed, supporting the resolution, said that there was one question on which there was absolutely no division of opinion and that was they were determined to secure to every Indian abroad the full rights of citizenship. The Class Areas Bill, he thought, was an ignoble attempt to go back on the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement which secured full development for Indians in South Africa. It gave him great pleasure to support the resolution, because he felt Indians had a right, wherever they might live, to avail themselves of every opportunity of reaching their full social and economic stature. It appeared to him that the policy now threatened by the Union Government had a far-reaching effect, in that it not only hit their countrymen socially and economically, but it went even beyond this by threatening to strike at the root of civilization itself. (Cheers). If his reading of history had taught him one lesson, it was that no Government could thrive on injustice in which all civilizations must inevitably rest. For these reasons he seconded the resolution and commended it to their unqualified support. (Loud cheers).

A Desperate Situation.

This resolution was further supported by Mr. H. P. Mody who said that they had held numberless meetings and sent various despatches and deputations, and framed petitions and protests. All these practically proved to no purpose. The situation had steadily grown worse and they were faced with a position in which the honour of their countrymen was threatened and their existence made intolerable.

Proceeding, the speaker said that he for one was not surprised at it. On the one side was a country which believed that its economic life was threatened by the existence of a frugal and industrious population, and which was determined to hound them out of the country regardless of all ethical or political considerations. On the other, was a dependency which had just learned to open its voice and which, in spite of its representatives at Imperial Conferences and the "League of Nations" sittings, had no more influence on international relations than a third class Indian State. On the one hand there was a Government determined to protect its Nationals against even a fair and open competition; on the other, there was a Government which was indifferent even to the most unfair and insidious competition and which looked placidly on, while countries with depreciated exchanges and sweated labour benefited our markets and pushed our goods out.

The Imperial Government, while it was supremely indifferent, was supremely impotent and would not and

dared not impose its will on the Government and people of South Africa.

Concluding Mr. Mody said: "The situation therefore is desperate and I do not see what else was left to us but retaliation if this last effort at settlement by negotiation fails. Even if its scope is limited, the moral effect would be considerable. If, in the result, the lot of our countrymen in South Africa is made more difficult, I hope India will stand by them and give them all the moral and material assistance they will need in the hour of trial. They have played their part worthily in this great struggle. Let us make them feel that the part we play is no less worthy."

The resolution was unanimously carried.

Beginning of a Great War.

Mr. J. B. Petit moved the following resolution:—

"That this meeting further urges that the Government of India should at the earliest possible opportunity, in consultation with the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State, send a strong deputation to England consisting of Indian leaders of all parties, including representatives of the South African Indian Congress, to place before the British Cabinet, Parliament and public the grave consequences of the Anti-Indian policy of the South African Union Government as illustrated by the Asiatic Bill."

He said that India had always refused and would always refuse to assume that the question of treatment of Indians in South Africa or for the matter of that in any colony was purely a matter of internal management. He declared that this country would insist on maintaining that this problem of Indians in South Africa was very important and could not be dealt with in a rough and ready manner.

Mr. Petit said it was the consensus of opinion among all parties that a representative deputation should be selected by the two Houses of Legislature of this country to be sent to England at the earliest possible moment in order that the intensity of the feelings and the depth of their resentment could be placed before the British Parliament, Government and the public.

He desired this deputation to go and tell the British public that the patience of the Indian people was exhausted, that the South African policy was not merely a wanton insult to the South African Indians, but to humanity. Not only this, but to tell them that if the present policy was carried to its logical conclusion, the South African Indians would have to turn out even Jesus who was born an Asiatic. (Laughter).

Concluding Mr. Petit said the time had arrived when the British public should be told that this country was determined to fight to a man this iniquitous Bill. "We wish to tell them in unequivocal language that this is the beginning of a great war—a war which is going to be mightier than even the war of 1914. It is going to be a war between the entire White races on the one side and the coloured nations on the other. We feel that our cause is just and righteous."

A Lawless Law.

Mr. Bhulabhai J. Desai in supporting the resolution observed that it was really puerile from the point of view of International Law to say that because a majority had an overwhelming voice in the Legislature, therefore the minorities must be deprived of any vestige of property. It was nothing short of a lawless law. The speaker thought that when they found a race was conceited, was lost to its sense of justice, when it failed to recognise that there was anything wrong in what it was doing, the limit was reached and called for strong concerted action. He thought the present crisis was the beginning of the end of the struggle. He quoted the historian Seeley to show that when a nation became arrogant and dealt in injustice, that nation was doomed

The resolution, on being put to the vote, was carried.

Tale of Indignities.

Mr. Joseph Baptista moved:—

"That this meeting authorizes the Secretaries to forward resolutions Nos. 2 and 3 to the Government of India."

Mr. Baptista referred to the conflict between the White and the coloured races, which, he said, had grown worse. The Indians had suffered and were suffering a great deal at the hands of South Africans in spite of the fair promises of British Ministers. The tale of indignities told by Dr Abdul Rahman made his blood boil. But now matters were getting worse as the anti-Asiatic legislation clearly showed. But the speaker was proud to find such leaders as Dr. Abdul Rahman in South Africa, who, he was convinced, would put a stiff fight for the outraged honour of Indians.

Mr. Lalji Naranji supported the motion, which was carried.

Episode of Humiliation.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar next moved:—

"That this meeting pledges itself whole-heartedly to support the Indians in South Africa morally as well as financially in their just, noble and honourable struggle against the consolidated forces which threaten their existence in that part of the British Empire."

Mr. Jayakar said that the resolution entrusted to him called upon this meeting to support the Indians in South Africa in their struggle. A number of speeches had already been made which clearly indicated the nature of the struggle He did not wish to tire the audience with a long speech at that hour. He only wished to say that the moral significance of this struggle was very great because on its success or otherwise would depend the claims of England to establish a Commonwealth consisting of various races and creeds, all sharing the burdens of a united Commonwealth. It was to his mind a rather difficult experiment because one nation alone had tried it in previous times and failed. It now remained to see whether England would now succeed in this experiment and the test of its success or failure was largely involved in the way in which the claims of Indians in South Africa were met.

The speaker continuing said that he should have thought that having regard to this essential element of the struggle, Englishmen would be more anxious that it should succeed than Indians would be, because the onus of making this experiment a success would lie more upon the Englishmen than upon anybody else.

The story of the Indian struggle in South Africa, he said, was one continuous episode of humiliation after humiliation. There were very few redeeming features in it and there were many people in India and outside who were watching the result of this struggle, as proving the important moral whether it was possible for a White and coloured people to share the privileges of a United Empire.

Concluding Mr. Jayakar said that the deputation must make it clear that if they did not get justice in this case, the country and its people would have lost their faith in British justice and the loss would be England's. Nay, even more, England would lose this country. (Cheers).

The motion was seconded by Mirza Ali Mahomed Khan and supported by Mr. Meyer Nissim.

A section of the meeting insisted on Mr. B. G. Horniman addressing the meeting. The Chairman permitted him to do so.

In supporting Mr. Jayakar's motion, Mr. Horniman said he was glad to find that all political parties had united to fight against a measure which affected them all. He wished that the same spirit actuated them always, for then the realisation of Swaraj would become an accomplished fact. Speaking on the subject matter itself, Mr. Horniman said that every one in this country should do everything possible to help the South African Indians in their struggle.

A cordial vote of thanks, proposed by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu and seconded by Mr. K. Natarajan was carried with acclamation. The meeting then dissolved.

referred to the outstanding landmarks in Swami Vivekananda's life. He showed how the Swami strove both by his teachings and writings for bringing about a happy blending of the East and West, and how his immortal work in Europe and America bore eloquent testimony to his efforts at a spiritual revival of the world. The President, in a brief speech, laid stress on the central idea of the Swami's teachings, which was self-realisation. This could only be possible for those who imbibed the spirit of the Swami's teachings and practised them in their everyday life. A life of service must be inspired by a sense of selflessness, without seeking reward or praise. It was in this way, and in this way alone, they could hope to realise the divinity in themselves.

Calcutta Corporation's Retaliation Against South Africa: The question of the treatment meted out to the Indian community resident in the Union of South Africa by the White settlers was discussed at a meeting of the Calcutta Corporation on the 13th instant and the following resolution was adopted: That in view of the attitude systematically adopted for some time past, by the Government of the Union of South Africa and of the various local authorities dominated by the White settlers, towards the Indian community resident in the Union, who have been unjustly deprived of their political, municipal and trading rights, and against whom measures have been taken imposing conditions of gross racial humiliation and severe financial loss, it is resolved (a) that all the White persons born or domiciled in any of the countries forming part of the Union of South Africa shall be debarred from obtaining any employment under or from entering into any contract with the Corporation of Calcutta, and (b) that the goods produced or manufactured anywhere within the said Union shall not be purchased or received for value by the Corporation of Calcutta. It was also resolved that the Government be requested to take steps to amend the Municipal Act disfranchising the South Africans in Calcutta.

No More War Movement: We give below a resolution passed by the Second Annual Conference of the Youth Section of the "No More War Movement," held in London in December 1925: "The National Conference of the Youth Section of the No More War Movement sends its fraternal greetings to the Youth in all countries who are striving for peace, and assures them of its earnest desire to work with them against all forms of war and militarism and for the development of a new social life based on mutual service and the free expression of human personality. It re-affirms its belief that individual refusal of all forms of war service is the most effective method of combatting war and calls upon Youth throughout the world to adopt this policy. To those in Denmark, Scandinavia, Belgium, Checho-Slovakia, Yugo-Slovakia, Roumania, Finland, Poland, Holland, and elsewhere who are at present in prison for refusing military service, it sends its sincere greetings and assures them of its solidarity with them in the splendid stand they are making, a stand which cannot fail to bring nearer the day of universal peace".

Mr. Horniman: Mr. B. G. Horniman who was allowed to return to India, has assumed charge of the Bombay Chronicle.

Sex-Bar Removal in the Punjab: Following in the wake of the other provinces, the Punjab Legislative Council passed a resolution at its last session for the removal of sex-disqualification so that the women of the Province may have full freedom to exercise the franchise. Apropos that resolution recommending that sex-disqualification for registration on the electoral rolls of constituencies of the Punjab Legislative Council should be removed in respect of women generally, it is notified, in the current issue of The Punjab Gazette, that the Governor-in-Council has made a regulation that, notwithstanding anything contained in Clause (B) of Sub-Rule 1 of Rule 7 of the Punjab Electoral Rules, no woman, who is not otherwise disqualified for registration as an elector for the Punjab Legislative Council, shall by reason only of her sex be disqualified for registration on the electoral roll of any constituency of the said Council.

Standing Finance Committee Rejects grant for Paddison Deputation: The Indian members of the Standing Finance Committee which recently held its sitting at Delhi objected to the item of Rs. 75,000 towards the expenses of the Paddison Deputation to South Africa on the ground that there was no information which the Deputation would collect that was not already in possession of the Government and the public or that could not be obtained otherwise than by a Deputation. The item was thereupon withdrawn.

Assembly to discuss South African Question: The South African issue will be raised in the Legislative Assembly by a substantial motion on the 28th instant. Mr. Gayaparsad Singh will move the following comprehensive resolution suggesting retaliation against South Africa: "This Assembly recommends to the Governor-General-in-Council that, as a retaliative measure against the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration Further Provision Bill, otherwise known as the Class Areas Bill, introduced in the South African Union Parliament, he may be pleased to take early and necessary steps (a) to impose on non-Indian South [illegible] in India reciprocal restrictions and disabilities in respect of the [illegible] both political and municipal, eligibility for public service and the rights to hold properties and trade, mining and navigation licenses, (b) to deprive non-Indian South African colonials in India of the special privileges accorded to them in criminal trials and (c) to impose a prohibitive import duty on South African coal and offer adequate facilities to Indian coal in the way of transport and otherwise."

Senator Reid and Mr. Sastri Congratulated: Dr. Besant brought together a distinguished international gathering at Madras to congratulate Senator Reid of Australia and the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri on the passage of the Bill through the Parliament of Australia which places Indians resident in Australia on a footing of equality with the citizens of Australia itself. Mr. Sastri in the course of his speech emphasised that retaliation was no remedy for South Africa.

Resolution Disallowed: It is understood that the Viceroy has disallowed Sir Sivaswamy Iyer's resolution urging Government not to signify acceptance of the Locarno Security Pact until it is approved by the Legislative Assembly on the ground that it relates to the relations of His Majesty with foreign States.

NOTES

The University Seat in the Bombay Legislative Council: Mr. M. R. Jayakar was elected to represent the Bombay University in the Provincial Legislative Council at the last General Elections, as a Swarajist, defeating Dr. R. P. Paranjpye who sat in the first reformed Council for the University and held office as Minister of Education. Before the expiry of his term next October, Mr. Jayakar, on account of differences with the majority of his party regarding the policy of continuous obstruction which, from his experience, he regarded as harmful to the best interests of the country, resigned his seat along with Mr. N. C. Kelkar who was Deputy Leader of the Swaraj Party in the Legislative Assembly at Delhi. Although pressed to do so by many of his friends, and assured of success, Mr. Jayakar, for the purpose of being free to devote his whole attention to the propaganda in favour of Responsive Co-operation, resolved not to stand for re-election. Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, therefore, stands as a Liberal for election to the University seat. His rival in the interests of the Swaraj Party is Dr. G. V. Deshmukh, an eminent medical practitioner, who has not so long taken an active part in politics. The voting takes place on Tuesday. The essential difference between the Swarajists and the Liberals to-day is that while the former believe in civil disobedience as the ultimate goal of their agitation, the Liberals are constitutional reformers who would utilise the present reforms as the means of further reforms. The former in consonance with their policy refuse to accept office, while the latter hold that without accepting office it is impossible to test the maximum efficacy of the reforms. Holding as we do that the constitutional method is the only practicable method of progress in India, and that the civil disobedience method is sure to land the country into a civil war the end of which no man can foresee, we strongly favour Dr. Paranjpye's candidature. The large majority of educated Indians have no faith in civil disobedience, and may be expected to return Dr. Paranjpye to the Council by a large majority.

The Amir's Broad-mindedness: Afghanistan has been the home of religious intolerance and persecutions. The punishment to which members of the Ahmadiyya sect were subjected for holding "heretic" opinions on religion, is only too well-known. It is, therefore, with much satisfaction that we turn to some observations made by His Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan, which show him to be an enlightened and broad-minded ruler, free from the sectarian spirit which reigns supreme in Afghanistan. A certain Naibul-Hukumat (Government official) wanted that he should be permitted to kill persons accused of mischief, (presumably referring to the Ahmadiyyas) and to offer rewards for the conversion of Hindus to Islam. To both these requests, the Amir has returned an emphatic 'no'. Referring to the conversion of Hindus to Islam, His Majesty, like a true Muslim, is said to have remarked: "Conversion to Islam should not be for the sake of money. If any one embraces Islam it should be for the sake of its doctrines and creeds, and no reward is required in this case." The Amir is also a strong advocate of inter-communal unity. In a speech at Kandahar, he is reported to have said: "Hitherto schools for traders, Persian-speaking people and Hindus have been separated. This separation causes disunion in the nation. Everyone who lives in the land of Afghanistan is an Afghan, irrespective of the religion he professes or the sect or class to which he belongs, and there is no distinction among Afghans...A separate school should not be maintained for people of various religions and classes or sects." Although this bold action of the Amir is likely to meet with strong opposition from the die-hard elements, the wisdom of this step in the long run cannot be doubted.

The Tamil University: Universities on a linguistic basis are everywhere on the increase. The resolution passed by the Madras University Senate in 1920 that the time had come for providing, as far as possible, at least one University for each principal linguistic area within the Presidency, has given a momentum to the multiplication of Universities. The Andhra University Bill, which has been finally passed by the Madras Legislative Council, is the first attempt in this direction. It is but natural that Tamil Nadu also should follow suit. Sir Sivagnanam Pillai, the present Development Minister, may be said to be the sponsor of the scheme of the Tamil University, and it is but fitting that he should have delivered the Presidential address at the Tamil University Conference held recently at Trichinopoly. There is, indeed, some force in the objection that there is no need for a separate Tamil University after the withdrawal of the Andhra and Kerala elements from the Madras University, but, as the Hon. Minister pointed out, the University in Madras must offer equal attractions and afford equal opportunities for all people of all languages and is, therefore, not in a position to cater to the special needs of the

Tamil population. Granted the necessity for a Tamil University, two other possible objections to the scheme may be urged, namely, that Tamil will not serve as a self-contained cultural language equally well with English, and that it will not serve the modern requirements of higher education. Both these objections, however, the Hon. Minister disposed of very easily. He quoted at length from both languages to show that the best passages of outstanding literary merit in English have their parallels in Tamil literature. Then, again, Tamil, throughout all the reverses that India has undergone, has shown a wonderful power of adaptability. The Hon. Minister is convinced that a powerful organization well-financed and well-manned will render into Tamil all the scientific books required for use and that what has been possible for Urdu in the case of the Osmania University, Hyderabad, will be possible for Tamil as well. The scheme is estimated to cost twenty lakhs of rupees, but the Hon. Minister does not despair of finding that sum in a short time with the help of Government, Municipal and Local bodies and the public.

China and the Soviet: What threatened to be a big war between China and Russia has happily terminated without any untoward consequences. Hitherto trouble in China was confined to the rival Tuchuns, but this time, however, a first-class European power was involved. Ever since 1919, the Soviets have found in China a congenial soil for their Bolshevik propaganda and Russia has even foregone her extra-territorial rights and trade concessions in proof of her friendship to China. Chang-Tsolin, the Manchurian war-lord, however, remained impervious to Bolshevik influence. The present trouble arose over the arrest of Ivanoff, the Soviet General Manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway, by the Manchurian war-lord. This gave rise to the question of the control of the Railway. Though the Railway was built and financed by the Chinese, the Peking Government had recognised Russian rights and control over it. The Russian Government, therefore, gave an ultimatum to Chang-Tsolin to release Ivanoff and to restore order. The Peking Government, though friendly to Russia, was powerless to do anything in the matter. The situation was critical and it was not known what action Russia would take in the event of Chang-Tsolin's refusal to abide by the ultimatum. Meanwhile Japan was closely watching the events and, as she had powerful rights to protect in Manchuria, the Soviet ultimatum constituted more or less a challenge to her. Fortunately, however, Chang-Tsolin has released Ivanoff and other arrested persons and the situation has been a little eased.

A Praiseworthy Example: The action of Srimathi Uma Nehru in refusing nomination to the Allahabad Municipal Board after being defeated at the polls, is as courageous as it is praiseworthy. Not infrequently, candidates who have been rejected by the electorate find their way to the Councils and Municipal bodies by the back door of nomination. It need hardly be said that this strikes at the fundamental principle of representative government. The public are only too well aware of the adjournment motion recently brought in the Madras Legislative Council by a Swarajist member against this abuse of the powers of nomination by the Madras Government in the case of Rao Bahadur O. Thanikachalam Chetty, ex-President of the Madras Corporation, who sustained a severe defeat at the recent Municipal elections. All self-respecting men and women seeking election for the Councils and the Municipal bodies would do well to follow the excellent example of Srimathi Uma Nehru.

The Burma Expulsion of Offenders Bill: In the teeth of universal opposition from India and from Indians settled in Burma, His Excellency the Viceroy has given his assent to the Burma Expulsion of Offenders Bill. We have on previous occasions pointed out that, though the ostensible object of the Bill is to expel non-Burman offenders, it is really designed against the Indians who have incurred the displeasure of the Burma Government by their political and other activities. Burma is a province of India for administrative and political purposes and this Bill, coupled with the Sea Passengers' Traffic Bill which imposes a tax of Rs. 5 on all non-Burmans, completes the process of setting up one province against another upon which the Government of India is evidently determined. We are glad to note that some members of the Assembly have given notice of a resolution asking the Secretary of state for India to veto the Bill or in the alternative requesting the Government of India to introduce a Bill to repeal the measure. Though it is extremely unlikely that either of these suggestions will be adopted, they are enough to show the unpopularity of the measure.

Bombay's New Medical College: In an appeal, which is published elsewhere, Mr. Jivraj Mehta, the Dean of the King Edward VII Memorial Hospital and Seth Gordhandas Sundardas Medical College, opened recently by H. E. the Governor, exhorts the public of Bombay to evince greater interest in the Institutions and to help carry on the work for which they are intended. The Hospital and the College are, in the words of the appeal, "a magnificent monument expressive of the spirit of charity" and owe their existence to the combined efforts of the people and the Corporation of Bombay. For the effective working of the Institutions it is required to organise a Patients' Help Society, the object of which will be to furnish such comforts as are necessary to poor patients discharged from the Hospital. Help is also required in the shape of endowments for prizes and scholarships for those students who have the talent but not the means for medical education and of facilities for medical research about the sad neglect of which Lt. Col. Row spoke in no measured terms at the last Science Congress. We feel confident that the people who have already done so much for the College and the Hospital will not fail to respond liberally and magnanimously to the Dean's appeal.

The Presidents' Conference: The Conference of the Presidents of the Legislative Councils and the Legislative Assembly which recently concluded its sessions at Delhi, owes not a little of its initiative to Sir Frederick White, the ex-President of the Assembly. All that the Conference seems to have done is to universalise certain rules and forms of procedure for the whole of India. It is stated that, after a hot discussion, the proposal that Presidents of the Councils should not accept any office during their term of office was dropped. We much regret that the Conference failed to establish a healthy convention in this important matter.

Vidyasagar's Daughters' Fund: We have received Rs. 20 from Mrs. A. C. Chatterjee, being the contribution of the Bengali members of Stree Mahamandal, Bombay, towards the Vidyasagar's Daughters' Fund.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, JANUARY 30, 1926.

EDUCATED INDIA AND CHRISTIANITY.

Mr. Shoran S. Singha who has been very closely connected with the Delhi Mission and is now attached to the Foreign Department of the Young Men's Christian Association in London, contributes a thoughtful article to the current number of The East and the West on the attitude of educated India to Christianity. Mr. Singha's estimate will be recognised by all who are in close contact with, the main currents of Indian life and thought as being essentially correct. He begins by warning Christian Missions against over-rating the significance of mass conversions to the diffusion of Christ's ideal in this country. So far as the converted masses are concerned, a certain amelioration of their social and economic position is often the immediate result of conversion to Christianity. And it must be acknowledged that occasionally there have arisen from among these converts, persons of outstanding spiritual character. Taken in the mass, however, the initial social and material advantage to the converts is about the whole of the benefit arising from mass conversions. This in itself is no small thing, but Christian Missions are not the only means by which this result can be secured. As a matter of fact, social work among the depressed classes is becoming increasingly recognised as essential to national progress by educated Indians, and Christian Missions can no longer claim to be the only agencies engaged in such work. The specific aim of Christian Missions is, or ought to be, "the production of Christ-like characters." As Mr. Singha observes: "Baptism does not necessarily mean conversion. If there was anything miraculous or supernatural in mere baptism, this world would have been a veritable heaven on earth, but we know it is nowhere near that stage of perfection yet. The change of heart is the first essential of bringing about the Kingdom of God on this earth: no amount of baptismal or confirmation services can do it."

Mr. Singha holds that from the point of view of the production of Christ-like characters, Missionary educational work has been more helpful than mass conversions. Not that many Christs have been turned out of such institutions. But as Mr. Singha truly says, there are few men who leave Missionary Schools and Colleges without a change of heart or life. This does not mean that educated Indians wish in any considerable number to become Christians. It is quite the other way. Mr. Singha rightly observes: "An educated Indian would like to be, and attempts to be something, like Christ, but he has no desire to be called a Christian." He tells the story of a young Hindu student who felt drawn to Christianity and wanted to become a "convert." His father was a liberal-minded man and had no objection to his son following his inclination. He suggested to his son, however, that before taking the plunge, he would do well to travel in the Christian countries of Europe for a year. The young man went accordingly and came back saying: "I have beeen cured of my Christianity." In the early days of Christian Missions in India, few Indians had visited Europe and knew anything of the conditions of life there. To a Hindu or a Mahomedan there is no distinction between religion and everyday life. He may and does violate his religious precepts in his life, but he knows he is doing wrong and will say so. But Europe has drawn a hard and fast line between religion and life, and those who talk of religion in politics or business are regarded as cranks and prigs. The Indian, judging from his own instance, assumed in the early days of Christian Missions that life in England was closely modelled upon the Sermon on the Mount. Not only did the Missionaries not care to correct him on the point, but by their manner of condemning outright Indian customs, fostered the impression that the Kingdom of Heaven was actually in operation in Christian countries. Disillusionment was bound to come, as in the case of the young Hindu student, when large numbers of Indians went to Christian lands and saw for themselves the forms and features of applied Christianity.

Unlike many Christian Missionaries who judge Hinduism and Islam by their failures, the Indian has had the fairness to discriminate between Christianity and Christ's teachings. Mr. Singha mentions as illustrating the extent to which the Churches have become subservient to secular and political ends, that a War Minister said openly in Parliament that the pulpits of the Churches were their best recruiting grounds. The remarkable fact is, as Mr. Singha rightly observes, "that instead of throwing Christianity overboard, India's educated men have begun to make a distinction between the Christ of Christendom and the Jesus of the Gospel. The former they will not touch, but the latter is drawing them more and more." Mr. Singha gives Mr. Gandhi the credit of focussing his countrymen's thought on the Crucified One. Less dramatic but not less effective to the same purpose has been the teaching and example of social and religious reformers since Raja Ram Mohan Roy. We welcome Mr. Singha's exposition of the educated Indian mind, not only for its remarkable accuracy, but also, and perhaps more, as an exposition of the mind of the best type of Indian Christians.

The Devanga Conference: The Devangas are the great weaving community of South India. In his presidential address to the Devanga Conference held recently at Mandapet, Mr. P. T. Kumaraswami Chettiar made some notable suggestions for bringing about much-needed reforms among the community. The Devangas are backward in point of education and the President urged them to avail themselves of the full benefits of modern education. Like other communities, the Devangas also have got their own sub-castes and sub-divisions, and, in order to bring about unity among them, the President advocated as a first step inter-dining to be made the rule and not the exception, to be followed, of course, in due time, by inter-marriage.

INDIAN STUDENTS IN ENGLAND.

The Report on the work of the Indian Students Department for the year ending 31st March 1925, published by the High Commissioner's Office, London, a copy of which has been kindly sent to us, gives a full and clear account of the activities of the Department during the year under review. In the Introduction, the High Commissioner for India makes a brief survey of the progress made so far by the Department and offers some suggestions for the guidance of students going to England. Ever since his assumption of office as High Commissioner for India in January last, Sir Atul Chatterjee has devoted considerable attention to the organisation of the work in his office dealing with Indian students and probationers from India for the different services. He has been in personal consultation with the authorities of the various Universities and Colleges in Great Britain as well as societies and institutions concerned in the welfare of Indian students. He has also interviewed a large number of Indian students in London and elsewhere. It is gratifying to find that his representations in respect of the furtherance of facilities for Indian students have received a generous response from the educational authorities there. The High Commissioner is convinced that there is no prejudice whatever in the mind of the educational authorities in that country against Indian students as such, but that the main difficulty is due to the very large number of Indian students that now resort to Great Britain for study and training. This, coupled with the fact that a large number of English youths and youths from the Dominions, America and the continental countries are going in for University and other types of higher education, has led the heads of Colleges and institutions to raise the standard of admission all around and to ration the number of students that can be admitted from countries outside Great Britain. Sir Atul, therefore, lays stress on the necessity of providing sufficient facilities for undergraduate education in this country itself so that only picked Indians of merit and capability can go abroad for post-graduate study. It is necessary that students, their parents and guardians should get full and accurate information regarding the facilities available and the cost of education in England, and the Hand-book for Indian Students published by the High Commissioner's office serves this purpose. Notwithstanding the High Commissioner's repeated notifications that applications should reach his office not later than March or April previous to the autumn in which admission is sought, he is grieved to find cases of young men arriving in England in July or August without definite plans. Sir Atul also points out the necessity for parents and guardians to impress upon their sons or wards the desirability of devoting careful attention to questions of diet and health and of participating in all the corporate activities of the institutions. As regards wage-earning training for Indians, the High Commissioner gives a note of warning that there is no possibility of a young student being able at the outset to obtain sufficient wages to maintain himself while he is under training owing to the present serious depression and consequent unemployment in most industries in which training is sought by Indians.

During the year under review, the number of students for whom admission was secured through the Indian Students Department showed an increase over last year's figure. Not only are Indian students making use of the Department to a larger extent than before, but a perceptibly larger percentage of the applicants have already secured sufficient qualifications in India to qualify them without any further examination for admission to a University in England. The Report notes with gratification that Indian students in increasing numbers are personally seeking the assistance of the Department for advice, not only in regard to their courses of study and training in England, but also in regard to personal and private matters about which they feel they need guidance. Applications for admission to Oxford and Cambridge showed a slight decrease owing to the fact that the applicants were not in a position to satisfy the conditions required of them, but, latterly, on the representation of the High Commissioner, some concessions have been granted. The Department has got its respective Local Advisers at Manchester, Edinburgh, Glasgow and other provincial centres. It keeps an up-to-date list of qualified tutors and coaches in all subjects for the various examinations and numerous Indian students are put in touch with the tutors according to their needs. During the year, the Joint Secretaries paid visits to the principal University centres and thus brought the Department into close personal touch with the educational authorities. It is not possible for us to go into all the details of the activities of the Indian students in the various schools and colleges of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. Suffice it to say here that the number of students undergoing training in the various sciences is gradually on the increase and that they are acquitting themselves creditably not only in class work, but also in the college debating societies and athletics. It is gratifying to find that women are going to England in large numbers for medical studies, as was generally the case in the past, and for other University courses, such as Science, Economics, Literature and pedagogy. The Report notes with satisfaction that Indian women are now to be found at Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Durham, Leeds and other University centres. There is also a noticeable increase in the number of students going for training in accountancy and such professional subjects as will ensure a useful and remunerative career. A sum of £500 is annually set aside for the award of grants-in-aid to Indian students in England, on condition that the research work or special investigation on which they are engaged is likely to lead to the definite advancement of knowledge and thus to the ultimate benefit of India, and a good deal of valuable work has already been done by the recipients of these grants. The House Management Committee of the Department, in spite of improved finances and increased provision for beds, is still unable to provide accommodation for all students who apply. A perusal of the reports submitted by the Indian Advisory Committees set up in all the important Indian educational centres for advising students going abroad, reveals a progressive decrease not only in the number of students who actually went to England, but also in the number of applications for information. This is probably to be accounted for by the fact that certain of the services will hereafter be recruited in India itself. The National Indian Association, the Distressed Indian Students Aid Committee, the Indian Students Union and Hostel and the Indian Gymkhana Club, are some of the social activities in which our students in England are engaged. In the closing section the Report observes: "A good deal of disappointment would be saved if parents and students themselves would think out carefully and exactly what the aim and object of the overseas education they are contemplating is to be. It is not sufficient to decide merely that it is to be a degree in science or economics, or law, followed or accompained in the case of the last named, by admission to an Inn of Court for Bar study. The prospects of suitable employment on the completion of the proposed course in this country should be carefully canvassed, and the education or training should be based, as far as possible, on the opportunities of suitable employment in that special branch." We would commend these thoughtful observations to the careful attention of all who intend going abroad for study.

HINDUISM AND PROSELYTISM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I read the article of Mr. Kalyan Chandragupta on the above subject with great interest, and with most of it I heartily agree.

I hold that all truth is universal, religious truth included. Will Mr. Chandragupta tell us what are the "teachings of Hinduism," which "are on the whole more elevating than those of other religions"? If these teachings are true, then we ought all to accept them.

Yours etc.,
A CHRISTIAN.

THE POONA DEPRESSED CLASSES MISSION SOCIETY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Mr. K. G. Patade, General Secretary of the Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society, in his letter of the 18th Nov. 1925 entitled 'Social Reformers and Untouchability" appearing in your issue of the 28th Nov. 1925, in answer to certain letters of Col. Steen appearing in the issues of 31st Oct. and 14th Nov., has gone out of his way in alluding to certain debts which, Mr. Patade alleges, the Parent Society of the Depressed Classes Mission Society of India owes to his Mission, viz., the Poona Depressed Classes Mission. This is an incorrect statement. The Parent Society has no connection with, nor owes anything to, the Poona Society called the Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society which was established about three years ago, independently of the Parent Society, and of which Mr. Patade is the General Secretary. There was, no doubt, a certain financial relationship of the Parent Society with its Poona branch, but it no longer exists.

HAS KALKI COME?

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

"God comes to see us without a bell". But our lives are full of "lies which warp us from the living truth.". We are so engrossed in our selfish pursuits of the "earth earthly" that, with all the megalomania of civilization in us, we do not perceive the biggest spiritual phenomenon happening in our globe. Truly our spiritual life has been swamped by our all-absorbing materialistic living. And truly such avalanche of darkness the Great God or His Messiah only can dispel.

It is said that, when a man dreams that he is waking, he is near waking The world is brimming over with sin and vice and the sweating sorrowing humanity cries to Him to come again, crush all evil and re-establish His reign of righteousness on earth. But the world with its senses going wool-gathering under the glamour of the world knoweth not that such a One hath come. And He cometh now in the person of "Hazrat Mirza Ghulam Ahmad" (on whom be peace and blessings of God.) One gets a gleam of hope in one's heart on reading "Ahmadiyyat or the True Islam" for, among other things, it is stated that he claims to be the Messiah for the Christians, the Mahdi for the Muslims, to be Krishna or the Nehe Kalank Avatar for the Hindus and Mesio Darbahami for the Zoroastrians and He "alone is the promised One who has been eagerly awaited for centuries" (See page 15 et seq. of the book written by Hazrat Mirza Bashir-ud-din Mahmud Ahmad Khalifatul Masih II and head of the Ahmadiyyat community published by Talif-O-Isha'at Qadian, Punjab, India). The writer is the second successor of the Promised Messiah and head of the Ahmadiyyat community. He has portrayed a Prophet who comprehends all avatars in his personality. But in this individualism-ridden age no one sees eye to eye with the author. Perhaps this puts its imprimature on everything. But with all respect to the big claims which only an avatar can make, a Hindu is bound to have his qualms. For with respect to the Kalki avatar it is foretold in Hindu scriptures that He will appear at a time when chaos and veil of darkness shall envelop everything and then " will be born in the village of Sambhalpur in India a Brahmin of great spiritual force, named Vishnujasha and in time will become the father of the coming incarnation of Vishnu, one of the most powerful incarnations—Kalki. The Kalki will rapidly grow into youth and spiritual power. At His mental call will come to Him countless vehicles, armours, all kinds of weapons of war and soldiers. He will then lead them to battle against all the Mlechchas, robbers and tyrants all over the world who will fall shouting in agony before His mammoth sword. After extirpating them all, the Lord will establish once again perfect order and harmony on the surface of the earth". This must be taken au pied de lettre. Taking the astounding claim put forward by the Ahmadiyyat the Hindu-Muslim-Parsee-and-Christian conscience must in this respect be concurrently satisfied. But regarding the Ahmadiyyat's relation to Hinduism only, the setting in which the Kalki shall appear, geographical and otherwise, the extraordinary manifestations of His supernatural power and the accomplishment of his mission have not, it is clear, been fulfilled by the Ahmadiyyat Prophet. And can it be said that the Kalki has come? Can the enlightened Ahmadiyyat throw light on this vital question?

THE KANYA GURUKULA, DELHI.

In response to our request for fuller details regarding the Kanya Gurukula, Delhi, which we noticed in our news columns on November 21st 1925, the Principal of the institution writes:—

Rishi Dayanand in the latter half of the 19th century forcibly denounced heinous customs and pernicious practices like early marriage that were, and are still, undermining the strength of the nation, emphasized the need of the rehabilitation of the ancient Hindu institution of Brahmacharya as indispensable to national regeneration, declared the Vedic culture, learning and system of education of ancient India to be superior to those of the West, and pointed out the need of building up Deva Nagari or Hindi as the national language of the country. In conformity with his teaching some of the earnest disciples of Rishi Dayanand founded the Gurukula Kangri at Hardwar early in the beginning of the twentieth century. The institution aims at character building through Brahmacharya discipline, reviving ancient Hindu culture and learning, imparting instruction in all the branches of Sanskrit learning together with the modern western arts and sciences, and building up Hindi literature. The institution is situated at the foot of the Himalayas on the bank of the Ganges at a distance of about three miles from Hardwar on the opposite bank The natural sights and sounds are fascinating and well-calculated to impress the imagination and educe what is best in the character of boys. After the models of the teacher's home system prevalent in ancient India, a living contact is encouraged between the teachers and the taught. Students are recruited between six and eight years of age. They have to stay for fourteen years, on an average, in the institution and are not allowed to go home during this period. The teachers also live at the same place.

Disappointment must, however, await the endeavour to regenerate the manhood without ameliorating the motherhood of a country, and it had long been felt that the Gurukula system could not bear full fruit unless its benefits were extended to girls also. The generosity of certain altruistic people enabled the Punjab Pratinidhi Sabha to supply this long-felt need in the summer of 1923 by establishing the Kanya Gurukula at Delhi. Barring modifications necessitated by natural differences between boys and girls, the Kanya Gurukula has before it the same aims, and is conducted on lines identical with those of the Gurukula Kangri. Girls from six to eight years of age are admitted and are not allowed to go home till they have completed their course. The girls have to pass through strict Brahmacharya discipline and no married girl is allowed to live as a student in the institution. They are admitted only on the condition of the guardians giving a solemn undertaking that the girls would in no case be married before the age of sixteen. Caste is held to be neither a qualification nor a disqualification, and girls of all castes, Sudras included, are admitted without any discrimination and have to live on terms of perfect equality and in close contact with one another. But physical and mental fitness (for which tests are instituted before admission) is an essential condition of admission. Equality of opportunity is the law and all students are treated alike without regard to differences in the social status of parents and guardians. Agreeably to the educational ideals of ancient India, education is imparted gratis. Fee is, however, charged to cover the expenses of food, clothing and books which are all supplied by the institution in order to maintain the desirable standard and avoid invidious inequalities among the students.

Women are admittedly the conservative element in society. They are the natural guardians of the traditions of a nation. The Kanya Gurukula aims at making girls fit to discharge their duties efficiently as custodians of national culture. Their education and discipline are regulated with a view to making them intelligent mothers, attractive wives and helpful companions to their husbands rather than mere drudges of all work, wise and considerate daughters, sisters and relations, efficient citizens and patriotic Indians—but all this subject to the qualification that home is to be their proper sphere throughout life and they are to discharge duties and exercise functions in and through that sphere. The number of women in India is less than the number of men and every woman can marry and have a home of her own. Consequently the problems regarding the profession, wages, and franchise of women that are distracting the West, do not arise in this country. Hence the education imparted in the Kanya Gurukula does not aim at fitting girls for professions in life.

According to the scheme in force at present, the entire course of the Kanya Gurukula extends over eleven years. The first eight classes constitute the School and the last three the College. A short sketch of the curriculum for some of the classes will give a tolerably clear idea of the standard up to which students are educated in this institution. The following are the subjects and courses of study for the eighth class, the highest class of the School department:—(1) Sanskrit Grammar (Panini's), Ashtadhyayi Vritti, fourth and fifth chapters. (2) Sanskrit Literature, the books prescribed being (संक्षिप्त रामायण) (Ramayana abridged), प्रतापसिंह चरितम् (A life of Pratap Singh in Sanskrit), and Manusmriti. (3) Arya Bhasha or Hindi, (a) Translation and Essay-writing, (b) the books prescribed are Deshadarshana, Vanashtaka, Maharani Lakshmibai, Sugharbibi, Essays. (4) Religious Instruction, thirty-second chapter of the Yajur-Veda, and Swami Dayananda's Instructions to his Commentary on the Vedas (ऋग्वेदादि भाष्य भूमिका). (5) Geography:—(a) Geography of Europe, and map drawing, (b) Physical Geography. (6) History:— (a) History of India in two parts by Prof. Bal Krishna, (b) A Hindi Primer on Indian Constitution, (c) An elementary Hindi book on Economics (अर्थशास्त्रप्रवेशिका). (7) Music. Students are taught to play on the guitar etc. (8) Sewing, Knitting etc. (9) Arithmetic-problems on Exchange, Profit and Loss, Ratio, Proportions, Discount, Present Value. (10) Algebra, the first four rules and important Formulae. (11) Any one of the three principal Vernaculars of the country namely Gujrati, Bengali, and Maharashtri. In addition to the above subjects which are taught in school time, Spinning, Weaving, Cooking and Kitchen-gardening are taught after school hours in the Ashram or Boarding house as compulsory subjects in which it would be essential to pass. Moreover students will be given theoretical and practical training in Nursing and Hygiene twice a week in the Ashrama outside school hours and it would be essential to pass in these subjects also. Students will also be required to take part in practical agriculture and native games. Promising students will be taught the Arts of postures (आसन) and deep breathing (Pranayama) also. The sketch given above of the curriculum for 8th class is enough to show that girls on the completion of their school course will possess a fair command over Hindi, a sufficient acquaintance with Sanskrit and the Hindi Scriptures, sufficient general information, a fair amount of culture and feminine accomplishments and ability to discharge the duties (cooking and sewing etc.) required of girls in Indian homes.

Girls may leave the institution if they like after completing the School course, but those who choose to remain will have to pass through the College course extending over three years. The subjects prescribed for the College course are the following:—

(1) Selected Mantras (Hymns) from the Atharva, Rig and Yajur Vedas. (2) The Upanishads (Ish, Kena, Katha, Mundaka,) Gita, Nirukta or Vedic Philology, Lectures on the true method of interpreting the Vedas, Dharmasutras—Apastamba and others. (3) Sanskrit Philosophy:—(a) Yoga Darshana : three chapters with the help of a commentary, (b) Sankhya Darshana by Vijnana Bhikshu, (c) Prashastapada Bhashya or commentary. (4) Sanskrit Literature:—about six books of different standard authors are prescribed. (4) Hindi including Braja Bhasha will be taught up to the highest standard. (5) It will be at the option of students to take up a higher course of Sanskrit Grammar consisting of Panini's Ashtadhyayi and Mahabhashya instead of Sanskrit and Hindi Literature. (6) History of England, Europe, Japan, United States of America, Greece, Rome and different periods of Indian History in detail. Students may take up Economics instead of History and then they will have to go through a fairly comprehensive course of General Economics and Indian Economics. Science may also be taken up instead of History or Economics and the Science course consists of Elements of Physics, Chemistry, Biology, Physiology and Astronomy. (7) In addition to the above-mentioned compulsory subjects, students may take up one of the following as an optional subject:—(a) Music, (b) Painting, (c) Embroidery, (d) English. English is not taught as a compulsory subject in the School or the College department. This is not because of any prejudice against the language or because it is thought useless. In fact the language is taught up to the B.A. standard of Indian Universities as a compulsory subject in the Gurukula Kangri. The reason why it has virtually been excluded from the course of the Kanya Gurukula is that it requires time and it is not possible in so short a time and along with so many other subjects to gain a satisfactory knowledge of the language And a mere smattering is generally worse than complete ignorance, for it involves waste of time and energy without any corresponding gain. As stated above, it is not contemplated that girls will follow professions in after life and hence it has not been thought desirable to teach English at the expense of general information and culture.

The institution has been in existence less than three years. But it already enjoys a growing popularity. The number of applications for admission every year far exceeds that for which there is accommodation and girls from all parts of the country seek admission. It is the only educational institution for women in India in which all the workers are females. Some selfless noble ladies are working without any monetary remuneration and we are trying to train female teachers and workers of our own also. Still the need of more workers is being keenly felt. Should any public-spirited ladies from any part of the country feel inclined to serve the institution, their services will gratefully be accepted. There are at present more than two hundred girls in the institution. They are divided into classes and sections. Each class is under the direct supervision of a female superintendent at all times outside school hours. There is a daily routine of religious duties, prayers, study, play, sleep etc., which is very punctually and rigorously enforced. There is a medical adviser who attends regularly, gives medical aid and also regulates and supervises diet, sanitation etc. The Kanya Gurukula aims at the regeneration of Indian womanhood through Brahmacharya discipline, salutary segregation, a healthy environment, a sound education, eradication of evil customs like early marriage, and the revival of Vedic spiritual culture. It is the duty of every patriotic Indian to help us in the sacred mission.

THE RANADE ANNIVERSARY.

The Joint Honorary Secretary, Deccan Sabha, writes :

Mr. S. N. Karnataki was the principal speaker at the celebration of the anniversary of the death of the late Mr. Justice Mahadeo Govind Ranade, held at the Deccan Sabha rooms in Poona on Saturday the 16th inst. with Mr. B. S. Kamat in the chair. There was a good audience on the occasion, and in introducing the lecturer, the Chairman said that the late Mr. Ranade belonged to a class of men that are termed "nation-builders" in history and are born once in a century. For over 25 years Mr. Ranade was a power in the land and exercised unlimited influence in shaping public opinion.

One could easily recall to mind numerous occasions when forces of reaction were gathering strength in the country and when Mr. Ranade's services in steadying the course of events and promoting the cause of progress were invaluable.

Mr. Karnataki began by saying that Mr. Ranade was one of the greatest men that India had produced in modern times. He was a man of such diverse and many-sided activities that it would be impossible within the limits of a single lecture to do full justice to the different aspects of his life. Mr. Ranade was one of the first bright stars that arose on the Indian horizon in the early sixties of the last century and one that was destined to play a most important part in moulding public opinion in the country for about a generation. Indeed he had been once described by the late Sir Narayan Chandavarkar as one of the seven stars—Sapta Rishis—that issued about the middle of the last century out of the Elphinstone Institution in Bombay, the others being Bal Shastri Jambhekar, Dadabhai Naoroji, Pherozeshah Mehta, Telang, Bhandarkar and Narayan Mahadeo Parmanand. But these men rose to distinction in different walks of life and rendered, each in his own way, eminent services to the country. But the service of Ranade at a time when the affairs of the Deccan were sorely in need of a wise guide were most invaluable. The history of the Maharashtra during the fifty years that followed the downfall of the Peshwas in 1818 was almost blank. And it was only after Ranade came to Poona in 1871 that he started all his activities, political, social and others and the result was that Poona came into prominence once again in a few years. Ranade was thus the maker of modern Maharashtra and one of his biographers, Rao Bahadur Mankar, stated nothing but the truth when he said that in Ranade's time Poona was the pride of Maharashtra, the envy of Bombay and the admiration of India.

Ranade was actuated in all his activities by a patriotism of the purest type. He was far-sighted enough to see that if her people should only take the fullest advantage of the opportunities opened out to them by the British connection, India would be able to take her proper place among the nations of the world. He had unbounded faith in his own countrymen and he once said almost in a prophetic vein: "There can be no question that a nation of 250 millions can never be permanently held down by sheer force and sooner or later, in God's Providence, and under the encouragement of the British example and discipline the people of this country must rise to the status of self-government and learn to control their own affairs in subordinate alliance with England. The transfer of power is inevitable." Inspired by such noble ideals, Ranade would not, in the very nature of things, rest satisfied with promoting the political interests of the country, but extended his activities to the social sphere also. So much so that he had no patience with those of his countrymen who would pin their faith to political activities alone, leaving social and religious reform to take care of itself. "You cannot be liberal by halves", said he, "you cannot be liberal in politics and conservative in religion. The heart and the head must go together. You cannot cultivate your intellect, enrich your mind, enlarge the sphere of your political rights and privileges and at the same time keep your hearts closed and cramped. It is an idle dream to expect men to remain enchained and enshackled in their own superstition and social evils, while they are struggling hard to win rights and privileges from their rulers. Before long these dreamers will find their dreams lost."

Ranade was nothing if not historical in his imagination and never failed in all his activities to appeal to the past history of this country in support of his own position. As regards the Hindu-Muhammadan question, e. g., his views were very advanced and were such as must command the respect of both communities. Said he on one occasion: "If the lessons of the past have any value, one thing is quite clear, that in this country, no progress is possible unless both Hindus and Mahomedans join hands together and are determined to follow the lead of the men who flourished in Akbar's time and were his chief advisers and counsellors, and sedulously avoid the mistakes which were committed by his great grandson, Aurangzeb." To illustrate the catholicity of Mr. Ranade's heart and sincerity of his purpose, the lecturer referred to a significant move by that great man about the close of the last century when the Hindu Union Club, a social institution in Bombay under Mr. Ranade's guidance, arranged for a pansupari party in honour of the late Mr. Badrudin Tyabjee soon after his elevation to the High Court Bench. Before concluding Mr. Karnataki mentioned some anecdotes in Ranade's life which served to add to the interesting character of his address.

KING EDWARD VII MEMORIAL HOSPITAL AND SETH GORDHANDAS SUNDARDAS MEDICAL COLLEGE.

The Dean of the above-mentioned College has issued the following appeal :—

Now that the King Edward VII Memorial Hospital and the Seth Gordhandas Sundardas Medical College are opened by His Excellency the Governor of Bombay and will receive in and out-patients from Monday the 15th February 1926, I appeal to the people of Bombay to take an active interest in these Institutions of which they may well be proud. They are a magnificent monument expressive of the spirit of charity, which characterises the people of Bombay.

That the Institutions may fulfil in every way the object for which they are erected, that they may be unique Institutions all over India, I make this appeal to help us in either of the following ways :—

(1) To organise a Patients' Help Society in connection with the King Edward VII Memorial Hospital on the line of Samaritan Societies attached to the Hospital in the West. Some of the patients may be required to keep on special diet even after they are discharged from the Hospital; they may be too poor to afford it. Some of the patients may require artificial limbs or trusses or spectacles, but too poor to buy them. The Society can help them by giving them such necessary requirements. The work of the Society would be to help the patients once they are outside the Hospital and would be carried out by a Committee composed of the Donors. In this way the people will remain in touch with the work done in the Hospital.

(2) To endow prizes and scholarships to help poor or meritorious students. An investment of Rs. 4,000 will give a scholarship of Rs. 20 per mensem. Already seven scholarships have been donated, and we still want some twenty-five more to help and encourage deserving students on whom the cost of a medical education falls so heavily.

realpatidar.com

(3) To endow Medical Research. Prevention is better than cure. To bring health and happiness to the millions it is better to wipe out disease by prevention. Research can be conveniently carried out in Tropical Pathology and in such conditions as Sprue and Anaemiee, which are so common and deadly in Bombay or in Experimental Pharmacology and testing the properties of Indian herbs and Medicines, in Bio-Chemistry or in Operative Surgery etc.

A lot of patient research work into the cause of the various diseases is necessary before it is possible to fight them. A big institution like this where the work in the Hospital and College could be easily collaborated is the proper place for such research. We appeal to the charitably-disposed men and women to help the College and Hospital with research endowments and thereby help humanity in general.

INDIAN STUDENTS IN AMERICA.

An Associated Press message dated 3rd Jan, says:

Mr. K. T. Paul, National General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of India, has issued the following statement to the press regarding Indian students in America:—

Some time ago I published a statement from Dr. Husband, the Commissioner of Labour of the Federal Government at Washington, embodying his interpretation of the new labour laws as applicable to bona fide Indian students in the United States of America. Since then I have received an official communication from the Hindustan Association of America (500, Riverside Drive, New York, U.S.A.) which is a well-known Association of Indians in America. The President, Mr. Hemendra R. Rakhit, points out that there is still misapprehension in the minds of prospective Indian students as regards the situation in America and desires me to arrange for wide publicity as to the real state of matters. I am giving hereunder extracts which will set the situation out in the clearest possible terms.

Immigration Rules Affecting Students.

The student should write directly to the College or University which he wishes to enter enclosing proper credentials. If the University accepts him the University authorities will send him two certificates of admission to the University. The certificates of admission should be in "duplicate." (The immigration officials do not always accept a certificate marked 'Copy'). He will then take one certificate of admission to the nearest American Consul, who will give him a Student Vise, if the University he wishes to enter is on the approved list, and if he is a bona fide student and can satisfy the Consul as to his health and status as a student and can give satisfactory evidence that he has sufficient knowledge of English to do college work and sufficient funds to keep him from becoming a public charge. The second certificate must be retained by the student to show to the immigration officials when he enters the United States.

When he comes to America and when the immigration officials see him at the port of entry, he should show not only the Student Vise but also the certificate of admission from the University which has accepted him. With these credentials he should have no difficulties whatsoever, provided he has complied with all the above requirements.

Mr. Husband's Letter.

(Printed in the Hindustanee Student, New York, January 1925.)

The Immigration Act of 1924 provides that a bona fide student is one who seeks to enter the United States solely for the purpose of study at an accredited school, etc., and necessarily this has to be rather strictly construed in order to prevent applicants from using the student exemption as a means of getting into the United States. It was the evident intent of the Congress to provide a means by which aliens might have the privilege of pursuing studies in this country, if they come solely for that purpose and with no intention of remaining here permanently.

It seems very probable that before a Consul issues a non quata Student Vise he will require an assurance that such financial provision has been made as to insure that the applicant will be able to maintain a student status here. However, it is not believed that if a student contributes to his own support by working, this would necessarily disqualify him for admission nor is it believed that he ought to be prohibited from working during vacation periods. The point is that he must be primarily a student and not a worker for wages with his studies as a secondary matter. Any immigrant student who otherwise fails, neglects or refuses to maintain the status of a bona fide student or who engages in any business occupation for profit or who labours for hire, shall be deemed to have abandoned his status of an immigrant student and shall on the warrant of the Secretary of Labour be taken into custody and deported.

PENALISING EXTRA-MARITAL RELATIONS.

The following letter, dated the 13th Jan., has been sent by Pandit Deva Ratna Sharma, Secretary, Hindu Mahasabha, Delhi, to K. G. Harpar, Esq., Deputy Secretary to the Government, United Provinces, Lucknow:—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 3833-VI.1151-1922, dated Allahabad, November 12, 1925, desiring the opinion of the Hindu Mahasabha on a Bill of which notice has been given by Sir H. S. Gour and which proposes to make sexual intercourse with a girl between the age of 13 and 14 with her consent a separate offence.

It was pointed out in your letter that the Government of India desired the opinion on this Bill in its relations to extra-marital relations only. It was also pointed out that it was necessary to decide whether it is customary in certain areas or among certain races for sexual-intercourse to take place before marriage, and if that was so, information should be given as to the age of the girl at which sexual intercourse generally took place and whether any safeguards were necessary to prevent the penalising of such a custom recognised by any community.

2. Your letter was considered at a meeting of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha held at Cawnpore on the

realpatidar.com

realpatidar.com

21st December 1925. The questions put to the members were:—

(a) Whether it should be made a penal offence to have intercourse with a girl between the age of 13 and 14 by a person who is not her lawful husband and

(b) whether any custom exists in any community or place according to which sexual intercourse is allowed before marriage and whether such a custom should also be similarly penalised.

3. Several members sent their opinions in writing and they were all unanimous in emphatically declaring that extra-marital relations of the above description should be penalised. They also stated that they knew of no race or place in India where any custom of the kind referred to above existed and they all stated that if it did exist at all at any place it should also be penalised.

4. On the matter coming for discussion before the meeting all the members who represented almost all the provinces of India, were also emphatically of opinion that intercourse with a girl between the age of 13 and 14 by a person other than her lawful husband should be penalised and that this provision should extend to each and every community in India, in spite of any custom to the contrary, if it existed at all. But no such custom was known to exist so far as the members were aware.

THE PROBLEM OF INDIAN WIDOWS.

Mgr. Rossillon, Bishop of Vizagapatam, writes in the Catholic Missions:—

For those who have studied closely, the problem of Indian widows is a poignant one. The number of human beings who are concerned is so great! India, the land of ancient wisdom, has been called also with reason "the land of widows." Never was an appellation so deserved. The number of widows one finds in the peninsula is truly unbelievable. After the last census, made in 1921, there were 2,84,20,000 widows! The feminine population was 125,000,000, so that in India practically one woman out of every five is a widow!

The total is fantastic. More than three times the population of Canada. There is hardly a fireside that has not some widows. The missionary knows this too well—he sees it with his own eyes. What aggravates this problem and makes it more unusual and pathetic, is the age of these unfortunates.

Among the married women, 2,500,000 are less than ten years old; 134,000 are less than five years old (baby wives); and 14,000 are less than 12 months (infant wives). Among the 28 million widows, 335,000 are less than 15 years old; 112,000 are less than 10; 17,000 less than five years (baby widows); and a million less than 12 months old (infant widows). Such a social state almost unbelievable, yet it is the truth.

What are the causes of the multiplication of widows? Above all, it is the custom of early marriages. According to this custom, all young girls have to be married before the age of 12 years. The sacred books have sanctioned it, and the most terrible anathemas are put upon the heads of the fathers of families who neglect this duty. Monopolized by the higer castes in the beginning, it gradually became imposed on the whole nation. In establishing this detestable custom, one can easily surmise the thoughts of the oriental lawmakers. But why did they direct this anathema upon the poor weaker sex when they are disrupted by the laws of morality of men who fix no age for marriage, and allow children from 5, 6 and 10 years of age to be given in marriage to men of 30,35 and 40 years of age. By this same legislation have they not weakened the moral tone of the nation, encouraged vice, and is this not the real cause of the great number of widows?

The staggering number of two million widows shows it widely. This social plea already so greatly aggravated is added to by another great harm; that is, enforced widowhood. The law of caste, like the religious law, prevents these widows from marrying again, whatever their age. Once a widow, always a widow. The most inhuman consequence follows. Many millions of children become widows without even reaching the age of reason, and by this custom become widows forever.

Such is the work of Hindu paganism that some European renegades wish to thrust upon Christianity. The numbers of widows increase, until now there are more than 26 million of these "poor shaved heads" among the population of India. The most disconcerting phenomenon is that this horrible custom is not only rampant among the poor classes and the uneducated, but also sanctioned by those who have received their training in great European Universities.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Fifth Audi Andhra Conference, 1925: The Fifth Audi Andhra Conference of the District of Nellore was held in the spacious Town Hall under the Presidentship of R. Veerian Esq., M. L. C., on the 30th December 1925. The proceedings of the Conference were opened with a prayer. Next the President delivered his address. He referred to the various ways how the Panchama degrades himself and stands self-condemned before the world. He said that the Panchama fails to maintain his self-respect, owing to his bad manners and evil habits of drinking, gambling and eating the flesh of dead animals. Thus he lowers himself in the estimation of others. It is because of these defects and faults in him that he is not respected and well-treated by caste ryots, but he is oppressed and depressed at all times, in all places and under all circumstances. He next pointed out that there could be no caste system in India, if every one were to recognize the rights, duties and privileges of every human being as a loyal citizen of the vast British Empire. He was grieved to show from various statistics of the Nellore District, how the Panchama is not properly and adequately represented in the District and several Taluk Boards, Municipal Councils, Union panchayats, Educational Councils and Revenue, Police and Judicial departments. He, therefore, pleaded for equal opportunities and chances to a Panchama to uplift and educate himself in the political field. Besides he remarked that appointments in Government departments even on grades ranging from Rs. 35 to Rs. 100 per mensem are not thrown open to Panchamas, and even when there are applications from qualified candidates, they do not receive that sympathetic consideration which they rightly deserve at the hands of the superior officers of the Government and the heads of departments. Coming to the province of education, he emphasized the need for opening more schools for the Depressed class children. He exhorted them to form themselves into unions and associations for the common good and welfare of their community to secure better positions, higher wages and nobler service. The other speakers who followed, spoke emphasising one or more points mentioned in the presidential address. Resolutions were adopted requesting Government to appoint Audi Andhra members to the various public bodies to safeguard the interests of their community, to grant scholarships to Audi Andhra widows who are undergoing training as teachers, to distribute darkast lands to the depressed classes, and to open roads, sink wells and undertake other sanitary works.

Andhradesa Kalavantula (Devadasi) Mahasabha: Representatives of the Kalavanta Community of Gudivada, Kistna District, assembled at the Sevasrama, Mr. Gampala Kristnayya presiding, for taking steps to convene at Gudivada during the Easter Holidays the Fourth Session of the Andhradesa Kalavanta Mahasabha. A strong Reception Committee of those present was formed with Messrs. Gampala Kristnayya and Bhaskarla Gopala Kristnamurti as Secretaries and Mr. G. Subbaih as Treasurer. The fee for membership to the Reception Committee is fixed at a minimum of Rs. 2/- only, and the present members are empowered to enlist others and collect funds. Rupees seventy-one were promised or paid on the spot. The Chairman of the Reception Committee and the President of the Mahasabha will be elected later on. All the members of the community in the Kistna District are earnestly requested to join the Reception Committee, contribute liberally and help to make the Conference an unqualified success. The community being very poor and yet in a condition of ignorance of, if not callousness to, the need of their own moral over-hauling, the leaders of other communities who sympathise with and are interested in this much-needed moral reform are humbly requested also to help the Mahasabha with their liberal contributions, considered advice and encouraging presence.

All-India Sweepers' Conference: The All-India Sweepers' Conference held its session at Cawnpore on Dec. 26 and 27 under the chairmanship of Dr. Satyapal and the Raja of Maheba on the respective dates. The president-elect, Dr. Satyapal, during the course of his interesting address, after dilating upon the necessities of the sweepers, emphasised the human relationship existing between the sweepers and other people. The Raja of Maheba after receiving an address from the sweepers made a short but very effective speech. As he had to go away early on account of urgent business, the chair was given to Bhawani Shanker, a sweeper, who presided for the remaining period when Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai made speeches. Pandit Malaviya declared that a sweeper could sit and read side by side with higher caste people in Benares University. On this the sweepers touched the feet of Pandit Malaviya who was very much moved. On the presentation of an address to Lala Lajpat Rai by the sweepers he said that he had received good many addresses from the people, but this was the address which he received with pride. Resolutions were passed requesting the municipal boards and the public in general to raise the wages of the sweepers, urging the sweepers to make efforts for educating their children and the public to open the gates of their institutions to sweeper boys and girls and exhorting the sweepers to strictly and firmly adhere to their religion, and to abstain from stimulants and liquors, and requesting the municipal boards to appoint jamadars and sanitary inspectors from among the sweepers. It was also resolved that the sweepers should observe and celebrate Hindu festivals and customs In the end, the election of the All-India Sweepers Committee took place.

Montessori Society in Bhavnagar: As the tangible result of the Montessori Conference held in Bhavnagar, last November, the Montessori Society came into being. The Society aims at the study and spread of the Montessori principles of education and also wishes to carry on research work in the same field. The scheme of work detailed by the Society is to get books on Montessori literature to be translated into Gujarati, to encourage the writing of books by those who have personal experience of this method, to arrange for lectures, and to publish a magazine for the benefit of Montessori schools. The Montessori Society also intends to establish an information bureau on the subject, to arrange for the manufacture and supply of suitable Montessori apparatus, to start a circulating library to facilitate the study of the method, and, though last not least, to establish an institution where special study will be made of child psychology and classes will be conducted on Montessori lines. With regard to the membership of the Society, those who pay Rs. 50 and more will be classed as life-members and those paying as. 8 annually will be enrolled as ordinary members. Those wishing to join should write to the Secretaries, Montessori Society, Sri Daxinamurti Bal-mandir, Bhavnagar.

First Civil Marriage in Turkey: The first civil marriage in Turkey took place at Eski-shehri (Anatolia) between a Turkish school-mistress and an official. The contract which both signed says that the spouses enjoy equal rights, that any act infringing equality is an infringement of the sanctity, and that, until the condition of existence becomes easier, each party must work for a living. Another clause fixes a dowry of £ T 500 and an indemnity of the same amount, which must be paid over by whichever party sues for divorce.

Studies in Buddhist-Chinese: The Secretary, Vishva-Bharati, writes: A large number of important manuscripts of Buddhist-Chinese and Tibetan texts have been recently acquired for the Santiniketan Library. With the help of Prof. Tucci of the University of Rome, Italy, arrangements have now been made for the systematic study and reseach in Buddhist-Chinese language and texts. A Tibetan Lama who was appointed sometime ago is able to help scholars in the study of the Tibetan language and texts. Scholars, advanced students and research workers are cordially invited to come to Santiniketan for the study of Buddhist-Chinese and Tibetan languages and texts.

The Jat-Pat Torak Mandal in U. P.: The Secretary, Jat-Pat Torak Mandal, Lahore, writes: In its last annual meeting at Cawnpore in the Congress days, the U. P. Arya Kumar Sammelan has passed the following resolution:—"That every bachelor Arya young man should take a vow to marry according to Guna, Karma, and Swabhava, breaking all caste restrictions even if he gets a suitable match in his community." With the object of giving a practical shape to the above resolution a branch of the All-India Jat-Pat Torak Mandal, Lahore, was then and there organised for U. P. with the following office-bearers:—President:—Dr. Shyam Sarup Ji Satya Vrat, L. M. S., Bareilly. Vice-President:—Professor Dharmendra Nath Tarak Shiromani, M.A., Meerut. Secretary:—Snatak Ishwar Datta Bhishagacharya, Charak Chikitsalaya, Parade, Cawnpore. Asstt.-Secretary:—Pt. Ram Charan Vidyarthi, B.A., Lucknow. Treasurer:—Dr. Ram Singh Bhalla, M.R.C.P. & L.R.C.S., Cawnpore. The Mandal's head office is at Cawnpore for the present. All well-wishers of Hindu Society and the Motherland are requested to extend their helping hand to our workers in the U. P., for, in the words of Lala Hardayal, we must kill the venomous snake of Jat-Pat, otherwise it will kill us. Every unselfish and right thinking person can easily see that Shuddhi, Achhutodhar, Hindu Sangathan, and even Swarajya are mere idle talks until this baneful system is totally abolished. All the well-wishers of humanity from Buddha to Dayanand have been preaching against it. Therefore, every patriot is expected to help us in this social reform work.

Cholera in Nepal: The following Press Note has been issued: Information has been received by the Government of Bombay that cholera has broken out at Birganj in Nepal. Pilgrims who had intended visiting Pasupatinath near Katmandu during the approaching Sivaratri are therefore warned that the Raxaul-Birganj route is closed to travellers and that they will be unable to go to Pasupatinath.

NOTES

The Social Evil in Bombay : We are glad to notice the interest which the women of Bombay are evincing in the position of their unfortunate sisters whose lives are lived in brothels. A well-attended public meeting of women was held last Saturday and it passed a resolution for the suppression of brothels. The meeting, however, threw out an amendment extending support to the Vigilance Association which is the only non-denominational body in Bombay specially devoted to the cause of fallen women. The speeches of some of the ladies at the meeting also showed that they have a very imperfect idea of the subject with which they were dealing. This is not surprising, because nowhere is it more true than in this sphere that one-half of the world does not know how the other half lives. One of the fallacies indulged in by a speaker was that the brothels are mostly patronised by the poor and that the danger to the well-to-do arose out of having to come in contact with the poor in the capacity of domestic servants. This identification of poverty with vice, is hardly supported by facts. A good deal of the evil will disappear if the rich and the relatively well-to-do, ceased to exploit poverty for the satisfaction of their carnal longings. The fact is so obvious that no mistake is possible about it. As for the suppression of brothels, the passing of a law is a comparatively easy matter, but unless public opinion is strongly behind it, the law will easily become a means of oppression without materially achieving its object. In a recent case in Rangoon, it came out that some Police officials were trying to blackmail the inmates of brothels which, apparently, still exist in Rangoon in spite of the drastic law passed some years ago for its suppression. Public opinion, to be effective in support of such legislation, should manifest itself by the establishment of rescue homes to which young girls found in undesirable surroundings may be removed and where they can be brought up in healthy surroundings. The best way of reducing and ultimately suppressing prostitution, is to attack the sources of supply. Nature in her infinite wisdom condemns promiscuity to sterility. Few girls bred up to prostitution are the daughters of prostitutes. They are mostly recruited from poor families by purchase or kidnapping. If, therefore, we keep careful watch over young girls found in unhealthy surroundings, and establish homes to which they can be removed under sympathetic supervision, we shall be doing the best to control the evil. We say, therefore, let us agitate for rescue homes at the same time as we ask for the suppression of brothels. Vigilance work is, therefore, of the utmost importance, and the Vigilance Association deserves the liberal support of the public.

India's World-Mission: We have received a well-written pamphlet from the Arunachal Mission, Behar. The author, Swami Alokananda Mahabharati, prophesies a great mission for India—the mission of spiritualising politics and economics. India, he observes, has been made subject that she might, by the power of her spirit, banish subjection itself from the whole world, that she might for ever and for every individual and every nation solve the question of freedom, political, economic and spiritual. Such a freedom can only be brought about by a world federation and world commonwealth and the author marks out India as the nation best fitted to take the initiative in the matter by calling a world conference of all nations. And in order that India may adequately equip herself for this momentous world task, the author wants that she should first successfully solve the problem of finding a common meeting-ground not only between Hinduism and Mahomedanism, the two dominant religions of India, but between all the religions of the world. The pamphlet is, in short, an earnest plea for the sons and daughters of India to take up the cry of Universal Peace and Universal Brotherhood and to establish God's kingdom on earth. The pamphlet is priced annas eight and can be had of the Arunachal Mission, Lila Mandir, Deoghar, Behar.

Languages of Bombay Presidency : The Senate of the Bombay University considered on Saturday last a proposal to recognise Hindi as a vernacular language for the School-Leaving examination. An objection was raised to it on the ground that Hindi was not one of the languages of the Presidency. In the Bombay Census Report, 1921, there is a table of languages spoken in Bombay Presidency. In this table, the first group is headed "Languages of the Presidency." Besides Kanarese, Marathi, Gujarathi and Sindhi which are most spoken in the four divisions, the list of languages of the Presidency includes Brahmi, Pushto, Balochi, Lapuda-Kacchi, Hindi, Punjabi and some other languages. Hindi is spoken by over a million and a quarter persons, and comes next after the four vernaculars in respect of the number of people speaking it. Hindi, in this table, means western Hindi and includes Urdu, Hindustani and Musalmani. Urdu is thus regarded as a branch of Hindi and the number of Urdu speakers in the Presidency is thus much less than a million. The Bombay University has for years recognised Urdu as a vernacular and it stands to reason that the claims of Hindi, the parent language, to recognition are not inferior to those of Urdu.

Anglo-Indians and Indian Nationalism: The message which Col. Gidney gave to his countrymen on his return to this country from his mission to England, breathes something of that spirit of nationalism which has hitherto been absent in his utterances. "I come", he said, "with two messages, one for unity, peace and co-operation of Anglo-Indians not only among themselves but with the other communities of India. The other is that we should pay increasing attention to the needs of India as our home and country, not as one of its minor communities, but as an important community. We must associate ourselves more closely with the other peoples of India..." We are glad to see that, after all, Col. Gidney has realised that India and not England is the home of the Anglo-Indians and that the best thing for them would be to throw in their lot with Indians instead of following the traditional policy of isolation and even antagonism to India's aspirations for Swaraj. Col. Crawford's repudiation of the claim of equality of Anglo-Indians with Europeans and the wise advice given him by friends of the community in England, have no doubt brought about this change in Col. Gidney. If the leader of the Anglo-Indian Deputation to England speaks in this strain, we have no doubt about the views and opinions of the rank and file of the community.

The Development Department: The Bombay Development Department has come in for a good deal of criticism as a result of the disclosures made by the report of the Sub-Committee, appointed by the Advisory Committee of the Department to go into the financial aspects of the development scheme. Although the report is not yet officially published, it has by now become public property. The Sub-Committee has submitted two reports, the Minority and the Majority. Mr. Manu Subedhar, the representative of the Indian Merchants' Chamber on the Committee, is the author of the Minority report. Both the reports agree in this, that the scheme is an utter financial failure, that it was hatched in secret and carried through in indecent haste by the late Lloyd Government and that, as a result of the blunders and miscalculations of the original estimates of the Consulting Engineer, the cost of the scheme has trebled while the time it will take for completion has more than quadrupled. But, while the Majority report advises the completion of three blocks and the re-examination of the whole question after three years, the Minority report urges complete stoppage of work, the disbandment of the Department, the selling off of the plant and the writing off of the entire amount so far spent on the scheme. And of the two, we need not say that we favour the Majority view as the sounder and more practicable one under the circumstances which makes the best of a bad job.

Naturalisation of Aliens in British India: In a note appended to the Select Committee's Report on the Bill to amend the law relating to the naturalisation of aliens resident in British India, three Independent members of the Assembly, Messrs. Ramachandra Rao, Neogy and Venkatapathi Raju have drawn the attention of the Government of India to the helpless position in which India is placed in regard to her right of granting or refusing certificates of naturalisation to American citizens and other foreigners from outside India. We have on many occasions pointed out how, as a result of the confiscatory decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, citizenship rights of Indians in many States have been revoked. If India, however, wants to retaliate, she cannot, for she is simply helpless in the matter. An American citizen on his getting a certificate of naturalisation under the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act of 1914, automatically attains the status of a natural-born British subject, and the Indian Legislature is not in a position to legislate so as to amend an Act of Parliament. This is indeed an anomalous state of things and it is but right that India also should be placed on the same footing as the self-governing Dominions in this respect.

A Tricameral Legislature for India: A novel suggestion for a Tricameral Legislature for India was made by Professor Bhatheja in a paper read before the Indian Economic Association held recently in Madras. As India has many divergent religions and communities in its midst, he offers this solution of the problem of communal representation in the Legislature. In addition to the already existing two chambers in the Central Government, there should also be, he suggests, a Chamber of the Communities representative of all communal interests and elected on a purely communal basis. This Chamber is to have an absolute veto on the popular chamber on all legislation affecting the communities. The Professor's suggestion, no doubt, looks well in theory, but in actual practice, it will be found full of difficulty. Already, the existence of a reactionary and conservative Second Chamber has been productive of serious deadlocks and the addition of a Chamber elected on a communal basis would only complicate matters and, besides raising the bogey of religion in danger at every moment, will defeat the end of legislation by unduly delaying it.

Labour in the Calcutta Jute Factories: Messrs. Johnstone and Sims, who had been on a short visit to this country to inspect the conditions of the jute industry in Calcutta, have issued a report on the result of their investigations. The report is a damning document and brings to light the vast profits made by the shareholders, amounting to 90 per cent per annum, the miserable housing conditions of the workers, the death-rate among children under ten years being as high as 50 per cent, and the absence of even primary education among child workers. When Mr. Johnstone visited Calcutta and Bombay and condemned the miserable chawls in which workers are huddled as unfit for human habitation, a section of the press at once twitted him with conditions in his own native place. But whatever may be the state of things in Dundee, there is no justification or excuse for the truly appalling and staggering conditions depicted in Mr. Johnstone's report, especially when it is taken into consideration that the shareholders have been all the while pocketing fabulous profits, the like of which we have never heard. We hope the authorities concerned will lose no time in instituting a searching inquiry into the conditions of labour in the industry.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1926.

ALL-INDIA PROHIBITION LEAGUE.

Nearly two years ago a Conference met in Jubbulpore to prepare the ground for an All-India Conference to focus Indian opinion on the subject of Prohibition. A small Committee was formed to carry out this object and the Prohibition Supplement to the Indian Social Reformer was issued in pursuance of the desire of the Conference. The Rev. Herbert Anderson arrived shortly after in India deputed by the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association in England to co-operate with the Indian movement. The publication of the report of the Bombay Excise Committee and of the resolution of the Government of Bombay thereon declaring Prohibition to be the goal of their Excise policy, gave powerful impetus to the movement. In fact, it may be said that it is in Bombay and from Bombay that the movement has received most strength and support. The action of Indian States like Bhavnagar, Bhopal and others in adopting and putting into force the policy of Total Prohibition, has also been a source of much encouragement to the promoters and supporters of the Prohibition campaign.

The All-India Convention held at Delhi was a great success. The President, Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, is one of the most thoughtful and capable of our public men, and his address which we publish in full, was a weighty and forcible pronouncement on all aspects of the subject of prohibition. The resolutions passed at the Convention and the Constitution of the All-India Prohibition League are also published in this issue. The Conference was attended by representatives of all classes and communities and all shades of political opinion from the complete Non-Co-operator to ultra-moderate politician. The Prohibition League has an influential body of office-bearers from all parts of the country. The founding of the League is a momentous event in the history of the Temperance movement in India. It means that the country will no longer be satisfied with half measures and that the only thing which will satisfy it is complete and total prohibition except, of course, for medical purposes, of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks and drugs. Several of the Provincial Legislative Councils have passed resolutions demanding the early adoption of prohibition. A similar resolution has also been passed by the Legislative Assembly. Public opinion in the country, therefore, is quite ripe for action. Some of the Local Governments would be glad to take action in the direction of the reform. It is the Government of India that bars the way.

While on this subject, we may refer to a speech made by the Governor of Bombay, Sir Leslie Wilson, during his recent visit to Broach. The Anjuman-e-Islam of the place presented an address to His Excellency in which, among other requests, they begged that effect should be given within a short period to the policy of prohibition which the Government of Bombay have announced as being the goal of their Excise policy. Sir Leslie Wilson said in reply that the suggestion was a very natural one to come from the Anjuman, but he added that as they were anxious, and rightly anxious, for the spread of education, they must help Government to find other sources of revenue before pressing for prohibition. With great respect to His Excellency, we can hardly regard this as a proper line of reasoning. Is the excise revenue devoted wholly or even largely to education in this Presidency, as Sir Leslie Wilson's argument suggests? The excise revenue is, we believe, about four crores and a half rupees, while the educational expenditure is hardly a fourth of that sum. Even if the whole excise revenue were spent on education, His Excellency's reasoning would not be correct. To ask the people to choose between being illiterate or being drunk, is not a fair alternative. Liquor is a source of demoralisation. It also happens to be a source of revenue unfortunately, but it is within the resources of statesmanship to find some other source which will not be a cause of demoralisation. We are sorry to say that the Government of Bombay have recently become rather indifferent in conforming their fiscal policy to ethical requirements. The tax levied on gambling at the race course, is utterly unjustifiable as a measure of moral finance. The Prohibition League will have a hard task in having to combat such fallacies as that to which we have referred. We have not the least doubt that, within the next few years, Prohibition will become the accepted policy in all provinces. The formation of the League is a timely step which will greatly accelerate the advent of the much-desired reform.

The Prohibition Supplement: The Prohibition Supplement which we have been issuing every month was started about two years ago in response to a request from Temperance workers. It was understood that the Prohibition League, which was to be started, would have an organ of its own, and the Supplement was to be a temporary and tentative substitute for it. Now that the League has been founded, it is no longer necessary for us to continue to issue the Supplement. Prohibition topics will, as before, be dealt with in the Reformer in the ordinary course.

A Disclaimer: The February number of the Modern Review, Calcutta, gives the place of honour to an article on "The Place of Non-co-operation in Indian Nationalism" stated to have been written by Mr. K. Natarajan, Editor of the Indian Social Reformer and the Indian Daily Mail. Mr. Natarajan did not write the article and has written to say so to the editor of the Review.

THE PROHIBITION CONVENTION AT DELHI.

From the reports at hand the Prohibition Convention, the first of its kind in India, which held its sittings in Delhi on the 29th, 30th and 31st January, was an unqualified success. Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao of Madras presided over the Conference. People of all classes and creeds, delegates from different parts of the country, Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Calicut, Shillong, Lucknow and Lahore, and ladies in large numbers were present to discuss the problems of Prohibition, to organise a League and to lend their support to the ultimate suppression of the traffic in poisonous drinks and drugs. The Convention opened with a social gathering, and a photograph of the audience was taken. Then the Chairman of the local Reception Committee, Dr. S. P. Shroff, in the course of his address, said that much spade work had to be done before legislation for the abolition of drink is resorted to. He eulogised the action of the Government of Bombay in that it had led the way by declaring that the ultimate object of its excise policy was total prohibition, and dwelt at length on the benefits of prohibition. The Rev. Herbert Anderson, the organiser and convener of the Conference, read several messages of support to the movement received from leaders all over India and Ceylon. One such message was from Mahatma Gandhi who said: "If your federation is a strong body, strong not in the sense of number, but influence, you will make total prohibition a vital issue." Another important message wishing the Conference every success was from Lord Clwyd, the President of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association in England. The speech of the evening was the presidential address which was listened to with rapt attention. Then the delegates met together to discuss the constitution of the Prohibition League. The second day of the session was crowded with activities. There was a public meeting at the Theatre Hall, Raisina, where lectures were delivered by speakers from different provinces under the chairmanship of Dr. V. D. Rutherford, the late M. P., who is on a visit to India. A meeting for ladies was also convened on the same day when many ladies of light and leading spoke on the occasion on drink and its attendant evils. At the mass meeting held in the evening speeches were made condemning the masterly inactivity of the Government and asking people to bestir themselves if they wanted to see prohibition established in India. Resolutions were also adopted to that effect. The last day's proceedings were confined to the formation of a Prohibition League in India and the election of its office-bearers.

OFFICE-BEARERS.

The personnel of the Prohibition League is as follows:- Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, President, Mr. Haji Wajiudeen and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Vice-Presidents, Dr. S. K. Datta, Treasurer, and Revd. Anderson, Secretary. A Committee of 25 members including Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar and Maulana Mahomed Ali was formed, besides office-bearers, to conduct propaganda work throughout India.

DRAFT CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE.

The following is the Draft Constitution of the Prohibition League of India.

1. Name :—The League shall be called the Prohibition League of India.

2. Objects :—The objects of the League shall be—

(a) To co-ordinate the activities of all temperance organisations and movements in British India and the Indian States, and to assist them to co-operate with each other in a common effort to free the country from the use of, and the traffic in, intoxicating drinks and drugs.

(b) To create, educate and organise public opinion, and through constitutional means to seek the advancement of total abstinence and the prohibition movement throughout the Indian Empire.

(c) To stimulate investigation, and to aid in the organisation of temperance societies in provincial areas, and in the preparation and distribution of English and vernacular prohibition literature.

(d) To counteract the misrepresentation of the prohibition cause in the public press.

(e) To be in communication with the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, the World League Against Alcoholism, and similar organisations, in regard to such matters as call for consideration or action from the point of view of the Indian Empire.

(f) To make provision for the convening of prohibition conferences whenever such, in the opinion of the League, is desirable.

3. Membership :—Any temperance organisation or society in any part of the Indian Empire agreeing with the above-mentioned objects of the League may affiliate itself by payment of a fee of Rs. five, and subsequent annual membership shall be secured by payment of a fee of Rupees three. Patrons of the League shall be those donating Rupees two hundred and fifty. Life-members of the League shall be those donating Rupees one hundred. Personal members of the League shall be those paying an annual subscription of not less than Rupee one.

It is understood that all members shall be total abstainers.

4. Officers and Executive Committee:— The League shall appoint its own officers.

They shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a General Secretary, a Travelling Secretary, and an Honorary Treasurer.

The League shall appoint in addition to the officers a committee of twelve members who with the officers shall constitute the Executive Committee of the League. It shall have the right to fill vacancies in its own membership. Three shall constitute quorum.

5. Meetings :—The League shall ordinarily meet every second year, but a special meeting may be called, or the regular meeting postponed, if the Executive is satisfied that this is desirable.

6. Committees :—The League may from time to time appoint committees to deal with such matters as may be assigned to them.

7. Funds :—In addition to membership fees, donations will be accepted from those interested in the League, whether abstainers or not. Support from British and American temperance interests will be gratefully received, also collections at special meetings, and grants from provincial Governments for such activities as commend themselves to them.

8. Amendments :—This constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any ordinary meeting of the League, provided that three months' notice of such proposed amendment be sent to the General Secretary.

BYE LAWS.

(1) The regular meeting of the League shall ordinarily be held in the autumn. It may be held at different centres, the place for such meeting and the precise date being settled by the executive. It shall lay down the policy of the League and give its instructions to the Executive Committee and its officers.

(2) The Joint Secretaries (General and Travelling) shall be under the general directions of the Executive Committee.

(3) The Honorary Treasurer shall have charge of the funds belonging to the League. He shall keep all accounts for the same His books shall be audited annually.

(4) The General Secretary shall act as Secretary of the Executive Committee performing the usual duties pertaining to such office. The Travelling Secretary shall tour the country seeking to arouse interest in the objects and work of the League, and shall carry out such instructions of the League or its Executive Committee as shall be given to him.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

The following is the full text of the address delivered by the President, Dewan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao, at the All-India Prohibition Conference at Delhi:—

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am sensible of the high honour which I have received at the hands of my friends and fellow-workers in the great cause for the promotion of which all of us are met here to-day. I cannot bring to my task the same equipment and experience as many others—European, American and Indian—who are here and who by years of devoted work in the cause of temperance have earned the gratitude of us all. Nevertheless, having been called to initiate the proceedings of a great movement which will take shape to-day, I have obeyed your call. We have met none too soon; an effective All-India organisation to co-ordinate all temperance activities in the country has been long overdue.

A CENTRAL ORGANIZATION.

As you are well aware, the inspiration and direction of temperance work in this country have come for many years from the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, London, which was founded in 1888 by that good friend of India, Mr. W. S. Caine. Many of our temperance organisations in India are affiliated to this body. In more recent years the Right Honourable Lord Clwyd, the present President, and Mr. Frederick Grubb, the General Secretary of the Association, have done yeoman service to the cause. It is my most pleasant duty to express on your behalf our deep obligations to them and to all others in Great Britain who have undertaken in the past the task of bringing to the notice of Parliament the evil effects of the excise policy pursued by the Government in this country. The recent changes in the constitutional machinery of India have shifted to this country the centre of gravity as regards this question. The British Parliament and its mouthpiece, the Secretary of State for India, are no longer the final authorities, nor have they any effective power under the present constitution in matters relating to excise administration. The Legislatures in India and the Ministers are now empowered by statute to initiate such measures as they like in furtherance of their policy in regard to the problem of drink. After the introduction of the Reforms that policy necessarily depends upon and varies with the strength of public opinion in this country. It has, therefore, been felt that the organisation of effective public opinion in this land about the evils of alcoholism is one of the urgent necessities of the situation. A central organisation in India to co-ordinate the activities of all temperance workers in the various provinces is an obvious want which must be met without any further delay. The All-India Temperance Council performed for some years the functions of a central organisation for the whole of India and sought to focus public attention on the problems of temperance reform which were of general application throughout the country. Almost immediately after the introduction of the Reforms an attempt was made to reorganise this Council to represent more effectively all sections of religious and temperance opinion in India There has been a general feeling among those interested in this question, temperance reformers and total abstainers alike, that an independent central organisation supported by sympathy and advice from the West should be established in the country and that a convention for starting such an organisation should be called. We are, therefore, here for the establishment of a movement that is intended to meet the demands of the situation as it is found in India to-day. The need for an intensive propaganda throughout the country is so obvious that I do not wish to dilate any further on it. I should make it quite clear, however, that the present movement for a central organisation to direct and stimulate all temperance activities in this country has taken shape with the approval of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, London, whose valuable experience and advice in fighting the cause will continue to be at our disposal. There are many features of the problem in which its advice and assistance will be very necessary to us in this country.

WORLD CAMPAIGN.

At the outset, Ladies and Gentlemen, I am tempted to make a preliminary observation. I venture to think that we in India have not yet realised the great value of international thought and experience in the solution of the many complicated problems of life. Whatever may be the reasons, neither the people of India nor the Government of this country have taken their legitimate part in the great movements that are now shaping the destinies of the world. International congresses and conferences are now being periodically organised at regular intervals for the mutual exchange and the better understanding of the basic principles of education, morality and religion. The experience gained in each country in the solution of the many important problems of sanitation and public health has been made available to all countries of the world at these congresses and conferences, and similar world-wide gatherings have also been organised for

the promotion of reform in the administration of prisons. The use, rather the abuse, of opium and other narcotic and dangerous drugs, has also become a matter of international concern and the Conventions at Geneva have focussed the attention of the whole world to this subject and to the systematic study of the situation relating to the consumption of this drug and its derivatives. The restrictive and remedial methods adopted in each country is now the subject of anxious consideration and even controversy between the nations of the world. Similarly, the movement against alcoholism, apart from the outstanding question as to whether the watchword of the movement should be moderation or total abstinence, has been a world-wide movement for several years. The International Congress Against Alcoholism has met at periodical intervals in both the hemispheres, and several allied organisations which are giving their thought to this subject, like the International Union for the Protection of Native Races against Alcohol, the International Union against the Misuse of Spirits, the International Federation of Catholic Abstainers, the International Temperance Bureau, have also been meeting at these centres for the mutual exchange of views and experience on this large problem of social progress and also to co-ordinate their activities. It was my good fortune to be present in August 1921 at the 16th International Congress held at Lausanne in that little Republic of the Alps which has now become the meeting-ground of all nationalities. Many eminent men and women from the different countries of the world interested in this world-campaign against alcoholism, attended this Congress. Besides these, 33 Governments, including Great Britain, France, Belgium, China, Italy, Hungary, sent official representatives to the Congress. India was not represented at this gathering by any official delegate and I was the solitary non-official Indian who attended that great gathering, having been elected thereto by the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, London, as I happened to be there at the time. To me personally it was a great privilege and a great experience to meet the many ladies and gentlemen who came there from the different parts of the world to render an account to the Congess of the most recent developments in their respective countries in regard to this question. My point, however, is that we in India are not taking advantage of international thought and experience in every department of life which, through the medium of these world congresses and conferences, are now being made available. This is an age of international co-operation, and every country is deriving great and decisive benefits by an active participation in these world movements. The world is now getting organised into a universal brotherhood for the promotion of common aims and ideals, and every country is comparing notes with every other on all important problems of social welfare. India cannot afford to lag behind or lead a life of isolation.

The moral issue.

I have ventured to make these preliminary observations as the Prohibition movement which is now engaging attention in every country in the world has not as yet received that serious consideration which it deserves from the leaders of thought in India. The experience gained in this world-wide movement against alcoholism in the various countries of the world is now available to us and it is our clear duty to educate public opinion and the Government of the country to pursue a policy more in consonance with world experience and our own national sentiments and ideals. It is unnecessary to undertake at this stage any detailed criticism of the success or otherwise of the past policy adopted by the Government. It has succeeded in some respects and failed in others, and I shall advert to this matter a little later. The justification for this policy is that the Government of India and the Local Governments generally followed and reflected the British attitude in regard to the liquor problem. The movement for temperance in Great Britain and the development of British popular opinion have always proceeded in the belief that a moderate indulgence in drink is not harmful, and that any action by the State should be confined to restrictive measures, regulation and control. One of the outstanding differences between the American and British attitude towards the liquor problem is that in the American States it has been made a moral issue, whereas in Great Britain and the other countries of Europe it is not. A great American has explained quite recently that by moral issue is meant "an issue on which something akin to emotional horror is evoked against a given practice.' Such a feeling is commonly evoked against killing, stealing, lying, adultery and a few other things. When such feeling of emotional horror exists it is useless to talk of the difference between moderate and immoderate indulgence. The thing itself even in the most moderate form is looked upon with emotional aversion. Where no such emotional horror exists, it is possible and even proper to distinguish between moderate and immoderate indulgence.

Religious Sentiment.

The religious tenets and practices of the two great communities of India have prohibited drink to their adherents, and Indian sentiment on the question of drink is, therefore, more akin to the sentiment of the American than of the Britisher. The greatest of Hindu law-givers, Manu, has a most drastic edict against drinking. He laid down that "with the drinker of madhu let no one eat, no one join in a sacrifice, no one read. With such a wretch let no one be allied in marriage. Let him be abject and excluded from all social privileges. Cast forth as a vagabond on the earth, branded with indelible ignominy, he shall be deserted by his own parents and treated with by none." Buddha also enjoined total abstinence from all intoxicants. The Koran has forbidden drink to the followers of the Muhammadan faith. In the United States the temperance movement was, at the beginning, in part a moral issue and in part a rational movement against the deleterious effects of drink when taken in excess. The movement was really started at the time of Declaration of Independence, and the religious organisations in the country began to take a positive stand on the question and carried on a campaign against drink with all the fervour of a religious crusade. It was not, however, until after the Civil War of 1861–65 that the fight against liquor as a moral issue began to assume large proportions. In 1869 the National Prohibition Party was organised and the subsequent history of the movement and the activities of the Anti-Saloon League are landmarks in the history of the movement. In India, large and important communities have set their face against drink for a much longer period than in America. It is probably true that the sentiment against drink and in favour of total abstinence is stronger in some communities in India than in others. But even the latter regard it as a moral delinquency. There is no indigenous community in this country, so far as I know, which stands up for the justification of a moderate indulgence in drink. Stray references to passages in Ramayana, Mahabharata and the Puranas have been made by the supporters of the present policy showing the existence of the drink evil in ancient India. Nobody has ever said that the drink evil never existed at any time in this country, but there is nothing in India like "a national beverage", nor is there a cry which we often hear in the United Kingdom that Prohibition will deprive the poor man of his beer. The true interpretation of these descriptive passages is that they very much reprobated the drink evil than otherwise. Anyway, it is not only my conviction but also that of others who have given thought to this question that the general sentiment of the communities in this country is in favour of total abstinence; and this sentiment is the most hopeful feature of the situation. The acceptance of Prohibition as a goal of their policy by the Government of Bombay and the comparative unanimity with which members of all communities in the Central Legislature accepted the policy of Prohibition are the strongest proofs of the general sentiment of the country in favour of total abstinence. If it is once recognised that the problem of drink is even partially a moral issue in this country, the argument based on the violation of individual liberty at once falls to the ground. Prohibition is as much a violation of a man's individual liberty as compulsory education, compulsory compensation for workmen, obligatory sanitary laws; and alcoholic prohibition is or should be in the same class as opium prohibition.

THE MEDICAL ASPECT.

I must now make a brief reference to the medical aspect of the question. In all discussions of the problem this aspect is now assuming great importance. Many eminent men in Europe and America are now devoting their attention to a systematic investigation of the effects of alcohol on the human organism, and the volume of literature on the subject is growing day by day. A scientific study of the effect of the consumption of alcohol on the health, physical strength, and mental capacity of human beings has been undertaken, and the results, so far as they are available, are interesting to us here in India. I do not wish to refer to this aspect of the question in any detail, but I should like to invite your attention to the findings of one of the most important and authoritative committees appointed in 1918 in Great Britain by Lord D'Abernon. This committee included well-known scientists like Professor Sherrington, the President of the Royal Society, Sir George Newman, Professors Custing and Mott. The committee undertook a review of the scientific work done by many investigators and of the evidence that they had accumulated, and published a most interesting and valuable report. The observations and experiments they reviewed would appear to indicate that parental alcoholism may have a seriously detrimental influence on the stock; and they stated that if the results are confirmed by further investigations it will be reasonable to conclude that this is probably one of the most important modes in which intemperance threatens the health and well-being of the community. But in view of the extreme importance of this conclusion the committee were of opinion that it is clearly desirable to suspend judgment until the work has been completed by other enquirers. The further investigations indicated by them have been made subsequent to this pronouncement and in the light of these and other observations made at the Rockfeller Institute for Medical Research, the National Birth-Rate Commission of Great Britain which sat from 1918 to 1920 confirmed and extended the findings of Lord D'Abernon's Committee made two years previously and came to the conclusion that "the evidence before them established beyond question that parental alcoholism is capable of exercising an injurious influence on the birth-rate, both from a qualitative and a quantitative point of view." Alcohol is, therefore, a racial poison which, according to these authorities, must be eliminated in the future interests of the race. In fact, at the International Conference held at Lausanne four years ago, Dr. G. W. Saleeby (London) foreshadowed that the suppression in North America of the racial poisons, now rampant in Europe, would lead to an epoch-making contrast between the historic European races in Europe and North America respectively—racial decadence in the Old World and racial ascendance in the new. The whole question of the use of alcohol in the tropics was discussed only last year by a distinguished medical man, well-known in India. Sir Leonard Rogers referred to and relied on opinions of other medical men of eminence who expressed the view that the common notion that some form of alcoholic beverage is necessary in tropical climates is a "mischievous delusion". Nothing is more common, even at the present day, than to hear of officers both in India and the West Indies who assert that the climate requires alcohol. These are precisely the climates where alcohol is most hurtful." Sir Leonard Rogers is "convinced that it is quite unnecessary to take the drug in the tropics" though he had no definite evidence that drinking in a very moderate amount will do any harm. On the other hand, many persons still believe that alcohol has a certain food value which may be increased in certain conditions of disease and convalescence and that, provided that such an interval elapses between the times when alcoholic beverages are drunk as will prevent the persistent presence of a deleterious amount of the drug in the body and provided it is not taken in concentrated form, it is not physiologically harmful in the case of the large majority of normal adults. These opinions of scientific men have great value and in a controversy of this kind a stage must arrive when the conclusions of science are accepted without demur. I believe such a stage will be reached very soon in regard to this question. The scientific aspect of this problem may be, therefore, left as an open question for some time to come, but in a consideration of the subject, medical opinion, which is growing in volume and authority, cannot be ignored. Whatever may be the present state of medical and scientific opinion on the subject, nobody has said that the consumption of alcoholic beverages is absolutely necessary for health or actually required for the hardest physical labour. It is undeniable that any excessive consumption, though falling short of intoxication, even if only occasional, is physiologically injurious, inconsistent with a high standard of health, and demonstrably incompatible with the fullest mental and physical output, whether in quantity or in quality. What is even more serious from the standpoint of the community is that the habit of consuming alcoholic beverages is a dangerous one, in that a proportion of those who begin as moderate drinkers are occasionally beguiled into injurious excesses, whilst some at least each year pass into the ranks of the habitual drunkards. It seems to me that the conclusion cannot be escaped that whatever loss of pleasure might be involved in the giving up of the consumption of alcoholic beverages there would be little or no loss of health or efficiency, but, on the other hand, a vast though incalculable gain in health and strength and in physical and mental capacity.

Economic Efficiency.

Ladies and Gentlemen, the problem of drink has to be considered from another equally important standpoint. It is an integral part of the whole question of the social well-being of the people. Whatever differences there may be in regard to the religious and medical aspects of the liquor problem, there is no doubt that wherever prohibition has been tried, it has profoundly influenced their daily lives. Some of the results of Prohibition have been measured in statistics, but there are others, whose effect on the lives of the people it is impossible to estimate by figures. One of the great experiences of the world war was that definite economies in food and man-power were only possible with restriction and elimination of drink. If this is so at the time of war, it is a self-evident fact that the elimination of drink is even of more value in times of peace. The effect of Prohibition of liquor on the community as regards industrial, social, and moral conditions, the fact that wives and families get a larger proportion of their husbands' wages, the improvement in marital relations and in sanitary and health conditions in homes, these and other results cannot be estimated by statistics. There is a considerable volume of evidence that these improvements have been secured, that industry has profited very materially through heightened morale and money wages and that savings have increased. These are all very vital considerations in the initiation of a new social policy in this country. Anybody who is acquainted with the life of the poorer classes in this country knows very well that the drink evil has secured a strong foothold amongst them and a very substantial portion of earnings go to the drinkshops. The condition in industrial cities in India is much worse than in agricultural areas and it is only firm and drastic action that can effect any improvement. The consumption of drink and the increasingly impoverished condition of the poorer classes have a relation to each other in all countries but much more so here. We have no accurate data in India of the national drink bill or of the drink manufacturing industry or of the distributive side of the ancillary trades. It is, however, a notorious fact that the portion of the national drink bill that goes to the Government of India and the Provincial Governments has increased by leaps and bounds and continues to increase, but Sir Basil Blackett has in the recent debate on the Legislative Assembly defended the policy of the Government of India and the Provincial Governments and contended that they acted on the principle of securing the maximum of revenue and the minimum of consumption.

Statistics of Consumption.

The high duty and the reduction of the number of shops have undoubtedly produced some beneficent results. It is, however, clear that the policy, so far as it relates to securing the maximum revenue, has been entirely successful while there are doubts as regards that portion of it which relates to minimum consumption. Sir Basil Blackett has quoted figures from 1883-1884 up to date relating to country spirits and contended that the consumption of country spirits is now 2.68 gallons per 100 of the population, and compared favourably with the figure of 15·33 gallons in Ceylon, 30 gallons in England and Wales, and 58 gallons in Scotland. While I gratefully acknowledge that the average consumption of country spirits has substantially fallen during the last 12 years, the comparison of India with England and Wales and Scotland is altogether misleading. In the latter countries almost everybody is addicted to liquor, whereas in India large communities forming a substantial portion of the population are total abstainers. Comparison by averages in these circumstances is not, therefore, proper. He has also overlooked the fact that in India there are other kinds of intoxicating liquors like tari or toddy for which there are no official figures of consumption. For example, in Madras, 46 per cent of the total excise revenue is derived from country fermented liquor called 'toddy' in regard to which there are no official statistics of production in quantity: There are accounts of the number of trees tapped without any accurate data of the quantity of liquor produced therefrom and the consumption of such liquor. Similarly, in Burma, 41 per cent of the revenue is derived from country fermented liquor whereas only 15·4 per cent. of the total revenue is derived from country spirits. There are no statistics of the trees tapped or of the quantity of "toddy or tari" thereby produced in the provinces of

realpatidar.com

Bengal, Burma, Bihar and Orissa, the United Provinces and Assam. There are also reliable statistical data about the consumption of foreign liquor. It is also a notorious fact that if one kind of liquor is made dear by higher rates of excise, the consumers fall back upon other kinds of liquor of cheaper varieties. This has been the case in recent years in Bombay and the Punjab. The claim of Sir Basil Blackett that the policy of the Government has resulted in the reduction of the consumption of liquor is, therefore, true only in respect of the one kind of liquor to which he referred, viz., the country spirits; but what we have to judge is whether that policy has resulted in a minimum of consumption of all classes of liquor. On this matter he has furnished us with no data and as a matter of fact no accurate data are available.

PROHIBITION SITUATION IN AMERICA.

I have thus far referred to certain important aspects of the movement against alcoholism on account of which a policy of total prohibition has been advocated in other countries. These general features of the question to which I have invited your attention are even more applicable to the conditions of India. The statement has, however, been made that Prohibition in the United States has undermined all respect for law and order and that the extension of the principle to India is not desirable, at least, on that ground. In the course of the discussion in the Legislative Assembly in September last, Sir Basil Blackett observed that this policy has become a serious menace to the whole fabric of law and order in "certain parts" of the United States and that there has been a general lowering of the standard of duty to the State among the citizens. In his opinion it has led to corruption among the Federal agents, to a great increase in illicit distillation, to a great increase in sumuggling and to a very great increase in expenditure and preventive work accompanied by a very large decrease in revenue." This is an exaggerated view of the situation, but I admit there is an element of truth in these statements. The introduction of national prohibition in the United States is undoubtedly the greatest social experiment of modern times. It has been hailed as a great success by its supporters and its failure has been asserted with equal emphasis, and conflicting accounts have appeared in the press for some time. A good deal of literature has grown round the problem with which all of us have become quite familiar. Many differ in the interpretation of facts and others in regard to the facts themselves. Perhaps the best explanation of the present state of things is the one which I have found in a recent issue of one of the most thoughtful journals dealing with social problems in America. It says: "The whole prohibition situation has become involved in the psychology of warfare. As in the day of war between nations, communiques are issued from opposing headquarters calculated to strengthen the morale of the fighting force and to undermine the strength of the enemy. Perhaps that is inevitable and to a certain extent even justifiable in a struggle for social betterment. But meanwhile it is quite evident the whole of the truth is not revealed by this kind of strategy. Propaganda is countered with propaganda without unbiassed search for all the facts."

SOCIAL GAINS.

In this state of things many persons have desired for some time for an impartial investigation into the subject, and the Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has undertaken this enquiry. The result of this enquiry has been published in October last. The report sets out fully the remarkable social gains which have resulted from the adoption of Prohibition, a lowering of the death-rate from alcoholic diseases and a great reduction in drunkenness and the consumption of liquor, and it also calls attention to the part undoubtedly played by prohibition and by the abolition of the saloon in improving business and economic conditions. On the subject of enforcement it says: "When the darker side of the prohibition situation is faced, it must be remembered that no intelligent advocate of the new regime expected that it would be fully effective. Further, no one familiar with the efforts of those States which adopted prohibition policy many years ago has been surprised that violations of the law have persisted in a very obstinate fashion. The fact that Prohibition is still far from yielding the results that were hoped for from it does not warrant the widely current assumption that it cannot be enforced." I may also refer to a more authoritative official investigation by a Committee of the House of Representatives in May 1924 which surveyed the alcoholic liquor traffic and the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment. The report of the sub-committee appointed by this Committee is now available, and it shows that even with inadequate organisation and machinery for enforcement of the law, the results so far obtained are very satisfactory. The sub-committee concluded their comprehensive review by stating that it took nearly 50 years for the pioneer prohibition States to perfect their machinery for enforcement, and that there is no reason whatever for being pessimistic in the attempt to enforce national constitutional prohibition. The enforcement of national prohibition seems to have been adversely affected by the political and administrative machinery of the State and of the Federal Governments, and by the existence in certain parts of the United States of heterogeneous communities who have not as yet accepted the principle of prohibition. An adequate effort at enforcement is, however, now being made.

DRY AND WET TERRITORY.

In a social experiment as vast as this we have no right to expect any final success in a short period of time. Writing on the subject, The Christian Century says: "The element in the situation which gives encouragement is the fact that violations have become popular in the large urban centres, not altogether because of the pressure of public opinion but because violation was fairly easy. Police measures in specific cases of violation were unavailing as long as the liquor supply was not dried up at its sources. There are four such sources which really count—bonded Warehouses, industrial alcohol plants, breweries and illicit importation. Mr. Johnson's report shows very clearly that no determined or effective effort has been made to dry up these sources. It is quite possible that the present situation will change very quickly if a way can be found to deal with these sources effectively. The strategy of General Andrews is precisely in this direction. He has revealed energy in essaying his task and it must be gratefully recorded that President Coolidge is giving the task of enforcement more honest support than the Presidents who have preceded him. The next two years may therefore bring about a turn in the battle." There are, therefore, no reasons for holding that National Prohibition is a failure. Sir Basil Blackett has also ignored a most important fact in his estimate of the situation. At the time of the adoption of the law relating to National Prohibition in the United States, 68.3 per cent of the population lived in territory which had been dry for several years under local option laws and State prohibition laws and 95.4 per cent of the land area in the United States was already dry and only 4.6 per cent wet. The communities in the dry States have cheerfully obeyed these laws for years and have accepted the principle of prohibition.

LAW AND ORDER.

As regards respect for law and order the views embodied in the report of the Federal Council of Chambers show how the Americans themselves feel on this question. The report says:—

"The general impression that respect for law is declining leads many ardent supporters of prohibition to believe that its foes are undermining all citizenship, while the latter assert very positively that prohibition has destroyed respect for all law. Fortunately neither contention is fully supported by facts. The best authorities in psychology and education agree that a person's attitude towards law and government is not determined with reference to a single statute and that hostility towards one law does not carry over into the whole field of the citizen's responsibility. The attitude of people towards their government, although it often gives cause for concern, rests upon a broader basis than the popularity of a single law. Every one takes some laws more seriously than others and necessarily so. All laws have not the same importance and some have greater social sanction than others."

Laws relating to prohibition of alcoholic liquor, either in the form of local option laws or State prohibition laws, have been in force in the United States for several years, and they do not suffer in comparison with other laws.

POSITION IN INDIA.

This is the present situation, so far as I have been able to ascertain, about Prohibition in the United States. Whatever may be the difficulties in that country, the consideration of a national policy of prohibition as an ultimate goal is, I venture to think, easier in the present conditions of India. As I have pointed out, there is in India already a very large body of public sentiment in favour of prohibition. This sentiment though not effectively organised, as yet, is a great factor in the initiation of a campaign of National Prohibition. Several important communities, by the tenets of their religion, look upon total abstinence as a rule of their daily lives. In the second place, the vested interests of the liquor trade in India are neither so well organised nor so powerful as in Europe or America. There are not, as yet, in this country local associations of the trade linked up into a national federation as there are in Great Britain and other western countries. Moreover, the industry is not in a position to exert any political influence at present either in the Local Legislatures or in the Central Legislature or in the local bodies of the country. We are thus in a much better position in this respect than in the West. Speaking on this subject, Lord Rosebery said in 1895: "I am not a fanatic in temperance reform, but I go so far as to say this that if the State does not control the liquor traffic, the liquor traffic will control the State. I see the danger coming nearer and nearer that owing to the enormous influence wielded directly and indirectly by those who are concerned in upholding the drink traffic, we are approaching a condition of things perilously near the corruption of the political system." The state of things depicted by Lord Rosebery has continued in Great Britain up to date. Successive Governments have trembled before the organised power of the trade and the alliance of that trade with one political party or other has defeated up to date all attempts at temperance reform in Great Britain. The way in which the progress of temperance legislation in the United Kingdom during the last twenty years has been blocked should be a great lesson to us in this country. We have not as yet in this country the "candidates of the trade" either in the local bodies or in the Legislatures; nor that distinguished array of members of the Legislature directly interested in the trade who now adorn the British Parliament. The absence of all these impediments in our political machinery makes it much more easy for the Government and the people to take a balanced view of the problem and to bring it under consideration. Another advantage that we have in India is that for the present we do not possess a rigid constitution. The powers of the Local and Central Governments, the financial arrangements between the provinces and the Central Government, the residuary powers of the Central and Local Legislatures and executive authorities are still in a fluid condition. Notwithstanding the recent constitutional changes, India is still a unitary State. The initiation of a national policy of prohibition as an ultimate goal applicable throughout British India is likely to give much less trouble now than some years hence. The conflict between Federal and State authorities that has continuously arisen under the constitution of the United States is not likely to arise in India if the problem is taken up for consideration now.

INDIAN STATES.

Nor do I think that if such a policy is initiated, the rulers of the Indian States would lag behind British India in adopting it. In fact, they have already made a start. Sir Basil Blackett made some reference to the difficulties arising from the existence of Indian States in proximity to British territory. Judging from what some of them have already done, I think that there should be no difficulty in securing their co-operation. Bhopal, Bhavnagar, Palitana and Kathiawar have already adopted the prohibition of country-made liquors. Travancore and Pudukotah have declared for local option. The British Government has secured their co-operation in various departments of work. A uniform system of administration of the Posts and Telegraphs, Railways, of Stamps and Coinage has been already established, and the Indian States have given their willing co-operation in these measures. There is no reason why they should not extend their co-operation in the introduction of a policy of prohibition of liquor.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTY.

I must now deal with some of the main difficulties in the attainment of our goal. If we are to attain it in a measurable distance of time, we should have a clear perception of

realpatidar.com

1926 -Indian Social Reformer Vol 36 (882)

the obstacles ahead of us. The problem is, however, one of extraordinary difficulty and complexity. Some of these arise from the financial and political machinery of the Provinces and the Central Government and some from the social habits of the people, while others are traceable to that want of vigorous organisation of public opinion which has compelled Governments in other countries to root out social evils by suitable executive and administrative action. The most formidable of our difficulties is, however, the financial aspect of the problem.

The total excise revenue both provincial and central was about 7 ½ crores of rupees in 1903-04 and according to the latest available figures (1923-24) the revenue from this source has risen to nearly 21 crores of rupees. The dependence of the provinces on the excise revenue has varied from province to province. According to the figures available for 1923-24, in Madras, 39 8 per cent of the total revenue assigned to the province is derived from Excise. Similarly, the percentages for Bihar and Orissa and Bombay including Sind, are 34.7 and 28.7, respectively. Assam and Central Provinces come next with 28.7 per cent and 25.3 per cent. As regards the other provinces, Bengal's excise revenue is 20.6 per cent of its total revenue, Burma 13.9 per cent., United Provinces 12 7 per cent, Punjab 11.4 per cent. These figures are appalling. The Government of India and the Provincial Governments are now profiting at the expense of the vitality and morals of the people and they are financially interested in the maintenance of a system which must inevitably lead to their continued degeneration.

Excise and Provincial Finance.

Those responsible for the development of the financial system in India have not, as yet, given any thought to the utter immorality of a system which draws so large a portion of the revenues of the country from the taxation of drink. Prohibition as a national policy must necessarily lead to the extinction of this revenue and neither provincial Governments nor the Government of India will be willing to forego this revenue unless an alternative scheme of taxation is devised to make up the loss. The scheme of provincial finance now in force, under which the revenue from Excise has been wholly assigned to the provinces, has made the Provincial Governments so dependent on that revenue to run their administrations, that however willing they are to undertake a far-reaching policy of excise reform they are unable to go forward for fear of dislocating their financial equilibrium. In explaining the new financial and administrative arrangements in the provinces proposed by the Government of India, before the Joint Select Committee on the Government of India Bill, Sir James (now Lord) Meston said that "after the Reforms the natural and inevitable course of the policy of the Ministers in dealing with excise will be to press more and more for prohibition. They believe, rightly or wrongly, that our excise policy has encouraged intemperance among certain classes and they are committed, deeply committed, to breaking down that policy and to reducing the facilities to intoxicants." He went on to explain that so long as there is a joint purse, the official Government, i. e., the Reserved half is an likely to remonstrate against any heroic excise policy initiated by the Ministers which the official side of Government believed to be impracticable. The prediction of Lord Meston has come true in most of the provinces. The Finance Department, which has to accord its approval to the financial proposals of both halves of the Government as well as the Reserved half of the Government, have acted as a very effective check, during the last four years, on the excise policy of the Ministers in every province and on their proposals for reform.

A Committee For Ways And Means.

Another difficulty is that even if an alternative system to make up the loss of the excise revenue is devised, it is certain to shift the incidence of taxation to shoulders other than those who now bear the burden and who undoubtedly would raise difficulties in taking it on their own shoulders. The revenue from liquor is now mostly contributed by the lowest classes of society who have neither property nor wealth and who are now steeped in poverty and ignorance. Their contribution in each province to the coffers of the State in the shape of excise revenue is a very material one, and if we wish to elevate and educate them and do them social justice, it essential that the richer, the more wealthy, and the more prosperous communities in society should shoulder the burden now laid upon these unfortunate individuals. It is no easy task to persuade the landed and mercantile classes to take upon themselves new financial responsibilities which in some of the provinces will indeed be very heavy. I sincerely trust that public opinion will compel this readjustment without which I do not see much chance of reform in the direction urged by us. The financial aspect of the question has never hitherto received any serious consideration either from the Government or the people. I am glad, however, that the Government of Bombay who have already declared that the goal of their excise policy is prohibition have recently appointed a committee to formulate proposals to meet the loss so far as their province is concerned. But I think that the problem of replacing the excise revenue is much wider and must be dealt with not by a single province but by India as a whole. The report of the Taxation Enquiry Committee might be able to throw some light on the problem, but the terms of reference to that Committee preclude the possibility of a thorough examination of the subject. I venture to think, however, that the problem as a whole must be immediately brought under consideration. An authoritative committee fully representative of public opinion ought to be appointed without delay by the Government of India in consultation with Local Governments for devising a suitable scheme for wiping out our excise revenue in a period of twenty years. The action taken by the Government of India when the opium traffic with China was extinguished affords a precedent to us in regard to this problem also and the deficit may have to be spread over a number of years and gradually made up.

The Main Obstacles.

While the financial aspect of Prohibition is undoubtedly one of our main obstacles, there are also other constitutional and administrative difficulties which require a thorough examination to facilitate the successful adoption of such a policy. One of these is the division of functions between the Central Government and the provincial administrations in regard to Excise. The control of production, manufacture, possession, transport, purchase and sale of liquor and intoxicating drugs and the levying of excise duties and license fees on or in relation to such articles, except in Assam, is a provincial transferred subject and for this reason the whole of the excise administration is now in the hands of Ministers. Customs is a central subject and is under the control of the Government of India and all customs revenue derived from the taxation of important liquor belongs to the Government of India. The result is that the taxation of imported foreign liquor is in the hands of the Government of India while the taxation of locally manufactured liquor is in the hands of the Provincial Governments and each is interested in the development of its own revenues. Under this system a certain amount of conflict must arise between the Provincial Governments

email: mail@realpatidar.com

and the Government of India. As an illustration I may mention that the high rates of taxation adopted by the Government of Bombay led to an increase in the import of foreign liquor which under the rates of customs duties now leviable was cheaper to the consumer. The Government of Bombay met the situation by reducing their rates on country-made liquor to make it cheaper than the imported foreign liquor. The same thing has happened a few months ago in the Punjab. It is clear that under the present arrangements a conflict of financial interests is inevitable and a uniform policy is not possible. The same difficulty has arisen in regard to the introduction of local option legislation in the provinces. When I was a member of the Madras Legislative Council, I sought permission for the introduction of a local option Bill. The Government of India objected to those clauses of the Bill as would tend to affect their Customs revenue from imported foreign liquor. The same objection has been raised in regard to similar Bills from other provinces. It is obvious that a local option law which while reducing the consumption of one kind of liquor would leave the door open to imported foreign liquor would be ineffective. The Government of India are within their existing constitutional rights in raising this objection, but the result is that all attempts at provincial legislation during the last four years for enacting an effective local option law have proved fruitless. A further constitutional difficulty which has also recently arisen must be mentioned in this connection and that is the action of the Governor of Bombay in refusing sanction to the introduction of a local option Bill by Mr. R G. Pradhan in the Bombay Legislative Council. That action has naturally evoked considerable public dissatisfaction not only in the Bombay Presidency but throughout India. His refusal is based on Section 80 (c) of the Government of India Act whereby a member cannot introduce any measure in any local Legislative Council affecting the revenues of the Province without sanction of the Governor. The Governor of Bombay has withheld his sanction apparently on the ground that a measure embodying the principle of local option is a measure which will seriously affect the public revenues of his province. No one can contest the legality of the action of His Excellency the Governor of Bombay. As you are aware, the propriety of his action has been recently brought before Parliament by Colonel Joshia Wedgwood; and Earl Winterton declared that the action of the Governor was within his statutory competence, and that there was no obligation on his part to give any reasons for his refusal. In Madras, Viscount Willingdon gave me the required permission for introduction four years ago, but quite recently His Excellency Lord Goschen refused to accord such sanction to another member of the Madras Legislative Council. The denial of all reasonable opportunities for ascertaining the strength of public and legislative opinion will only intensify the prevailing discontent with the present political machinery of the Government of the country.

Local Option.

The action of the Central Government and of the Governments of Madras and Bombay has therefore placed very great difficulties in the progress of the prohibition movement in India and the recent speech of Sir Basil Blackett, speaking as he did on behalf of the Government of India, has made the position still more difficult. He said that one of the clear lessons of America's experiments in Prohibition and in local option was that local option and State prohibition and local prohibition involved even greater difficulties than complete prohibition and that "if a policy of local option or prohibition is going to be attempted by local Governments with any degree of vigour the Government of India will not be able merely to look on." These are enigmatic words, but they are sufficiently explicit for the purpose of indicating that the Government of India are not in favour of local option as a measure either optionally applicable to municipal areas or enacted for a whole province. Can it be that Sir Basil Blackett intended to convey that if Prohibition as a policy becomes inevitable, he would deal with it as a policy applicable to the whole of India rather than allow each locality or province to decide it for itself? He is apparently more alive to the difficulties likely to be caused in the working of the law by provincial and international boundaries between the provinces and the neighbouring Indian States or States included in the areas of each province. The great value of a local option law is the development of a strong public sentiment in favour of prohibition in the locality, and experience in all the countries points to the fact that local option, State prohibition and national prohibition are the successive stages by which a strong and sustaining public sentiment in favour of national prohibition was developed and maintained. The question as to whether prohibition is a local question to be decided by Municipalities or local boards or as to whether it is a provincial question to be finally acted upon by the various provinces or whether the central or federal Government should be the sole authority in initiating the policy has been considered and debated on many occasions in the United States and in Europe. The general demarcation of the functions of these authorities has been that the power of issuing local liquor licenses has been left to local bodies, while the States dealt with the larger problems relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor or their entire prohibition, and the tariff question and regulation of inter-State traffic were the sphere of action of the Federal Government till national prohibition came into force. The constitutional position of these three authorities should be the same in this country, and until a policy of national prohibition is adopted by the Central Government in India, there is no reason whatever why the provinces and the local bodies should be deprived of the powers they have for the initiation of a policy of prohibition in their own jurisdiction. Any interference in this respect by the Government of India, as suggested by the language of Sir Basil Blackett, with the powers of the Local Legislatures and Local Governments would be greatly resented throughout the country and the difficulties pointed out by Sir Basil Blackett, such as they exist, will have to be faced, as has been done in the United States, till Prohibition becomes the settled policy of India.

Progress in the Provinces.

In fact since the introduction of the Reforms, public opinion and legislative opinion in the provinces has followed the natural line of development in regard to this problem and some of the Ministers have sought the introduction of some form of local option. The present position may be summarised in a few words. The Legislative Council in Bombay approved of a policy of prohibition to be reached in 20 years by the rationing of liquor. In the Punjab a local option law came into force in 1924 which empowered Municipalities and District Boards to reduce the number of shops. The law did not, however, apply to shops selling foreign liquor, clubs, hotels, bars and railway refreshment rooms. The Government of the United Provinces appointed a committee in 1921 and, as a result of its recommendation, licensing boards have been set up in the large cities and the graduated system in force in Bengal replaced the auction system. In Madras the proposals now under the consideration of the Government include the establishment of

licensing boards for urban areas and advisory committees for rural areas and the attempts of private members for introducing a local option Bill have proved unsuccessful. In Bihar and Orissa, a resolution in favour of Prohibition was lost in the Legislative Council, but licensing Boards without any statutory powers have been set up as an experimental measure. A private member has given notice for the introduction of a local option Bill but it has been held up by the authorities. In the Central Provinces a resolution in favour of prohibition was successfully moved in 1921 and the Government have agreed to work towards the eventual prohibition of country liquor. The chief reform introduced in Bengal secured administrative improvements and the Legislative Council has not as yet taken any definite line of action. It is clear, therefore, that while local option has not been tried as yet on any large scale in the provinces there is a distinct movement by the Local Legislatures in the direction of using such powers as they have for adopting the principle of local option.

Drug Problem.

Before I close, I must ask your permission to make a brief reference to the cognate subject of intoxicating drugs. It has been frequently asserted that the prohibition of alcohol will drive the addicts to the use of drugs and will result in an increase of the drug habit. The introduction of prohibition in the United States does not appear to have led to an increase in the use of drugs. It may be that we may have a different experience in India. In recent years the evils of opium smoking and the use of raw opium have attracted considerable attention and it has been the considered opinion of those who have given thought to the subject that a policy of prohibition of liquor should be followed simultaneously by a similar policy in regard to drugs and that as a preparation for the introduction of such a policy the consumption of opium and other narcotic drugs should be more rigidly controlled than they have been in the past in India. The use or rather the abuse of opium has become a matter of international concern and the controversies at Geneva in recent years have drawn the attention of the whole world to the opium evil, and every country is taking steps for restricting the use and manufacture and import of opium and its derivatives and other dangerous drugs like heroin, cocaine and their respective salts. A consideration of the large question of the opium policy of the Government of India, so far as it affects countries outside India, is not relevant to my present subject, and I shall not go into it, but the international aspect of the question has stimulated interest in the subject of consumption of opium in India itself and the whole question is now engaging public attention throughout the country. Mr. C. F. Andrews and Mr W. Paton of the National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon have done most useful work in investigating the situation in different parts of the country. My esteemed friend, Dr. S. K. Datta, also raised the question in March last in a very informing speech in the Legislative Assembly. The present position is that the Government of India are responsible for controlling the production and manufacture of opium and its sale to local Governments for cost price and the latter are responsible for all regulation of the consumption of the drug. The sale of excise opium is a transferred subject and since the subject became one for the provincial Governments, they have taken considerable interest in the matter; and Sir Basil Blackett assured the Assembly that if the provinces desired to go further than at present in restricting consumption to initiate reasonable proposals calculated to effect still further reduction, the Government of India would be the last to raise any objection. He complained with great justification that they had in the past very little in the way of Indian public opinion on the subject, and he expressed his gratification that such opinion on the subject of opium for its internal uses was in the process of forming in various parts of the country. We are thankful for these assurances and for what has already been done by the Government in the matter. We are looking to our Ministers in the provinces and to the provincial legislatures to take up the subject for consideration.

Assam Enquiry Committee.

Since Sir Basil Blackett's speech was made, the report of the Assam Congress Enquiry Committee has been published. The conclusions of this Committee contain proposals for initiating a practical scheme leading up to a policy of prohibition in regard to opium and its derivatives. They are as follows:—

(1) The sale of opium and its derivatives should be ultimately limited to the medical and scientific needs of Assam.

(2) Provision should be made for confirmed addicts above the age of 40 enabling them to procure a rationed amount of opium with their names being registered for the purpose.

(3) All opium addicts who are under forty years should be dealt with as medical patients. Wherever opium is needed by them it should be given only under the orders of a fully qualified doctor, the medical permission to obtain it being subject to quarterly renewal.

The proposals may well be extended after suitable enquiry to other provinces where the opium evil prevails to any large extent. In the United States Prohibition extends not only to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages but also to the sale of all habit-forming drugs, except under the prescription of a physician. The authors of the Assam Report have proceeded on the same plan and have suggested that, at the end of five years, opium should be placed on the list of poisons under the Dangerous Drugs Act. I sincerely trust that these proposals will be accepted by the Government of Assam and will be seriously considered by the other local Governments not only for the welfare of opium addicts but also in their bearing on the wider question of a policy of the prohibition of liquor. The Government of India who are responsible for the manufacture and production have, I am glad to say, made considerable reductions in recent years in the area under poppy cultivation, but that by itself is not enough. They should accept the general principles underlying the recommendations of the Assam Congress Enquiry Committee and adopt the policy of restricting the production of opium strictly to the medical needs of the country and also accept the view that the consumption of raw opium is not a legitimate use.

Conclusion.

Ladies and Gentlemen, I have taxed your patience this evening far too long and I must now bring my remarks to a close. The greatest justification for the movement of Prohibition is to be found in the conditions of the world to-day. There are, in India, many advocates of the present official policy who seek justification for it in a review of man's early history, the practices of the stone-age and of animistic tribes. The problem has to be viewed, as I have already said, from the conditions of the India of the present day. In the intense competition between the nations of the world the nation that makes the greatest economy of its human resources will outgrow in numbers, prosperity and general strength the nation that does the opposite. The Prohibition movement has achieved the results of economy and prosperity in other countries and, if properly organised,

realpatidar.com

there can be no doubt that it will produce the same results in India. We are all met here, therefore, to form a National Prohibition Party for the whole of India. The task before us is one of great complexity and requires unremitting work from every well-wisher of the country for several years before any tangible results are achieved. It is very necessary for our success that every effort should be made to increase the volume of vocal public opinion in the country in favour of this movement. Our temperance organisations and Social Conferences and Social Service Leagues are doing some work in this direction but that is not enough. Intensive working in the villages and towns and a network of associations doing the work of propaganda throughout the year are very essential. Funds are needed for this purpose and I venture to think, willing as our friends in Great Britain and America may be to give us financial assistance, we must rely on our own resources for carrying on a vigorous propaganda throughout the country. We are all grateful to Mahatma Gandhi for having carried this problem to a stage further than it was before, and it was mainly due to his efforts that it has become a mass movement in various parts of the country. Nevertheless that insistent public opinion that has compelled the Governments in other countries to yield to its demands does not as yet exist in regard to this movement in India. We must, therefore, endeavour to create throughout the country not only greater interest in the movement but to make it a living issue in the social and political programmes continually under discussion in the country. We are beginning slowly to adjust ourselves to the government of the country by political parties and the further progress of the movement will depend upon the success of a party pledged to the policy of prohibition. We have in the provincial legislatures and the Central Legislature a certain number of members already definitely pledged to Prohibition. This is satisfactory so far as it goes, but we have to develop suitable methods of propaganda in the country to back up the views held in the Legislatures. There are unbelievers in India, especially among the influential British community, who will undoubtedly put down this plea for a new social policy as a sign of perverted patriotism. We have survived this kind of criticism on other occasions and we shall, no doubt, do the same on the present. I see visions of the many barricades that will be erected against this policy, but let us persevere till we succeed in our efforts to altogether free our people from the thraldom of drink.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE LEAGUE.

Mr. Mahomed Ali, Mrs. Price, President of W. C. T. U., Pandit M. M. Malaviya, and other speakers moved the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:—

"This Convention is of opinion that the prohibition of alcoholic liquor is not only in consonance with the sentiments of the people of India, but also imperative for their social well-being and for the promotion of their economic efficieney. The Convention, therefore, urges on the Government of India and the Local Governments to accept the total prohibition of alcoholic liquor as the goal of their excise policy."

"This Convention, while being fully alive to the difficulties of the introduction of a national policy of prohibition in the country, is of opinion that the Government of India, the Local Governments and the Governors of Provinces should afford adequate facilities for ascertaining the will of the people with regard to this question. The introduction of local option laws is in the opinion of this Convention the best means of ascertaining the wishes of the people in this matter."

"The Government of India and the Local Governments should recast as early as possible the present scheme of provincial finance so as to eliminate revenue from excise as an integral part of the present system."

"This Convention calls on the leaders of the various communities to take immediate steps for an effective organization of public opinion throughout the country in support of the prohibition of liquor."

"This Convention would urge on the Government the necessity of instituting an inquiry into the manufacture and sale of opium and other intoxicating drugs with a view to the complete restriction within a definite period of time of the use of these drugs to medical and scientific purposes."

"This Convention appeals to all social service leagues and temperance societies throughout India to immediately affiliate with the Prohibition League of India and assist it to establish a temperance organization with prohibition as its ideal in every district of British India."

"This Convention places on record its grateful appreciation of the action of the rulers of the Indian States of Bhopal, Bhavnagar, Palitana, and Kathiawar, who have accepted the principle of the prohibition of liquor and urges on the rulers of other States to take similar action."

A MESSAGE TO THE PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

Lord Clwyd, the President of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, sent the following message to the Prohibition Convention:

I am sending you my most cordial good wishes for the success of the National Convention to be held at Delhi for the purpose of setting up the Prohibition League of India.

This All-India Temperance organization will be fully representative of Indian conviction and aspirations and will, I am sure, effectively express the dominant sentiment of India with reference to the temperance question in its widest sense. I rejoice at the many evidences already received of the support of all sections of opinion in India for this effort to consolidate the temperance forces in active service for the realisation of the Prohibition ideal, and I feel confident that this new central organization will be the means through wise and helpful direction of stimulating temperance action in and through the provincial associations.

I have for a great many years taken a deep interest in the advancement of the temperance cause in India. I recognise now that recent constitutional changes have brought home to India itself, to an extent not hitherto the case, the direct responsibility in regard to temperance issues, and I am confident that this responsibility will be completely accepted. The creation of the Prohibition League of India is in itself an assurance of this, and knowing as I do the large possibilities of good which lie behind any united effort for a great moral purpose, I believe that this new phase of the temperance movement in India will have beneficent consequences in many directions.

Whilst I regard the establishment of this new organization in the sense indicated, I still believe that there will continue to be a common interest, as between this country and India, in the promotion of the temperance movement. The claims of temperance are international and world-wide, and we shall continue to watch with sympathy future developments in India and will be glad to co-operate as heretofore with our friends there in any manner which may be helpful in reaching the end in view.

In conclusion, may I express the earnest hope that with the inauguration of this new temperance organization there may be found at its disposal in full measure that spirit of comradeship in a great cause and of devotion to its service which is an essential condition of its permanent success?

From the bottom of my heart let me once more send you every good wish for the realisation of the end for which the Prohibition League of India is to be established.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION IN BOMBAY.

Mrs. W. G. Menzies has sent us the following report of the Temperance Convention held in Bombay last week:

Prominent Temperance workers from all the Divisions of India and from Assam, gathered together in Bombay for their Seventeenth Annual Convention, January 22nd to 27th. The programme was well-rendered, and interest and enthusiasm maintained from its beginning to its close. The subjects presented and discussed covered many phases of Home and National Life, such as "Child Welfare", "Mothers in Council", "Citizenship", "Scientific Temperance Instruction", "Work amongst the Young People," "Moral Instruction amongst all classes" and "Social Purity".

Reports from the many Departments of the Womens' Christian Temperance Union, under whose auspices these meetings were held, were exceedingly encouraging, showing satisfactory gains in all. Many public meetings were held in Y. M C. A.'s, Churches and Halls, and addresses given by both visitors and residents.

Some of the facts brought to our attention were as follows:

The Reverend Albert Ehrgott, State Enforcement Officer of California, United States of America, said: "If we Americans were to vote to-morrow, we would vote for the 18th Amendment".

"Those business men who backed the Wet's with their cheque books to defeat it, now stand with their cheque books ready to defend it. Not because of the religious or moral benefits experienced, but because of the economic progress and advantages, and efficient workmen steady at their jobs, which spells larger out-put and bigger returns for the business man. And that is what the 18th Amendment has meant to the United States of America."

Another said: Forty four years ago my birth place, a State 200 miles wide and 400 miles long, went dry. Since then I have seen its 87 Country Poor Houses closed, no destitute to fill them; the jails and lock-ups of every town and city for the disorderly, unused; the Red Light districts migrated; the Lower [illegible] dishevelled, out-at-the-elbows and toes, sockless and down-at-the-heels and often down in the gutter, which congregate on street corners and at Railway Stations, disappeared; sorrowing half-dressed wives seeking employment to keep hunger from their doors, became unknown; shoeless, gaunt and hollow-eyed children only a memory of the days when the Wet's reigned For 45 years Prohibition has reigned and in its domains are found neat, tidy, prosperous villages, towns and cities, self-respecting citizens owning their own homes, their children well-educated, health the highest per cent in the States, Bank accounts the highest per capital in the Union, the moral and mental poise of her subjects of the highest calibre. This is what we desire for India and her peoples; to this end let us labour and pray."

One of the most gratifying observations of this Convention was the large number of Indian ladies that took part in the programme and were present at the sessions. The able paper on "Citizenship" by Miss Bhaskare, and the report of Miss Navalkar's untiring efforts in behalf of this great cause, deserves especial mention. Miss Singh most ably presided over the Literature tables and the National Orgnizer, Miss Maya Das, gave a most interesting account of her many travels and efforts in her field of labour bringing before her people the Evils of Intemperance.

With renewed consecration, confidence and zeal the workers closed their week's deliberations feeling encouraged for the task before them, knowing that the strongly entrenched foe must yield sooner or later to the stronger forces of Peace, Purity and Righteousness which are the True Allies of Humanity.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar on Prohibition: In the Reformer of the 19th December, we referred to the communication made by Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar to the Swarajya, Madras, wherein he suggested that the Congress should take up the question of Total Prohibition. The following is the text of the letter which he wrote to that paper: The Congress reached the height of its popular influence during the last six years not because it was a representative organisation of the people but because of the strenuous service rendered by its leaders and workers in matters directly affecting the people. The Congress is now full of political controversies of the first order, but in respect of service actively undertaken touching the masses, little can be claimed. This is, in my humble opinion, a great mistake. The Congress is now practically living on its past capital of service rendered This cannot last long. Now that Khaddar is separated off from Congress work and is looked after by the independent Spinners' Association, it is necessary that the Congress should have a programme of its own of service to the people, which is suitable to its revised constitution. It should put forward a Council programme touching the hearts and lives of the masses, the poorest in the land concentrating on it all its energy for a time and putting heart and soul into it. It is not merely a question of logicality. It is a problem of revivification and development of strength. I suggest a programme of Total Prohibition. The Congress which now controls election and Council work should devise means to compel the Legislature to totally prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicants and call for the preparation of the Budget on that basis. The vast majority of people, rich and poor, to whatever community they may belong, would support measures of legislation and administration undertaken for this great reform Not twenty years hence but at once must be the objective and a Challenge Budget should be prepared on the basis of No Drink-Revenue and the country agitated from one end to the other over such an election programme. There can be no more suitable time for ridding India of the Drink curse and saving our people from one great source of chronic misery. The effects of the great spiritualising wand of Non-co-operation are still with us. A few years hence we may have to begin it all over again. It would be criminal to neglect this opportunity. It is not enough merely to include such a programme The essential requisite is iron-will, leadership and concentration. What is wanted is an undiluted single issue, and the rest and other steps only afterwards. Without service rendered to the people, no live popular influence can be attained and without that compelling force of mass influence no heed will be paid by the Government of England to our claims for Swaraj or for anything else.

Indore and Bawla Case: The following communique is issued:—The Governor-General has decided that a Commission of Enquiry should be appointed to investigate the alleged connection of His Highness the Maharaja Holkar of Indore with the attempted abduction of Mumtaz Begum and the murder of the late Mr. Bawla in Bombay on January 12th 1925. The Commission if appointed will consist of two High Court Judges, two ruling Princes and a Senior Officer of the Political Department. The procedure which will be followed is that which was laid down as a result of the recommendations made in Paragraph 309 of the Montagu Chelmsford Report for cases where the question arises of depriving a ruler temporarily or permanently of any of his powers or privileges. The function of the committee is to investigate the facts of the case and to offer advice to the Government of India. Whenever the Governor-General decided that a case has arisen for the appointment of a Court of Enquiry the ruler concerned has the option of intimating that he does not desire that a Commission should be appointed. The Maharaja Holkar has been informed of the conclusion at which the Governor-General has arrived.

A Commendable Step: Justice, Madras, writes: It is now the turn of the little State of Wadhwan to show to the British Government the way to beneficent rule, writes a Delhi contemporary. His Highness the Thakore Sahib of Wadhwan evidently suffers from no false notions of prestige. Not long ago he had issued new regulations in connection with tea-shops, but the people wanted more radical action. They complained that the insanitary methods with which the tea-shop owners conducted their business were a danger to public health, and, besides, the large consumption of milk at these tea-shops materially affected the supply of pure milk for infants and the sick. His Highness the Thakore Sahib has now ordered that all shops selling tea and coffee be closed, and all hawking of the same beverages is prohibited. Breach of the order has been made an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. The bureaucracy in British India is unwilling to improve its pace in the direction of Temperance Reform. Indian rulers do not hesitate to prohibit even tea-drinking if the prohibition conduces to the public good.

Prohibition of the Sale of Arrack: We congratulate the Travancore Government on its recent notification, under Section 26 of Regulation IV of 1073, that the sale of arrack or toddy to young persons under 18 years of age and the sale of arrack to adult women is prohibited throughout the State rom 1-1-1102 M. ## NOTES

The Viceroy's Speech : Addressing the new Council of State, His Excellency the Viceroy made two welcome announcements. The one was as regards the creation of the Royal Indian Navy on the basis of the Rawlinson Committee's Report in order to enable India ultimately to undertake her own naval defence, while the other related to the progressive reduction in the exports of opium so as to extinguish them altogether within a definite period except for strictly medical purposes, and the discontinuation of the auction sale of opium. One of the arguments often used against India's fitness for self-government is her lack of defence. The proposed reconstruction of the Royal Indian Marine as a combatant force and the increased opportunities for military training and service which will be open to Indians as a result of the Indianisation of the Army, will no doubt take away much from this contention and prepare the way for a self-governing India in the near future. We are also glad to see that Indians are eligible for commissioned ranks in the Navy from the very beginning. The Viceroy took great pains to explain that there is no political objective behind the Royal Commission on Agriculture as is alleged in a certain section of the press. Though the Indian public was at first opposed to this Commission, it will certainly welcome it if its personnel, unlike that of the Currency Commission, were such as to inspire confidence in the people. We are afraid, however, that the terms of reference to the Commission are not sufficiently wide to make the enquiry of much use. As regards the South African question, His Excellency advised a little more patience on the part of the members so that he would be able to speak on the situation more fully on a subsequent occasion. While the Paddison Deputation is quietly collecting economic information and Government allege that delicate negotiations are going on between itself and the Union Government, the latter Government is rushing on with its nefarious anti-Indian legislation. The Colour Bar Bill has already passed the third reading while the Anti-Asiatic Bill has passed the first reading. If this is not the time for the Government of India to intervene, we do not see when it can intervene effectively at all.

The Baby Week : The Bombay Baby Week celebrations commenced last Tuesday with an inaugural speech from His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson. We print elsewhere a short account of the principal stalls and exhibits contained in the Exhibition. This is the third year of the celebrations all over the country and there is no doubt that the movement founded by Lady Reading has come to stay with us. When it is taken into consideration that the infant mortality in Bombay runs to an appalling figure as compared with the principal towns in India and elswhere, it will be realised what tremendous influence the Baby Week exerts on the life and health of mothers and children to whom it is specially intended. As His Excellency remarked, the Baby Week celebrations are not in any sense mere spectacular shows or exhibitions, but have a real and definite educational value as evidenced by the thousands of the very poorest women that crowded the various centres last year in Bombay and showed a genuine desire to learn and help to drive away the atmosphere of ignorance and superstition in which they find themselves enveloped. In the brief space of two years the movement has achieved notable results in Bombay. Some Maternity Homes, Infant Welfare Centres and Health Associations have already been started while others are under contemplation. This year the Exhibition is on a grander scale than last year's and exhibits showing the various diseases to which flesh is heir to, their origin and treatment, are also included in the Exhibition. Credit for this is due in great part to the enthusiasm and organising ability of Mrs. Cowasji Jehangir. We strongly appeal to the public of Bombay to visit any one of the centres in the course of the Baby Week and profit by the practical instruction offered there.

The Problem of First Offenders: It is a matter for gratification that the subject of prison reform is attracting much attention even in high Government circles Lord Lytton spoke rather strongly on the subject in his address at the Calcutta Rotary Club. His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson and the Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court gave expression to identical sentiments while speaking at a meeting convened under the auspices of the Discharged Prisoners' Relief Society. And yet, the administration of justice in this country is far from being what it should be. "Free Lance" writing in the Bombay Chronicle on the subject of "Care of First Offender" makes some suggestions which our judiciary will do well to adopt. He rightly says that the problem will not be solved by speeches alone and that, if the Government are really keen, they ought first to train their subordinate judicial officers in the science of criminology and show them by preparing statistics that deterrent punishments have not tended to decrease crime, but have acted contrariwise. Instances are not wanting where many subordinate Magistrates would rather send a first offender to jail and thus contaminate him in the company of criminals than let him free with or without security. Again, in many cases, poor workmen, who go astray by drink, are mulcted of so many rupees where they were fined only a few annas before. These are only a few instances to show that the judiciary is more anxious to punish a man heavily than to let him off. Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code authorises Magistrates to let off first offenders with a mere warning and yet, as "Free Lance" asks, how many Magistrates have availed themselves of this provision. The answer will only be in the negative. We cordially endorse his remarks that "the Governor and Chief Justice must not rest on their oars after saying the right things, but they must see that orders are issued to the effect that it is the right of every offender to demand this human privilege, that the Magistrates must not make him or his lawyer plead for it, but grant it unasked even in cases where the man is not able to get a proper security."

Prisons of Bengal: Commenting on Lord Lytton's recent plea for "moral hospitals" and "moral doctors," the Bengalee calls attention to the depressing conditions of the jails in Bengal and makes some valuable suggestions for introducing some much-needed reforms in them such as the segregation of habitual offenders, the setting apart of one particular jail in the whole province for the treatment of the mental defectives, the provision of recreation in the shape of something like a jail newspaper and adult education, and the starting of Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies. Our contemporary also draws special attention to what it calls a scandal of the first magnitude, viz., the absurd practice in certain local courts of finding little children guilty of incredible offences and even punishing them with rigorous imprisonment. It cites, by way of example, two cases which have lately come to its notice. The one is the case where a child of nine was committed to "Hazat" by the Sub-divisional Officer of Alipore for "rioting" and "murder," while in the other a boy of twelve was found guilty of criminal breach of trust and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. We join with our contemporary in expressing our surprise that such punishments should take place under the very nose of Lord Lytton who has only recently expressed so much concern for the criminal and the mentally defective, and we hope His Excellency will take an early opportunity of putting a stop to these judicial vagaries of some of his subordinates and teach them the elementary principles of criminology in the treatment of juvenile offenders which, obviously, they have forgotten.

Provincial Universities: The Senate of the Bombay University, at its recent meeting, in accordance with the recommendations of the University Reforms Committee for the wider diffusion of higher education throughout the Presidency and for developing interest in the study of local culture, literature, history and conditions of life, has declared in favour of the creation of four more Universities for the four natural divisions of the Presidency viz., Maharashtra, Gujarat, Karnatak and Sind. At present, however, it is proposed to proceed only with the Poona University, as the conditions for other Universities are not yet ripe. Broadly speaking, Madras also, like Bombay, has four natural linguistic divisions, and by the establishment of the Andhra University, it has already led the way to the creation of provincial Universities. There was a good deal of discussion as to whether the proposed Poona University is to be of the unitary or affiliated type Indeed, Dr. Paranjpye was opposed to the establishment of new Universities and, if at all, he would accept only a unitary University. The Senate, however, by a large majority, decided, and rightly, that the Poona University should be a teaching and affiliated University. The promoters of the Andhra University first agitated for a unitary University, but had finally to accept the affiliated type. The proposed Tamil University also will only be an affiliated one. The concensus of opinion, therefore, is in favour of affiliated Universities. We cannot help thinking that the antithesis between the teaching and affiliated functions of Universities has been rather unduly exaggerated by the protagonists of unitary Universities.

Madras and Total Prohibition: For the last few days discussion has been going on in the Madras Legislative Council on Mr Satyamurthi's resolution that Government should declare their excise policy to be the total prohibition of manufacture, consumption or sale of alcoholic liquor. The majority of the members have declared themselves strongly in favour of it, but Government, of course, are opposing it on the same old ground of financial loss to the extent of six crores of rupees that would accrue to their exchequer, in the absence of suggestions of ways and means of meeting that deficit. We can only repeat what we have said on many occasions in regard to the excise policy of the Bombay Government that it is no business of the Council to suggest means for supplying the consequent loss in revenue and that, if Government are so minded, they can find it in innumerable ways. Meanwhile, two amendments, one demanding that total prohibition should be reached within twenty years and another moved by a member of the depressed classes urging that no shops selling toddy, arrack or beer should be located in or within two furlongs of cheris or other localities inhabited by depressed classes or factories, have been passed. We hope the Madras Government will not lag behind Bombay in accepting total prohibition as the goal of their excise policy, but once adopted, we trust that Madras, unlike Bombay, will not go back upon it. Since the above was in type, an A. P. I. message says that all the resolutions under discussion were lost excepting one which recommended a gradual decrease in the number of shops with total prohibition as the goal to be reached in 20 years.

Indian Art: Speaking at the annual prize-giving ceremony of the Bombay School of Art, Sir Leslie Wilson made some observations which show his sympathetic interest in the development of Indian Art. "It appears to me to be essential," said his Excellency, "that an Indian School of Art should be truly national in the widest sense, in its aims and work, or it must fail of its high purpose." India was famous in the past for its artistic achievements which are still the wonder of the world. But with the advent of the British into India, Indian Art also, like other things, languished for want of adequate official patronage and encouragement. The secret scheme by which the Government of India tried to bring foreign experts to beautify the new Delhi that is under construction at the expense of the native indigeneous talent, brought the question of the encouragement of Indian Art to the fore. Meetings were held in many parts of the country to protest against the Government of India's action, and a scheme has been recently drawn by the Prize of Delhi Committee for the encouragement of Indian Art. The chief feature of it is the endowment of scholarships to enable selected and promising students from different provinces to prosecute post-graduate studies in painting, sculpture, architecture and art crafts in a Central Institute at Delhi, and it has received the unanimous support of the country. We need hardly say that we are in entire agreement with the scheme.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1926.

THE ECONOMIC PROBLEM OF INDIA.

The annual meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal which was held recently was the occasion for two notable speeches on the economic condition of India from Sir Rajendranath Mookerjee, its President, and His Excellency Lord Lytton, the Governor of Bengal. The speeches of both, however, made no new contribution to the subject, but coming as they do from such high quarters, one, a successful industrialist and capitalist, and another, a Governor of a Province, they show the urgency of tackling the problem of rural re-construction which is long overdue. It is a trite saying that the heart of India beats in its villages. Though all our leaders from Ranade to Mahatma Gandhi have recognised that in the social, economic and industrial improvement of the villages lies the future of India's welfare, nothing tangible has been done so far. As Sir Rajendranath remarked, there is, on the other hand, a progressive impoverishment of our rural areas and the condition of the masses is highly distressing and requires immediate attention. Sir Rajendranath prefaced his remarks with the enunciation of an economic ideal. According to him, the aim of an ideal economic policy should be to provide every man with sufficient means of subsistence leaving a well-defined period of leisure to be devoted to things which do not directly contribute towards earning a livelihood. At present, however, this will largely remain an ideal and a dream, for it is with great difficulty that the majority of people are able to eke out their livelihood while many are considerably below the subsistence level. Sir Rajendranath's other suggestions, however, for the amelioration of the economic conditions of the peasant and middle class unemployment are worth noting. It is an elementary fact that, without education, nothing can be done. He, therefore, first advocates free primary education of the right type, with a certain amount of specialisation in agriculture, as more than 75 per cent of the people depend on agriculture as the premier industry for their subsistence. And in order that the villagers may be put in touch with the results of the agricultural research workers, he advises the creation in them of an enthusiasm for the improvement of cultivation and the science of agriculture and the extension of the benefits of the Co-operative movement. He also lays stress on the fact that the directors of the Co-operative movement should be such guides and friends of the rural folk as will create in them a desire to render mutual help and adopt the habit of team-work and "not haughty bureaucrats installed in a lofty position." Sir Rajendranath also makes out a strong case for the alteration of the land tenure wherever it is found unsuitable or defective. It is a matter for regret that the terms of the Royal Commission on Indian Agriculture announced by the Viceroy preclude it from going into this question, for without it no satisfactory solution of the problem can be made. The question of unemployment has of late received much attention in the country and the Legislative Assembly has passed a resolution urging the appointment of a Committee to go into the question of unemployment in general and of educated classes in particular. A scheme of vocational education and a systematic exploitation of the potential wealth of India, these are the two palliatives which Sir Rajendranath offers for middle class unemployment. Sir Rajendranath also corrects the mistaken impression often held that the interests of town and village are opposed to each other. "Town and country," he said, "are inter-dependent and nourish each other, the former providing manufactures and the latter food. The poverty of one necessarily brings about in the end the poverty of the other. The development of the manufacturing industries need not, by any means, lead to the neglect and decay of the nation's agriculture."

Lord Lytton in his speech evinced much interest in the poor farmer and made five suggestions, with which everybody will be in whole-hearted agreement, for bringing about a material change in his outlook and training him to love and cultivate his land instead of migrating to congested industrial towns. The first is to eradicate epidemic diseases which sap the strength of the cultivator; the second is to improve the yield of the soil which he cultivates by the substitution of scientific for primitive methods of cultivation; the third is to train his intellect so that he may reap the maximum of profit from his labour and maximum of enjoyment from his leisure; the fourth is to save him from dependence on the money-lender by teaching him the principles of co-operation; the fifth is to introduce village industries by which he may supplement his income from the soil. His Excellency regretted, however, that "no political party in Bengal has yet come forward with the object of utilising this machinery of Government for the benefit of the rural population." This is indeed true to some extent of Bengal where, owing to the obstructionist tactics of the Swarajists, the nation-building departments have suffered. There was some talk of village re-construction in C. R. Das's time and some funds were also collected for the purpose, but nothing has been heard of it since. But the progress in other provinces where the Reforms have been utilised to the full has not been in any way remarkable. The fact is that the Transferred Departments have not sufficient funds to carry on their projects and even in cases where the Transferred Department wants to make some advancement in the existing position, the Reserved half often bars the way. The conclusion, therefore, is irresistible that, unless the system of government is radically changed, there is no possibility of any progress in this or in other Departments.

The Naturalisation Bill: The Naturalisation Bill to which we referred last week has been passed by the Legislative Assembly. We are glad to see that the House, not excluding the Government benches, unanimously approved of an important amendment to the Bill by Mr. B. Das that one of the conditions of the grant of a certificate of Naturalisation should be that the country of the applicant does not exclude Indians from Naturalisation. It remains to be seen, however, how far it will have a retaliatory effect upon America.

MOTION PICTURES AND CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Writing nearly a year ago, we pointed out the unfortunate tendency prevalent among picture palaces to screen films and stage plays that appeal to the worst passions in man and quoted an authority to show that most of the crimes in the City could be traced to them. Nor is this all. It was long known that considerable cruelty is being inflicted on dumb animals in the production of motion pictures, and this has only been confirmed by the findings of an influential Committee appointed by The Christian Science Monitor of Boston to investigate the charges of cruelty brought to its notice. America, as the home of the sensational million-dollar production, is the worst sinner in this respect and Europe to a lesser extent, though Indian film manufacturers are also slowly beginning to imitate their brethren across the seas. It is a matter for satisfaction, however, that America has begun seriously to grapple with both these evils. The third Motion Picture Conference held last year dealt with the first evil, while the efforts of the Committee appointed under the auspices of The Christian Science Monitor to go into the charges of cruelty to animals are slowly bearing fruit. The Committee holds that it has been proved beyond doubt that cruelty to animals in film production has been countenanced and practised in certain picture studios, both large and small. Performing of unnatural and dangerous acts, bull-fights, rodeos, diving horses, stampedes of herds of cattle, animals performing dressed as humans, these are some of the cruelties to which dumb animals are subjected. It need hardly be said that it is highly degrading to public morals, not only because of the physical pain and suffering caused to the animals themselves, but also on account of the harmful and degrading influence upon the moral character of persons, especially children, who witness scenes portraying cruelties. Apart from films where cruelty is actually perpetrated, there are also certain films in which cruelty to animals is suggested and where dummies are employed to produce startling effects. The effect of such "faked" pictures, to use the words of the Committee, is to excite the spectators, harden them to scenes of cruelty, and dull their senses both to the rights of dumb creatures and to man's duty to be kind and merciful towards them. And when it is remembered that approximately 600 feature pictures of five or more reels in length are produced yearly and shown in 15,000 theatres to 50,000,000 people weekly in the United States, it will be seen what a tremendous influence they exert on the life and thought of the people. The controllers of these film industries are, so to speak, the guardians of public morals and they should be held accountable for any digression from the highest standards of conduct. The Committee's efforts, however, are not in vain, for, as a result of its investigation which included conferences with the Hon. Will Hays and some of his associates, the heads of the largest and most influential film producers' organisation which controls over 90 per cent of the film production in the United States, some definite progress has been made towards the ultimate elimination of all cruelty in picture work. With film studios taking the lead in the right direction, the Committee hopes that film exhibitors will naturally follow by refusing to exhibit pictures involving either suggested or actual cruelty. But all this depends upon the education of the people. As the Committee observes: "The mere passage of resolutions, however, will not prevent cruelty to animals in the picture industry. An awakened, aggressive public sentiment is needed to supplement and make effective the action of the directors. When picture patrons give both producers and exhibitors to understand that box office receipts will suffer and that picture houses will not be patronized if cruel films are shown, the evil will soon disappear and motion picture animals will suffer no more". There is also much to be said in favour of a suggestion which we made on another occasion, namely, the need for some sort of self-regulation by an organisation of producers and theatrical managers. As we said before, if it is put plainly to them, as a body, there is no reason whatever why this evil should continue a day longer. Here, then, is a piece of warning to the film-producers and exhibitors as well as to the public of India. We would also call upon religious and other organisations to condemn this evil in no uncertain terms.

THE MUSSALMAN WAKF ACT.

We have received from the Director of Information, Punjab, a pamphlet which gives a brief account of the Mussalman Wakf Act which came into force in August 1923 and with special reference to the Punjab. This Act, it may be remembered, was passed by the Central Legislature in order to make provision for the better management of Mussalman wakf (public endowments) properties and for ensuring the keeping and publication of proper accounts in respect of such properties. Though the measure was welcomed by Muslim opinion all over India, it was left to the Local Governments to extend all or any of the provisions of the Act to the whole province or any part of it, and to exempt from its operation any specified section of the Mussalman community. It will be interesting in this connection to recall the opposition of a section of the Dawoodi Borah community to this Act as a result of which the Bombay Government excluded the Borah community for a peroid of three years from the operation of the Act when it was applied to this Presidency including Sind on the 1st June, 1925. In response to the unanimous demand of the Mussalman community, the Punjab Government also applied this Act to that province on the 14th May 1924. The Wakf reform movement has a long history behind it. Government's attitude in this matter has always been one of non-interference and so the first move had to come from non-official Muslims. Even as early as 1887, Sir Syed Ahmad Khan brought forward a resolution on the subject at the All-India Mahomedan Educational Conference and subsequent Conferences reiterated the same. Eventually, Mr. Abdul Qasim's Mussalman Wakf Registration Bill, introduced in the Legislative Assembly in September 1921, matured into the present legislation. A distinction is to be made here between the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913 and the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923. The former, as the name implies, is an act which legalised and validated a certain kind of dedication of Wakf property, while the latter is an administrative measure. The Act imposes a duty on mutawallis to furnish particulars realating to wakfs and submit annual statements of accounts. A penalty is prescribed for non-compliance with these conditions or for submitting misleading and false statements. The Punjab, however, has adopted the Act with some modifications. Section 5 of the Act which makes auditing of wakf property accounts submitted to the Court compulsory, does not apply to that Province for the time being. The consequence seems to be that the Act is more a dead letter there and mutawallis are evading their obligations. The rigorous application of the law in a few cases will no doubt bring them to their senses. We hope Muslims would not fail to avail themselves of the benefits of a legislation that has been furnished them by Government for the better administration of their properties. Mention may also be made in this connection of the miserable fate which Sir Hari Singh's Bill providing for the better management of the Hindu religious and charitable trust properties on the lines of the Mussalman Wakf Act met with in the Assembly. In view of the objection made by the provincial governments that it is a transferred subject and as such should not be legislated upon by the Central Government, the Select Committee to which it was referred has decided to recommend to the Assembly not to proceed with it.

DURBAR NAUTCHES.

(By Mr. N. Lakshmanan.)

The special correspondent of a Madras newspaper says that fifty dancing girls and hundred Sarangi players performed the Jubilee Karva Dance at the Jubilee Celebration Committee's Garden party held at the Royal Palace, Baroda. The Indian Daily Mail of the 16th instant publishes a flashlight photograph of the imposing Baroda Darbar in which two dancing girls of South India appear as standing sentry. This is something quite unexpected from the enlightened State of Baroda; for, Indian social reformers had fondly hoped that Nautches in high circles are things of the past.

I showed the flashlight photograph to a dancer and songstress of the same caste in South India and the noble lady was indeed cut to the quick. For, herself an accomplished woman, she gave up, early in life, her lucrative profession and has ever since taken the lead in persuading the members of her sect to give up the profession of dancing. She tells me that, the other day, a well-known lover of art discussed the Abhinaya Shastra or the "Mirror of gesture" with her and bemoaned the disappearance of this sacred art from India. In reply, she said that exactly because this is a sacred art it should be rescued and placed in worthy hands.

It is a sign of the specious times in which we live that the response to reform of social abuses has come from even unexpected quarters, namely, the members of the communities concerned. To quote from John Morely: "In matters of social improvement, the most common reason why one hits upon a point of progress and not another, is that one happens to be more directly touched than the other by the unimproved practice." A conspicuous example of this process is the Senguntha Mahajana Sangham which is endeavouring for the last so many years to abolish the twin-evils of nautches by dancing girls and of dedication of girls, ostensibly for temple service, but virtually to a life of shame.

The public are aware of the feeling of indignation that stirred India to its depths when a vigilant journalist of Madras unearthed the suicidal proposal for sending a bevy of Indian dancing girls to the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley. It will also be within the recollection of your readers that the anti-nautch movement was started by educated Hindus as early as the year 1892. I beg leave to quote the memorable utterance of one of the pioneers of this movement. "As long as the nautch is fashionable among us, and is freely indulged in," said Dr. Ramakrishna Bhandarkar of revered memory, "it is impossible that the morality of our men should greatly improve, or that our respect for women should increase; and in a country in which women are trampled upon, there can be no great advantage in social and moral matters." (Vide Mrs. Marcus B. Fuller: The Wrongs of Indian Womanhood, page. 173).

I, in common with many a social worker, have learnt to regard His Highness the Maharaja of Gaekwar as the "Patita Pavan", as the upliftor of the fallen, and it is my sincere hope and prayer that His Highness will ere long set his face against the continuance of the nautch system in the Baroda Darbar.

THE NATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION OF INDIA.

(By Mrs. Kumudini Ganti.)

The all-conspicuous problem of politics has stemmed back the tide of important reforms so vital for the regeneration and reconstruction of India. The magnitude of this task is so great that the constructional work done at present is but a poor prelude to the marvellous civilization to be ushered in and the present transitory state is but the drifting wave of the surging sea whose glorious vista is yet unveiled.

Political awakening can have no solid footing for the up-build of a nation, so long as its race-consciousness is not evolutionized into social and moral upheaval.

Human fabric is so coalesced that the workers in the political field are daily confronted with inextricable social and ever-knotted religious problems that need immediate solution for further political progress. No political freedom can build up a solid nation on a patched-up foundation that cracks into splits every now and then with every increasing weight of the rising edifice, its gaps exhibiting the shallow unsolidarity underneath.

The strength of a nation is in the strength of its individual unit. What nation can you build when multi-millions of your people are steeped in ignorance, moral and social depravity?

How can you scale the ladder of liberty when the fetters of the inhuman caste-system and the tyranny of man are crushing down the spirit of millions of the unprivileged humanity and the weaker sex?

That liberty, equity and equality which you are demanding from your rulers from the top of your voice, have you imparted it to your people at home?

That injustice, iniquity, inhumanity and exploitations committed by the foreigners in the name of civilization that you are daily decrying from your pulpits, are you not perpetrating them on those that are your own in the name of religion and social custom?

And which political salvation can redeem us into a nation on a basis of equity and equality when the religious codes have social and moral injunctions against the principles of equity and equality?

When religion lost to its spiritual perspectives degenerates into rites and ritualism, it ceases to be the cogent power to inspire higher and sublimer aspects of humanity to the call of righteousness and veracity, as the greatest glory and privilege of mankind.

When religion is stagnant and its spiritual influx to humanity is hedged in, then nobler impulses, higher aspirations and finer sentiments of man die undeveloped and unnourished and all selfish greed, mercenary pursuits and social and moral evils creep in. When men are debased and corruptions have their scope for free play, the national decay is sealed.

National freedom involves the internal freedom India's national regeneration is pre-eminently her socia and moral regeneration and the revival of her spirituality.

THE PROBLEM OF INDIAN WIDOWS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have my best sympathies for these unfortunate countrywomen of mine. It pains me always when I read again and again of their sufferings and the tortures they undergo in a Hindu's home; a home where Sri Krishna is worshipped and Sri Ramachandraji is the ideal of a perfect man.

You will not, therefore, misunderstand me if I have to correct one or two incorrect and misleading statements in Mgr. Rossillon's writings (See I.S.R, 30th January 1926).

"Once a widow always a widow", is not substantially correct for all the two million of widows about whom he writes. It is equally incorrect to say that all the two million widows he writes about have to undergo enforced widowhood.

I may specifically mention the case of Kadva Patidars The Kadvas celebrate marriages once in eleven, twelve or thirteen years. According to the custom in their community even young girl babies of 15 months old are married. If per chance any of these babies, girls or women become widows, they do re-marry. Sometimes if the parents do not get a suitable match for their daughters they are married to "trees or bouquets" and the next day they "become" widows. Such widows, almost without fail, marry again at the age of 12 or 14 or even later In the meantime they are all enumerated and reckoned as widows.

Take again the case of Anavlas of Amalsad, Bilimora etc., Kaliparaj people of Bulsar etc., Ghanchis and Golas, Dublas and Kolis and so many other castes, where remarriage is not objected to but is very common. I wish I could enumerate to you at length the castes and communities which permit widow remarriage and also give you reliable statistics of widows that remarry in them. That would perhaps be very lengthy. I may, therefore, conclude by saying that all reformers and all those who sympathise with the woes and misfortunes need not make such sweeping, incorrect and challengeable statements. Except my differing on such essential facts, I mostly agree with the rest of Mgr. Rossillon's writings.

MAHATMA GANDHI ON CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your issue of January 19, I notice a paragraph entitled "Mahatma Gandhi on Christian Missions in India," in which the following sentence occurs:

"The great educational and curative institutions of Christian Missions I also count amongst indirect results, because they have been established not for their own sakes, but as an aid to proselytising."

It is not strange, perhaps, that Mr. Gandhi has this idea, as there are many Christians who would speak of Medical Missions as a means to an end, e. g, a good pioneer agency, or a good evangelistic agency. But such is not the true understanding of their place. No one who has studied the life of Christ would say that His ministry of healing was a means to an end. Recently medical missionaries in India have felt the need of a clear statement on this subject, and the following was drawn up by a Committee consisting of certain medical missionaries meeting with some members of the National Christian Council. It has received the unanimous sanction of the Committee and has commended itself, without one exception, to many others who have been asked to express their opinion in regard to it.

"It is our conviction that the ministry of healing is an essential part of the work of the Christian Church, whose mission it is to represent God as revealed in Jesus Christ. We observe that Christ's own testimony concerning His mission was that He came to do the will of the One who sent Him and to finish His work. We must believe then that the ministry of healing for the body is an expression of the attitude and mind of God towards men and has its source in the compassion and love of God. It is our conviction that the Christian should concern himself with the care of the sick apart from whether others are carrying on the work or not. From this conviction it becomes our duty to develop Christian medical work as part of the essential work of the Church in India, and to consider how this may best be done.

The recognition of the ministry of healing as an essential part of the work of God through the Church involves the thought that the service thus rendered is a natural and vital expression of the Spirit of Christ and can best be engaged in by men and women imbued with the Spirit of Christ who served men for love of them and who, as evidence of His Messiahship, drew attention to the work He was doing. 'The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up and the poor have the gospel preached unto them'."

"KANARESE" IN BOMBAY—A QUERY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Pardon my troubling you for a little light on an interesting point. Mr. K. Natarajan speaking at the Senate meeting on the 30th ultimo on the motion to recognise Hindi is reported to have said: 'Where formerly all Government proclamations were published in Kanarese in Bombay, now they were translated into another language.' That reminds me of some similar statement made some years ago in the I. S. R. about Kanarese in Bombay. I wonder whether the period referred to is not that during which Bombay was under the Portuguese or some period of time just following it. In that case or even otherwise, I think it is likely that the "Kanarese" said to be once the predominant vernacular of Bombay represents only Canarin, the old Portuguese term for the dialect of Marathi spoken on the West Coast including Goa and Kanara (whence Canarin), now named Goanese or more generally Konkani (Concanim)—and perhaps by extension applied to the literary or standard form of Marathi. Canarin is also a term applied by the Portuguese in disparagement —much like Native in English—to those of us whose ancestors they converted or perverted to Christianity in Salsette as well as Goa,—a term which can be explained by supposing either that the early Portuguese in India confounded the inhabitants of the latter tract—the principal base of their operations—with the Kanarese-speaking inhabitants of the neighbouring parts called Kanara, or that they regarded Goa as a province of the old Kanarese Kingdom of Vijayanagar, of which Goa was still an outlying part when the Portuguese first came out to the East.

I should like to know whether my conjecture regarding the "Kanarese" commonly associated with Old Bombay is correct.

Karwar, Yours etc.
Feb. 3rd 1926. S. D. NADKARNI.

[Mr. Natarajan had in mind the foot-note which is reproduced below, to page 121 of "Bombay in the Making" by B. M Malbari:—"A Bombay consultation dated January 31, 1670, refers to an order of the Honourable Company that all cases of difference between the English and the Portugal, be decided by a jury, half English, half Portugal. At the same consultation it was decided to publish a Code of Laws, no trace of which is now to be found. But it is worth noting that the laws were ordered to be translated into Portuguese and Kanarese. The preference given to Kanarese over the other vernaculars then in vogue in Bombay is explained by Mr. Edwards by the fact "that the early population of these islands were to a large extent of Southern Dravidian origin" (Rise of Bombay, p. 2)."—Ed. I. S. R.].

THE CASTE SYSTEM IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In America there is a great deal of colour prejudice. The superciliousness of the white man is especially seen in his not eating with the coloured.

In India we have the caste system which is equally inhuman and it manifests itself in the same manner even though the colour is the same. Our reformers in India, although they recognise the evils of caste system, I am afraid, are yet trying to bring about reforms by half measures. I cannot understand even Mahatma Gandhi saying: "I do not ask you to eat together, but just remove the untouchability." The railway trains are effectively removing untouchability. If the social reformers have not the courage to kill the caste system in its entirety, it is better that they keep their hands off altogether instead of advocating reforms on lines of least resistance. When caste, which is the curse of the Indian Nation and is sapping its religious, social and even political life is done away, then India will have a great spiritual message to give to the world.

Yours etc.,
RAJA RATNAM ISAAC.

WOMEN'S PROGRESS ELSEWHERE.

Under the auspices of the Women's Indian Association a meeting was held on Saturday the 9th January under the Banyan tree at the Theosophical Society, Adyar, Madras, for the purpose of hearing about the progress of womanhood in the many countries from which representatives had come for the recent Theosophical Convention. In opening the proceedings Mrs. Jinarajadasa, who presided, said that that was the first international meeting of women that had been held in India. There had been women's conferences, but they had been comprised of women of different parts of India, but in seeing such large numbers of women from all over the world she believed that they had a unique international gathering there. She sketched the progress of the Women's Movement in India through its recent educational, social reform and political activities.

Madam Kamensky of Russia said that the characteristics of Russian women had always been courage and faith. By the capabilities of individual women womanhood took rights without asking for them, and the people of Russia have a saying that "if a woman is in a movement then it is alright."

Miss Pallin of Sweden said that since 1923 all Government posts have been open to women. Four women are members of Parliament, of whom one is a member of the Theosophical Society. In her country women are allowed to be ministers of religion. All rights belong to women but they have not as yet appropriated all that has been open to them. She advised Indian women to learn independence from Swedish women and said that independence of thought and action in womanhood gave more happiness to women and made also for the greater happiness of men.

Mrs. Van Kegban spoke for Holland and said that the characteristic of its women was a love of peace and freedom. She related incidents about their great Queen, saying how they had been blessed by her peace-making qualities for twenty-five years. The Women's Movement had no longer to fight in the open for equality for women, but there were still many points of detail which had to be won.

Madam Bemondt explained why the women in France are not likely to get political recognition for some time because there is much interlinking between the Church and politics, and the Free Thinkers in France are afraid that the women are too religiously influenced. A special characteristic of the Women's Movement in France is its desire to protect animals.

The key of political action was that which unlocked the freedom of British women, explained Mrs. Duckworth. She paid a tribute to the work of the militant suffragettes and instanced that there are now women on practically all Public Boards and there are over eight hundred women Magistrates in the country. Addressing the Indian ladies present she concluded: "Prepare yourself with education so that when your importunity gains your opportunity you may show yourself fitted and capable." As she had lived some years in Egypt she also told something of the very great backwardness of the general masses of the people, their cleanlines and education being conspicuous by their absence. The need of the moment was child clinics, hygiene and primary education.

Mrs. Labberton was most interesting in her sketch of the life and characterisitics of Japanese women, of whom obedience as wives seems to be the most prominent characteristic and a remarkable democracy between all classes of women—the mistress she had seen digging the garden while the servants and mistress say "goodbye" familiarly to the master each morning as he goes to office. The terrible problem in Japan is prostitution and women are beginning to take that seriously.

With a few words from Mrs. Bennett of Australia Mrs. Cousins closed the meeting with the affirmation that there can be no barriers in the future for women who have the desire for service in their hearts in any sphere of life.—The Swarajya, Madras.

THE BOMBAY BABY WEEK EXHIBITION.

The Bombay Baby Week Exhibition commenced on Tuesday last in the grounds of the Improvement Trust adjoining the Vanita Vishram at Sandhurst Road, Bombay. A central dais has been erected for the Cinema Screen and about 40 stalls are running round three sides. The different sections of the show are intended to bring home to both rich and poor the essential factors of life and health, of disease and disability, that influence the lives of young children in India. They are designed to enlighten all who are ignorant of matters that closely affect the health of the mother and child and aim at awakening public interest in order that those adverse conditions which cripple human lives on the very threshold of their existence may be removed. To facilitate demonstration, the Exhibition has been divided into sections which deal with pre-maternity, maternity, common diseases of infants, foodstuffs, faulty environment, the milk problem, etc. Each field of work is dealt with in great detail by a group of medical experts who have prepared posters, charts, diagrams, etc., to convey to the lay mind the significance of the subjects dealt with. Additional value is added to the Exhibition by the incorporation of health hints on general problems of sanitation, such as Malaria.

Welfare Centres.

As one enters the Exhibition, the first thing that will catch the visitor's eye is a model creche of the Bombay Presidency Infant Welfare Society. It demonstrates how this Society at its centres in Bombay shelters and looks after children of working mothers while the women are away at work and how these little children spend their time in happy and sanitary surroundings for many hours of the day.

A miniature representation of an Infant Welfare Centre follows. It gives the public an idea of how a centre of this nature is worked:—admission and weighing of babies, examination by a lady doctor, distribution of milk, advise to mothers, etc., etc. Cards and charts are kept as exhibits for verification of details.

In two stalls attached to the above two pictures from life are displayed: an opium-drugged baby and a baby with rickets contrasted with a healthy baby; and an untrained dai with the wrong type of implements used by her, contrasted with a trained midwife. A right and wrong type of cradle also forms part of the exhibits of this section.

Miss Golding, Superintendent of the Welfare Society, assisted by the Lady Doctors of the centres and a group of nurses, explain details to the visitors and give them object lessons of the work that the Society is doing for Bombay to ameliorate the adverse conditions under which babies are brought up in this City.

Health Department.

Dr. J. B Sandilands has created a number of stalls. The Vaccination Stall illustrates by models and statistical charts the effects of vaccination in the prevention of small-pox. The means by which Tuberculosis is spread and can be prevented is impressed on visitors by representations of the conditions which promote the disease, effects of open air shelters which cure it and of the provision that can be made to prevent danger from those who are infected. An electrical apparatus showing how an insanitary room can be made into a sanitary one is an interesting section.

The milk stall is full of interest. The handling and distribution of milk by sanitary and insanitary methods, with special reference to the Indian methods of producing, handling and selling milk, is shown by means of instructive photographs and the exhibition of modern dairy appliances and home utensils Dr. C. Coutinho, Municipal Analyst, who is in charge of this section, shows methods of analysing milk and of finding out what samples are produced under clean and unclean conditions.

An extremely interesting addition to the Health Department exhibits are models of open and closed wells, a plant for chlorinating public water supplies and examples of reliable domestic filters which emphasise the necessity of using the means available for securing water which is safe for drinking purposes.

realpatidar.com

"The full-sized models of a clean room marked "where babies live" and the dark and dirty room "where babies die" are again shown this year.

Simple diagrams give the visitors an idea of the infantile mortality in Bombay and the toll that different diseases take on infant life and make this section very informative.

DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

Modern medicine aims more and more at killing the root causes of disease by destroying the circumstances which give rise to them and in this respect the section of the Exhibition dealing with the diseases of children is thoroughly up-to-date and in keeping with the best modern teaching. The exhibits illustrating this section have accordingly been designed to impress upon mothers and all concerned in children's welfare the primary importance of providing for the child such conditions both before and after birth as are conducive to health. The main principle underlying the valuable and striking lessons taught in this section are that prevention is certainly far better than cure.

DENTAL STALL.

Dr. J. J. Modi has an array of numerous exhibits to show diseases of the teeth and lays particular emphasis on cleanliness of both mouth and teeth as effective preventive measures against oral sepsis and decays.

OPTHALMIC STALL.

Two Doctors and a nurse give the public domestic hints regarding the care of the eyes. A large-sized celluloid doll with movable head is being used as a model to give practical demonstrations on how to wash babies' eyes, etc.

VENEREAL DISEASES.

A profuse display of coloured posters call public attention to this great social evil that in all European Cities affect more than 20% of the population and is authoritatively stated to sap the stamina and physique of the Indian race to a much larger extent. These show inter alia that in a large Children's Clinic in Bombay out of every five babies that come up for infant ailments one is found to be congenitally syphilitic; and 25% of all causes of blindness in children is due to this terrible scourge of humanity.

EAR, NOSE AND THROAT.

The lessons given are by means of explanatory placards and it is amazing to learn how a small neglect on our part to take care of our childrens' ears, noses and throats causes irreparable harm to them in their after life.

ORTHOPÆDICS.

Orthopædics is the science which teaches the different methods of preventing and correcting the deformities of children.

Proper advice and prompt treatment in childhood prevents development of permanent deformities. Ignorance or neglect on the part of parents in such cases renders the whole life of the child crippled and useless.

MATERNITY.

The care of the mother, preparations for confinement, a model labour room, etc, are well depicted in a special section for which the Health Department is responsible.

OTHER STALLS.

A literature stall distributes advice to parents in all languages, and a stereoscope gives practical lessons by means of magnified pictures. Several dealers in patent baby foods—Glaxo, Horlicks, Nestles and Lactogal—have a display of their wares and explain the advantages of their products. The Bombay Improvement Trust has also a display of models and diagrams showing how slums in Bombay are being turned into sanitary habitations with avenues and roads and gardens. The G I. P. and B. B. & C. I. Railways are advertising in two special stalls.

EXHIBITS.

Major Morrison and the staff of the Haffkine Institute are mainly responsible for the health side of the Exhibition, consisting of the Malarial exhibit, the guinea-worm exhibit, the plague exhibit, the anti-rabic exhibit, and the snake exhibit.

BROTHELS IN BOMBAY.

A public meeting of the women of Bombay to protest against the continuance of the system of brothels in the Presidency and in the City of Bombay was held on Saturday the 30th January at Marwadi Vidyalaya Hall, Mrs. Saberbanoo P. Vakil presiding.

Mrs. Vakil said it was the duty of every woman to protest against the system of continuance of brothels now prevailing in the City. In many parts of the British Empire this vice was uprooted but she regretted that it was not yet done so in the city of Bombay. Some rich people might not care to take interest in this question thinking it was not their business to interfere with the vice of the poor but they forget that they depended very much upon the poor for their service and if they were affected by infectious diseases there was a possibility of their contracting the same and also their innocent children on whom the servants attended. It was their duty, therefore, to see that their servants' health was good and above suspicion.

Mrs. Hirabai Tata then said: In many localities of Bombay respectable people were ashamed to pass owing to the existence of brothels there. In Great Britain and many important cities brothels were entirely abolished which was due to the protest made by women. The authorities in Bombay were awakened only for some time when a murder or some major offence of that kind took place and again the matter was dropped without taking any tangible action. There were about 900 brothels consisting of 5,000 prostitutes of various classes such as Europeans, Japanese, Jews, Hindus, and Indian Christians etc. Most of them carried on this business against their will by force of circumstances as they did so out of poverty, while others either were kidnapped, seduced or sold by parents for a trifle. It was time, therefore, that the women of Bombay took up the matter and urged the Government to enforce some law for the abolition of this evil in the city. She, therefore, moved :—

RESOLUTION.

That this meeting of the women of Bombay held under the joint auspices of the Bombay Branch of the Women's Indian Association, the Gujarati Hindu Stri Mandal, the Bombay Presidency Women's Council, the Ladies' Branch of the National Indian Association, the Arya Mahila Samaj, the Jain Mahila Samaj, the Pathare Prabhu Mahila Samaj, the Bene-Israel Stri Mandal, the Shravika Ashrama, is strongly of opinion that the continuance of the system of brothels in the Presidency and the City of Bombay is highly undesirable, and is conducive to the moral degeneration of the young, and calls upon the Government and the members of the Legislative Councils to frame and enforce laws making the continuance and existence of brothels illegal.

Mrs. Rasikmani Desai in seconding the resolution said if the women did not help other fallen sisters no other person would. The Government, therefore, she hoped, would enact a law to eradicate this evil.

Miss Devis, Superintendent, League of Mercy, then said: The evil of prostitution was not necessary at all. They should, however, try to win the women by love rather than by force. A law had already been passed in 1923 in Bombay to put down this vice and a Vigilance Association was established. She, therefore, suggested to send the resolution to the Vigilance Association urging them to request the Government to enact a law for the suppression of this vice. She was working in connection with the League of Mercy and therefore was in touch with the fallen women and thought that it was better for them to remove the cause of the evil and suppress it bit by bit She did not think an immediate suppression of brothels would do any good to the fallen women as no provision was made for their support afterwards in the shape of rescue homes, etc. They should, therefore, work slowly and patiently for the suppression of this vice and with that view educate public opinion.

MISS GEDGE'S AMENDMENT

Miss Gedge then moved the following amendment :—

This meeting desires to give whole-hearted support to the Vigilance Association in the work that it is doing towards the ultimate suppression of brothels in the city.

The amendment was put to the vote and was lost only 34 voting for it and the original proposition was carried by 48 votes. It was then resolved :

That this meeting authorises the President to forward copies of the above resolution to the Hon. the Home Member of the Government of Bombay and the Secretary of the Bombay Legislative Council.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

An Inter-caste Marriage: An inter-caste marriage took place in the Theosophical Lodge, Palghat, according to ancient Vedic rites, under the auspices of the Arya Samaj. The parties to the wedding were Mr Saranath Aiyangar, Editor, Kudi Arasu and son of Mr. K. Desikachariar of Negapatam, and Sau. Shakuntala Devi, daughter to Shrimati Meenakshi Ammal, Secretary, "Sahodari Sangham," Coimbatore and of the late Mr. S. Thangavelu Pillai, Thillai Vitangan, Chidambaram Taluk. Pandit Rishi Ram, B.A., (Arya Pracharak) from the Punjab, acted as Agnihotri and administered the sacraments to the bride and bridegroom, who were attired in pure, home-spun Khaddar. Pandit Rishi Ram made a short speech exhorting the married couple to live up to the ancient ideals in the Vedic age as a Grahastha and Grahapatni and be a source of joy and help to the community. For his part, he said such marriages between a Brahmana and non-Brahmana family were common in the North, though in the South they were not so common. Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naicker returned thanks to the assembled guests for their presence. The bride and bridegroom paid a donation to the Arya Samaj and distributed money doles to the large number of the Cheruma and other submerged classes gathered outside. This is the first time in the annals of Palghat that an inter-caste marriage has taken place.

Problem of the Abnormal Child: Under the auspices of the Bengal Presidency Council of Women, a meeting was held at the Y. M. C. A., Chowringhee, recently, when Major O. Berkeley Hill spoke on the "Problem of the abnormal child." He said that there must be co-operation between the scientist, the political economist, the legislator, and the tax-payer, for the mentally defective child was not only a disturbing factor in the social fabric, but also liable to become a menace to public peace and safety. There was at present no legislation in this country in relation to mental deficiency although last February there was some discussion in the Legislative Assembly. The criterion, he said, of mental defect was purely an intellectual one. It was from the ranks of the temperamentally defective that these juvenile delinquents came. The lecturer gave a brief survey of some of the main points in causation and prevention of mental deficiency and discussed the question of treatment by institutional and extra-institutional means. For this work he said the existence of clinics was most essential because they afforded one of the best means of ridding the mental defective. India, he said, had no institution for mentally defective children except the ordinary mental hospitals which were most unsuitable for the purpose. It was high time that an institution for the juvenile mentally defective was started. Every community had to pay for this institution and the longer they waited the more serious the problem would become.

An Admirable Spirit: Mahatma Gandhi writes under this caption in Young India of 21st Jan : A friend who was at the bedside of the Maharaja of Nattore during his fatal illness thus describes the last scene: "The Maharanee is bearing up wonderfully. It does one a lot of good just to see her once! Such a sensible dignified dear little woman! For four days and nights before the death, she took her place at his bedside, did not stir, without food, without sleep, she nursed him. Did everything with her own hands. Chanted hymns in his ears at the last and closed his eyes with the last breath. She does not weep, nor does she let anybody else weep. She goes about the house, like a shadow, attending to all her duties! Such a dignified house of mourning I have never seen." Such devotion, dignity and resignation are worthy of imitation. In Hindu households there is too much and unseemly weeping and gnashing of teeth though our religious literature strictly forbids weeping over death. In many places weeping over the dead has become the fashion and it is stimulated where it is not spontaneous. It is a barbarous godless custom and should be prohibited. Those who have faith in God, should welcome death as a deliverance. It is a change as certain as youth and old age and no more to be deplored than the latter.

Bombay Baby Week: As a part of the programme of the National Baby Week which was opened on Tuesday the 9th instant, the Sub-Committee is organising two Baby Shows to be held simultaneously on Sunday the 21st inst. at 2 p.m, one at the Vanita Vishram, Sandhurst Road, Girgaum, and the other at the Working Men's Institute (Damodar Thackersey Hall), Parel. The competition is open to Indian babies of those classes whose family income does not exceed Rs. 100. Babies up to 2 years may compete and will be classified in four classes, namely, from birth to 6 months, 6 to 12 months, 12 to 18 months and 18 to 24 months. Some of the leading specialists in Obstetrics and Diseases of Children in Bombay are being invited to act as judges, and it is proposed to have two physicians for each class who will adopt a uniform standard of judging according to a definite plan of examination. Prizes in money will be distributed to the first three successful competitors in each class and a few consolation prizes will be given to the next best. Special certificates will also be issued to the prize winners. Lady Wilson has kindly consented to distribute the prizes.

Royal Military College, Sandhurst: It has been announced that an entrance examination for the admission of candidates to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, will be held at Simla during the latter half of May 1926. Copies of the "Provisional Regulations respecting the admission of Indian Gentlemen to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, England, 1925" and of the "Report on the Written Examination of Indian Candidates for the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, September, 1925" can be obtained from the Manager, Government of India Central Publication Branch, 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, at a cost of two annas per copy. Candidates who fulfil the conditions laid down in the Provisional Regulations, and are desirous of appearing at the above examination, should submit their applications either through some responsible officer such as a Commissioner, Collector, Head of a Recognised College, etc., or direct to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay.

The Non-Brahmin Ideal: The following comments of the Tribune, Lahore, on the Non-Brahmin Congress, written before its second session at Amraoti in Berar on the 27th, 28th and 29th December, we had to hold over for want of space. Referring to its creed which was stated as "the attainment, as early as possible of Home Rule or Swaraj within the British Empire," "the safeguarding of the interests of all the several castes on the principle of communal representation," and "the eradication of social inequalities," our contemporary wrote: "To the first and the third article of the creed no patriotic Indian will object. The first is substantially identical with article (1) of the constitution of the Indian National Congress, while the third has always been the express or implied goal of all national workers in India, and is, indeed, an indispensable, unalterable condition of Swaraj. The second, however, is absolutely unacceptable, not only to the Brahmins in the South, but to all or most of the Hindus, whether Brahmins or non-Brahmins in the North. It evidently does not occur to the promoters of the Congress that with the interests of all the several castes safeguarded on the principle of communal representation there can naturally be no such thing as Swaraj in India. It would at best be caste or communal Raj. In every place one particular caste or community will be permanently in possession of political power—in the South the non-Brahmins viewed as one community, if they can be so viewed, in the greater part of India the Hindus, in Bengal and the Punjab the Mussalmans. To call such a constitution Swaraj would be a violent misuse of words. Swaraj may and in many cases does mean majority rule, but the only majority rule that is consistent with the basic idea of Swaraj is the rule of a political and, therefore, changeable and temporary majority and not of a communal and, therefore, inflexible and permanent majority."

Social Service Leagues in South India: We are glad to see that a Social Service League has been started in the Tinnevelly District with the object of working among the poorer and depressed classes of people in this District in order to uplift them and to ameliorate their conditions through education and civilization. Among its objects are: (1) Starting wherever possible some night schools for the labourers and day schools for the benefit of their children. (2) Starting free reading rooms and vernacular libraries on a small scale. (3) Working for the improvement of the sanitary conditions of their filthy habitations and hamlets. (4) Arranging public lectures and illustrated magic lantern discourses on civilization, education about the evils of drink and other unclean habits and social evils, about sickness, cleanliness etc. (5) Starting Co-operative stores, Credit Societies and Savings Banks on co-operative principle. (6) Encouraging higher and vocational education by founding scholarships and educational funds. We are glad to note that attempts are being made to organise a Social Service league in Madura also.

Marriage Among Bhatias: "Sympathiser" writes to the Sind Observer :—In spite of the resolution passed by the Bhatia Mahasabha that, owing to the paucity of girls in the community, any body could marry from a different community, the same stringency in the observances of the caste custom of marrying within the community prevails. On account of this rigidity the youths of my community in whom everyone centres his hopes are rotting without real family life. If this state continues serious harm will ensue to the whole community. It is very well to pass a few resolutions in a conference, it is easier still to make a few suggestions. What is difficult is the summoning up of all powers to suggest a practical programme and help towards its being put into operation. Where is the harm, then, if instead of persisting in their exclusiveness they combine with the other sections of the Hindu community? Has their aloofness brought them any good? It is for the younger generation of Bhatias to awake before it is too late.

Bharat Dharma Mahamandal: We are asked to announce that H. H. the Maharajadhiraja of Durbhanga will leave Patna for Dwarka on the 8th Feb., arriving on the 11th to preside over the Maha-adhivesan of the Bharat Dharma Mahamandal to be held there on the 12th and 13th February. H. H. leaves Dwarka after about a week's stay.

Satyagraha at Suchindram: It is understood that the Avarna of S. Travancore under the leadership of Dr. E. M. Perumal Naidu, have commenced Satyagraha recently at the Suchindram temple. The authorities, having received information beforehand, held a conference of the A. S. P., the Additional District Magistrate and the Assistant Dewaswom Commissioner and resolved to adopt a policy of non-interference. All the same, as the Avarnas proceeded to enter the temple gate, a batch of the Pidakakars met them and offered resistance. They stood there from four to six in the evening, each watching the other, and then withdrew.

NOTES

Mahatma Gandhi's Autobiography: The autobiographical notes which Mahatma Gandhi is contributing to Young India have evoked widespread interest. Mahatmaji's object in publishing them is to help wayfarers in life's highway to benefit by his experience, to avoid his mistakes and to avail themselves of whatever they find helpful in his narrative. The strict accuracy of the facts which he has chosen as the salient features of his personal life, is vouched for by the fact that there is nothing special or unusual about them. The account of his relations with his father, friends and relatives is true of hundreds and thousands of persons through the length and breadth of the country. It is not, therefore, the facts themselves but the peculiar angle from which he views them that constitutes the interest of the story. Apart from every other consideration, even the simplest fact in one's life works differently when viewed in retrospect from what it does when viewed either in prospect or in actual process. Death, for instance, is more fearful in prospect than in actual experience as described by persons who have narrowly escaped it. Birth must have been extremely painful in experience, but in retrospect it creates scarcely a ripple in one's memory. Add to this the desire that others should profit by one's experience and it is impossible for the most conscientious narrator to avoid an unconscious tendency to emphasise the didactic aspect of a fact beyond its actual experiential value to himself. The question to our mind, therefore, is not whether the facts are accurately stated, but whether the point of view from which they are stated is right. Some critics have blamed Mahatmaji for referring in detail to the experiences of his early married life, while others have applauded him for doing so. To us it seems that there is as little occasion for the one as for the other It is entirely within his right, subject to the feelings of those near and dear to him, to make public or to refrain from doing so the intimate facts of his own life. Mahatma Gandhi has elected to take the public into his confidence in matters which the majority of men treat as of purely personal and private interest. His doing so, however, has imposed, at least so we think, a duty on those whose experience or interpretation differs from his to state wherein the difference lies. We are no admirers of the institution of boy and girl marriages, but it cannot be fairly charged with being an influence making for sensuality. On the contrary, we do not know of any system in which the physical aspect of the marriage union is so little considered in comparison with its ceremonial and sacramental aspect.

Reforms for the Frontier: Too much unnecessary heat was imported into the discussion in the Legislative Assembly the other day on the resolution brought forward by a Swarajist Mahomedan member from Madras urging the extension of the Reforms to the North West Frontier Provinces also. In response to the demand of the Muslims from the N. W. F. Provinces to be placed on an equality with the other provinces in the matter of constitutional Reforms, the Government of India appointed a few years ago a Committee to go into the question. The majority of the Committee, consisting of three European officials and three Muslim members, recommended the extension of the Reforms to that province also, while the minority consisting of two Hindu members favoured re-amalgamation with Punjab from which it was separated by Lord Curzon in 1901. The Government did not take any action on the Report of the Committee, but the Muslim League took up the cause of the Frontier Muslims and in obedience to its mandate, Syed Murtuza brought forward a resolution for the purpose. The Muslims and the Government, of course, are in entire accord with the resolution. But some Hindus under the leadership of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya have been opposing it on the ground that, as the Muslims are in an overwhelming majority in the N. F. W. Provinces, it would jeopardise the Hindu minority. This, however, is a panicky view of the situation, for the Muslims are assuring Hindus of proper safeguards for the protection of minorities. But the right view, which we think is also the predominant Hindu view, was expounded by Mr. B. C Pal. He said that though he is a Hindu, a member of the Hindu Sabha, and a supporter of the Sangathan movement in Bengal, his sympathies were entirely with the mover of the resolution, and that the Hindus of the Frontier Province should accommodate themselves to the Muslim majority in the same way as Muslims in other parts of India should accommodate themselves to the Hindu majority. We hope that when the Assembly resumes discussion of the question, this sane view will prevail.

Germany and the League: Europe is not yet ready for the much-talked-of Locarno spirit. The Locarno agreement notwithstanding, some of the European powers have not yet ceased to regard Germany as a defeated enemy. The blustering Mussoulini, the dictator of Europe, who bullied Greece and Afghanistan in turn, tried to force a war on humbled and disarmed Germany when the latter demanded the legitimate rights of German minorities settled in South Tyrol. Fortunately, however, Germany adopted a conciliatory attitude and the whole matter ended with empty threats from both sides.

Even more than Italy, France has never forgiven Germany as the arch-offender in the Great War and she has been looking with jealous eyes on the wonderful recovery post-war Germany has made. This was strikingly brought out in her attitude towards Germany's application for admission to the League of Nations entailing her possession of a permanent seat on the League Council. In order to secure an anti-German majority in the Council, France is favouring an increase in the number of permanent seats on the Council from four to eight by the addition of Spain, Poland and Brazil, besides Germany. Britain, of course, is opposing this move of France not only because it will weaken her position in the League Council but also because of her anxiety to give Germany an equal status with other first class European powers in the League Council. If France persists in her narrow fool-hardy policy, it is likely that Germany may withdraw her application to the League.

Madras and Prohibition: From the fuller reports of the discussion which took place recently in the Madras Legislative Council on the Excise Committee's report, we see that the resolution which the Council passed and which the Ministerialist Party adopted as its own for bringing about prohibition by gradual steps within 20 years, is not in any way calculated to bring about prohibition in the near future. As the Hindu rightly points out, it is only a milk-and-water resolution and makes no advance whatever upon the present policy of the Government except a vaguely-worded pious hope that prohibition should be reached within 20 years. It is significant that the Opposition members did not vote at all for the resolution. All parties in the country are agreed that immediate steps should be taken to put an end to the drink evil and to spread its abolition over a long period of 20 years does not speak much for the sincerity of a party which poses to be democratic and as representing the voice of the masses. The fact is that in this as in other respects, the professions of the Justice party are at variance with its practice. The same callousness to the welfare of the public characterised its attitude towards the adjournment motion brought forward subsequently by an M. L. C. on the refusal of Government to close three shops in accordance with the recommendations of the Excise Licensing Board. The arguments advanced by the Hon. Minister for Excise in the course of the debate were highly reactionary. Because a shop had been in existence for 40 years, he saw no reason to close it. He even made the astounding statement that the people did not consider it as an evil at all. Unfortunately, the motion for adjournment was negatived by a large majority, and we cannot help thinking that the House missed another occasion for showing its resentment against the Government excise policy.

A Proposed Tax on Betting: When last year the Bombay Government proposed to meet the deficit in its revenue by a tax on totalizator betting, this immoral proposal of the Government naturally met with strong opposition at the hands of the Legislative Council and the public of Bombay. We are surprised to see a similar proposal made the other day in the Madras Legislative Council by a non-official and a Swarajist member to boot. Mr. S. Satyamurthi moved an amendment to the Select Committee Report on the Madras Local Authorities Entertainments Bill that the means of taxation by local bodies should also include the proceeds of betting and totalisators. We have on many occasions pointed out how, if we make betting a source of income, we not only legalise but also stabilise a growing evil which is the means of bringing ruin and destruction to many a poor family. The mover of the amendment and those who supported him argued that, for their part, they would like betting abolished, but that, so long as racing and betting continued, they were perfectly justified in making it a source of revenue. This sort of reasoning, however, will not stand a moment's scrutiny. If today, they make betting a source of income, tomorrow, they will find it difficult to abolish. The difficulties experienced in enforcing prohibition as the goal of Government excise policy, owing to the fact that the drink evil is made a source of revenue, amply bear this out. In all the Council, there was only one man who opposed the amendment on high moral grounds which is the only thing that ought to have weighed with the members in a matter of this kind. The only consolation is that the amendment was ruled out of order on a technical defect. We are sorry that when serious attempts should be made to abolish races and betting altogether, a proposal of this kind should have been made at all.

The Indian Medical Service: The action which the Government of India proposes to take of reserving 300 posts on the civil side for the European members of the I. M. S., has been justly commented in scathing terms by the Indian press. If this proposal were given effect to, it would not only put a bar to Indianisation but will also put on statute the principle of racial discrimination which has hitherto been accepted only as a convention, and make the I. M. S. a close preserve for Europeans. The Indian members of the Service, though theoretically equal in status now to the Europeans, are by no means treated in practice on an equal footing. For instance, they are excluded from special posts and research work in this country and they are denied the facilities for periodical studies abroad which their European colleagues enjoy. It is with great difficulty that a few Indians manage to get into the Service and even to this small number the full scope for the development of their talents and skill is scrupulously and deliberately denied. And if the present retrograde proposal of the Government is accepted, then the door of the Service will be completely shut in future to Indians. We are glad to see that Dr. U. Rama Rao has given notice of a resolution in the Council of State viewing with grave concern the proposed maintenance of racial distinctions in the I. M. S.

The Burma Act: The Assembly has passed by a large majority Mr. Amaranath Dutt's resolution asking the Government of India to recommend to His Majesty to veto the Burma Expulsion of Offenders Act recently passed by the Burma Legislative Council or in the alternative to bring in a Bill to repeal the said measure. The Government spokesmen, of course, took great pains to explain that the Bill was directed only against criminals, but Mr. Tomkinson let the cat out of the bag when he admitted that the schedule of crimes which the Expulsion Act dealt with did include Section 124 A. Thus, under this provision, Indians who are a little aggressive in their political activities can be expelled as undesirables. Lala Lajpat Rai denied that the Burmese Nationalists were in favour of this measure. He also pointed out the constitutional error involved in the measure. When the talk of a Federation for India is so much in the air, it is certainly not advisable that one province should be thus allowed to legislate against another. The fact that even Col. Crawford voted for the resolution, shows the unpopularity of the measure and the intensity of feeling against it.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1926.

THE WRONG REMEDY.

It is distressing to find the Government of India stiffening the criminal law when it ought to be promoting social legislation. Two important Bills touching the amendment of the criminal law in the land were discussed recently in the Legislative Assembly. The one, of course, was the official Bill introduced by Sir Alexander Muddiman, the Home Member, to restore discretion to courts to award rigorous imprisonment under Section 109 of the Criminal Procedure Code for failing to furnish security for keeping the peace. A similar Bill, it will be remembered, was brought by Sir Alexander Muddiman in September last year, but was thrown out by a majority of one. We are sorry that the Assembly in passing the Bill by a large majority has gone back on its previous verdict, for we do not think any new situation has now arisen to warrant the adoption of a proposal which was considered unnecessary a few months ago. The Home Member's arguments for bringing about this change in the law were based on two grounds. First, that under the provisions of the English Vagrancy Act, persons coming within the purview of Sec. 109 of the Criminal Procedure Code are much more severely dealt with than in India, and secondly, that as a result of the figures lately supplied to him by the Local Governments, it is found that more than 33 per cent. of the people in jail under this Section had previous convictions for offences including an element of theft. The Home Member instanced in particular the case of a man who, with thirteen previous convictions, is thoroughly enjoying simple imprisonment at Government expense. Realising the past history of this Section and the abuse to which it was put in connection with the Nagpur Flag Satyagraha when a large number of young men were hauled up by Sir Frank Sly's Government, the non-officials naturally put up a heavy opposition. Sir Henry Stanyon's defence that, if the Nagpur Satyagrahis had applied for a revision, their cases would have been properly considered by the High Court, is utterly indefensible, for as Mr. Pal pointed out, if the High Court were so minded, it could have exercised its power under Section 435 by calling for records of the Nagpur Satyagrahis. There is, however, a broader aspect from which the whole question should be looked at. As Dr. Gour pointed out, a preventive action should not be converted into a punitive action. Sec. 109 only contemplates preventive action, that is to say, it deals with cases where offences are about to be committed and not where they have actually been committed. When the administration of justice is being humanised in accordance with modern concepions all the world over, it is nothing but perverting the ends of justice to put offenders under this Section to hard labour. Mr. Pal and Lala Lajpat Rai also pointed out two other objections to the vesting of discretionary powers in the Magistrates in the present circumstances, viz., the combining of judicial and executive functions in the person of the same Magistrate and the deplorable conditions in jails as evidenced by the startling disclosures made before the Punjab Jails Enquiry Committee. The only relieving feature in the situation is that the Home Member has promised to circularise the Local Governments not to use this Section for political purposes, but it remains to be seen how far this will be translated into practice.

The other important Bill which the Assembly discussed and which has been postponed for another day, relates to the motion brought forward by a Swarajist member, Mr. Amaranath Dutt, to repeal the Bengal State Regulation III of 1818. The country has with one voice declared that this ordinance of the Executive under the cloak of which political agitation has been stifled and inconvenient political leaders have been clapped into jail without even the formality of a trial, should go. The Repressive Laws Committee also recommended its repeal, but Government is still clinging to its warning that, in view of the widespread disorders in the country, its repeal might be kept pending till a calmer atmosphere prevailed. The Government itself admitted that it is an old and archaic law, but was not prepared to repeal it unless the Legislative Assembly would give a helping hand to it to fashion a legislation more in conformity with modern conceptions and ideas. The only result of the debate was the discovery of a fine Government spokesman in the person of Mr. Donovan, the representative of Bengal and an Irishman who, as Lala Lajpat Rai said, has changed completely in arguments and mentality on becoming employed under the British. In his enthusiasm, he naturally overdid his part, as Sir Alexander Muddiman himself admitted, and summoned all the old arguments in the armoury of the Government in favour of the Regulation, the havoc caused by great conspiracies, the terrorisation of witnesses, the boon Regulation III had conferred upon the people etc. Not content with this, he then tried the game of playing one community against another which is often resorted to by officials in this country. He suggested that not even a single Mahomedan was arrested under the Bengal Regulation and that Mahomedans as a class were not opposed to the Regulation. He even went to the length of saying that the fact that Sir Abdur Rahim, the Law Member in the Bengal Government when the Regulation was applied, has been returned unopposed to the Legislative Council, vividly shows that the people acquiesce in the Regulation. But quickly came the rejoinder to all this sweeping assertion of the Hon. Member from some Mahomedan representatives themselves. The heaviest speeches on the non-official side came from Mr. Pal and Lala Lajpat Rai. We have no doubt that, when the Bill again comes up for discussion, it will be passed by a large majority in the Assembly and the present constitution of the Council of State will also ensure a safe passage through it. We hope Government, which does not tire of asking for signs of co-operation, will for its part respect the wishes of the people expressed through the Legislature and will not allow a lawless law to disfigure the Statute Book any longer.

HINDI RELIGIOUS POETRY.*

We have received a copy of the above book from the publisher who is a well-known poet of no small insight among the missionary circle and who is the author of several valuable and informatory religious works treating of all the three great religions in India. The book contains a collection of 301 religious hymns spreading over 200 pages, composed and sung in their devotional moments by about 38 Hindu sadhus like Kabir, Nanak, Mirabai, Tulsi Das, Ram Das and others whose names are on the lips of everyone in Northern India, especially of the peasantry. The authors have appended to the volume a separate list of the names of the saints with the number of hymns they composed in a chronological order and have added an alphabetical index and a chronological table of some of the allied poets, besides giving a brief biographical sketch bearing on the places of birth, activities and death of each saint at the beginning of the respective hymns composed by him. The poems are in original Hindi in Nagari characters, covering Hindi religious thoughts of all schools. A poetical translation in English by the authors, in apt words, of each stanza is given on the corresponding page. These hymns are very interesting to devotees of Bhakti School as they rouse religious emotion in them. In the hymns the composers have given free vent to all their thoughts and prayers and described pictures of their every-day life. The book gives a systematic arrangement of the religious hymns which were scattered in stray verses up to this time and is well worth the authors' labours of many years. The authors in their introduction point out traces of Mahomedan and Christian influences on some of the sadhus, which are inseparable, in our opinion, in the devotional path, as true divine love knows no man-made boundaries of caste, race, nationality or religion; the votaries are often so elevated in their hours of rapturous absorption as to transcend all limitations as will be evidenced by a reference to the Maharashtra Christian poet, Narayan Vaman Tilak, of recent times and to Sadhu Sundar Singh, both of whom have become well-known by their religious writings, songs and lives which are not less influenced by some school or other of Hindu and other religions with which they came in contact. We congratulate the publishers on getting up these hymns in a collective form thus making them available to all interested in religious poetry and we are sure the readers will find in this nicely printed volume, bound in cloth with gilt letters, a treasure of religious knowledge notwithstanding the rather high cost of the book

NEW YEAR HINDI PUBLICATIONS OF THE "CHAND", ALLAHABAD.

We have often noticed in these columns the excellent work done by the Hindi journal, Chand, in the cause of social reform by advocating the cause and elevating the position of women in this country in right and pure directions worthy of the ancient culture and civilisation of India, thus enabling them to take their place among the women of other nations of the world as chalked out by broadminded seers, assimilating the best of the Western culture and by doing away with all obstacles standing in the way of their emancipation. In the special number devoted to the cause of Indians leading an exiled life overseas pictures are presented of the various difficulties and disabilities under which they groan. The Pravasi number contains articles both in Hindi and English by eminent persons who have devoted a considerable part of their lives in studying the condition of Indians in various countries in a sympathetic manner. We reprint in our Overseas Supplement one important article from the pen of Mr. T. E. Inasi. The Chand has just completed its third year and has justified its existence as one of the best Hindi magazines which are not many in this country, considering the proportion of the Hindi-speaking population. We have received from the above office a series of the following Vidyabinod Granthamala books in Hindi which can be had from their office.

1. Manoranjak Kahaniang or tales of interest by Adhyapak Zahur Baksh Ji, price Rs. 1/-:— This is the name of one of the above series intended by the writer for impressing on the receptive minds of children who are naturally fond of hearing stories, the various deeds and problems of the adventurous lives of heroic personalities in a novel manner. It contains 17 narratives extending to about 200 pages written in chaste simple style to suit the tastes of boys and girls in their rudimentary educational stages and to help them in their studies. It will be found useful to beguile the idle hours of relaxation and at the same time promote knowledge.

2. Manohare Aitihasik Kahaniang :— This is another book of about 250 pages by the same author consisting of 75 small traditional stories and can be had at Rs. 1-4-0 a copy from the publishers. The stories can be easily understood by children and are useful to teach them to emulate the ideal qualities, such as humaneness, compassion, liberal-mindedness, philanthropy, power of endurance in adverse times etc., as embodied in the characters of great men and women who figured in history. There is nothing to be desired in get-up and style and the book is bound in an attractive form.

3. Grahaka Pher (Household Life) or the evil eyes of Saturn, price 8 annas :—This is a free translation by Mr. Shyam Sundar Dwivedi, M B.B. A., of the original Bengalee novel written by Jogendranath Chowdhury, M.A., the famous Bengali novelist, and is issued from the Chand office. The author in the work relates through the pathetic story of the unfortunate girl, Indumati, whose parents died one after another before she attained 9 with nobody to look after, how thorny and hazardous the lives of such Hindu orphans are, the day-to-day increase of terrible sufferings, both internal and external, one has to undergo on account of ill-mating, marriage before maturity and discretion. The book has a particular purpose to serve in that it helps to direct the lives of youths in this country in the right and responsible manner in order that they may not repent at leisure after marrying in haste. The book also points out the undue advantages taken by padres to ridicule and condemn outright the social conditions obtaining in Hindu society and create in them a desire to forsake their religion in their moments of weakness and disabilities. The book is divided into 18 chapters, each beginning with a choice quotation in English from the works and sayings of famous westerners like Shakespeare, Byron, Dryden, Pope, Thompson etc., which form the basis of the narration following. The book will be of interest to all reformers.

We have also received a copy of "Devdasan," a novel of social interest, translated by Mr. Akhauri Ganga Prasad from the original Bengalee written by the celebrated novelist, Saratchandra Chattopadhyaya, priced Rs. I, and a copy of "Mangala Prabhat" by Chandi Prasad of the Chand Office written in an advanced style covering 800 pages, priced Rs. 5, and printed in nice paper which for lack of space we are not in a position to review in detail.

RANDOM TAXATION.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Of the several baits thrown by British statesmen to our Indian politicians to appease their impotent fury and create internal feuds and factions, a noteworthy one is the imposition of the institutions of Local Self-Government in its nebulous forms of Municipalities and Local Boards. By frequent super-impositions and coercive interference on the part of the Government, causing impediments to civic amelioration and reconstruction, these institutions, designed for civic happiness, have lost all their potential utility. The Chief Executive Officer, the President and other important personages are thrust upon these so-called self-governing institutions thus making all real public utility and welfare impossible. We in Bombay are not wanting in instances when the alien Commissioner has flouted the opinion of the Corporation not once or twice but on several occasions. The fate of the Municipalities, sensitive to self-respect and national interest, is a matter of history well-known to all. At present they serve merely as an instrument for further taxation of the people without any responsibility to the Government.

The people are already taxed to their utmost capacity and any more imposition of a further taxation will only be an intolerable exaction from people, who are already groaning under heavy burdens. In this connection I may quote one instance. The Branch of the Singer Sewing Machine Company at Katni was assessed at Rs. 43 a year for Hasiyat and Conservancy Tax. This tax was suddenly raised in the year 1925 to Rs. 123 without adequate reason, though the business transacted in that year was less than that of the previous years. It goes without saying that taxation on commercial commodities is in effect an indirect levy on the people, and more especially in the case of this increased tax on Singer Sewing Machines. The Singer Company do their business mainly among the vast starving section of the populace This super-imposed tax will result in the increase of cost of production, which in its turn inevitably leads to an increase in the selling value of the machine, and thus ultimately the whole thing tells upon the poor customers, who have to purchase the machine to make both ends meet. The facilities offered by the Singer Sewing Machine Company by the system of monthly payments of Rs. 5 under Hire Purchase is really praiseworthy and highly beneficial and a boon to all. If I remember correctly, Mahatma Gandhi has spoken very highly of this system in his Young India. To those, whose earning capacity is low, the sewing machine as a cottage industry renders incalculable service. Hence to burden such a useful commodity with a super-tax is nothing but a defiance of public good. Will the Government look into this monstrous imposition of increased taxes on articles of necessity and save the poor folk from utter economic ruin? Or are they going to make the people believe that these Municipalities are intended only to levy further taxes without causing any blame to the Government?

Mahim, Bombay, 13th Feb. 1926.

INDIA'S POVERTY—A REMEDY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In one of your Notes in the November 14 issue of your magazine you say: "It is a notorious fact that commercialism is the dominant note of our present-day education. Education for education's sake, is not the goal." And in another Note in the same issue you say: "Every visitor to India has been struck with the appalling poverty of India's masses, and recently the subject has figured prominently in some of the American newspapers."

Now, it seems to me that, whatever it may be possible to do to improve either of the above situations temporarily, there is no permanent solution of the problems involved short of a complete change in the basis of our monetary unit.

Now, the world over, whether it represents gold or not, the monetary unit of each country represents something more than human work, and because of that fact it puts a price on natural resources. And the fact that a price can be charged for the natural resources makes people monopolize them, keeping others from using them free of charge. And that makes it so difficult for the masses to get a living, that the gaining of as large financial returns as possible becomes the dominating influence in well-nigh all spheres of activity.

The remedy is to make the monetary unit of each country represent one hour of adult human work. Then, nothing but human work would command a price; and the incentive to monopolize the natural resources would be gone. And the incentive to gain the respect of others by doing something to merit that respect would become the controlling incentive to human activities.

The above is something the people of all countries should consider with care.

GAMBLING IN THE NAME OF CHARITY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I was interested in what your correspondent, Mr. P.A. Krishnan, had to say on the subject of Lotteries in your issue of the 23rd. Jan. It seems from his remarks that he is informed concerning the various laws that may be brought to bear upon this evil. Probably most of us who have convictions on the subject do not know the remedy. But. Mr. Krishnan raises our hopes by stating: "They are not at all sanctioned by Government." And he refers to the fact that some of the lotteries make use of the word "Private." He seems to imply that there is something about the lottery being "private" that is intended to save the originators from responsibility before the law. All this is a mystery to me.

I wish to raise the point as to whether it might not be worth while giving full publicity to the exact status before the law of the type of lottery we are meeting in India today, whether "Private" or "Public" It may be that, if the public could be assured that these are not sanctioned by Government, a goodly per cent would not support them and possibly if the legal status of such lotteries could be generally known, there would be fewer individuals and organizations ready to promote them.

It seems to me, also, that there should be some public organization, a Committee of the All-India Social Conference or other proper body, that could be doing a wholesome bit of vigilance work in the matter of lotteries and to whom specific cases as they arise might be referred. This would help the publicity end of the programme and would afford the individual who receives books of tickets, unasked for, expert advice as to what might be done to help check the evil. If any law is actually being violated, a public Committee would be in a much better position to direct prosecutions than the individual victim. The S. P. C A in its work in preventing cruelty to animals, gives a clue as to how a public organization can help the individual in putting down various evils. Possibly the Indian Social Reformer can help in bringing some definite relief that will prove a great public benefit.

Ballia, U. P. Yours etc.,

WOMEN AND HINDUISM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have been a reader of your paper, with profit, for the last few years. There is a matter about which I would like if you would write an article in the Indian Social Reformer. I remember seeing some time ago a statement to the effect that when you were distressed by the corruptions of Hinduism and had thought of abandoning it, the two things that held you to it were its spirit of toleration and the kind of women it produced.

Now, in every meeting of social reformers (as for example see the Indian Social Reformer, p. 291, Jan. 9, 1926) it is always insisted that the condition of the women is one of the hindrances to progress. How can you reconcile these two? Is it possible that you are thinking only of outstanding women and not of women as a whole? And if it was the kind of women Hinduism has produced, that has bound you to it, would you not like to see perpetuated the conditions that have, in your opinion, made such women?

Banswara. Yours etc.,
January 27th 1926. B.C Oliver, M D.

[Hindu women are a hindrance to progress in the same sense as passenger coaches and goods wagons in a railway train are a hindrance to the progress of the locomotive engine. But the engine exists only to draw the train. Ed. I. S. R.]

EXTRA MARITAL RELATIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I agree with the views expressed by the Mahasabha in the above connection (vide the Indian Social Reformer dated the 30th January), but permit me to communicate a fact or two.

Round about Bulsar and Bilimora, a sect of people known as Kali Paraj inhabits. It is a custom amongst this class of people for the would-be-husband to stay with a would-be-wife at the latter's place of residence. During this stay, which you may, for more clearer understanding, call by the civilised name of courtship or engagement, sexual intercourse is not objected to and there are instances when the marriage has been celebrated after the girl or the young woman has conceived. The ages no doubt in these cases differ a good deal. If either the girl does not like her partner or the parents think that the would-be-son-in-law cannot maintain and support his wife, he is asked to leave the girl's residence and she is free to choose another partner.

I think the above information may interest you.

THE POSITION OF JAPANESE WOMEN.

Mrs Yuri Sugimura writes in the Young East, the Japanese Monthly Review of Buddhist Life and Thought:

In spite of the scores of years that have elapsed since the intercourse between the West and the East was opened, there is no gainsaying that there still remain many things of which the former does not possess exact knowledge and correct understanding of the latter and vice versa. But it seems to me that the West knows and understands the East less than the East does the West. At least it seems to me that we Japanese people know and understand Europeans and Americans better than they do us. For more than half a century past our best students have been learning from, and studying the West with might and main, with a spirit of humility and with the zeal of an admiring and devoted pupil. The West, however, did not think it worth while to study the East, rightly or wrongly considering that there was not much to be learned from it. It is only natural that except a few zealots, who seem to have taken up the study of the East more for the purpose of satisfying their thirst for knowledge than for gaining any practical benefit therefrom, the Western peoples as a whole are amazingly ignorant of the thought and idea, life, manners and customs of the Eastern peoples. The word Orient as used in Europe and America commonly meant what is called the Near East, anything to the east of the Ægean, the head of the Levant, and possibly the Red Sea, and Orientalists, men learned in languages, literature and religions of those regions, while Japan, China and probably India were until recently quite outside of the domain of Oriental studies.

It is a matter for congratulation that in recent years the Western nations have begun to show keen interest in things Eastern, particularly in things Far Eastern, and are endeavouring to have a full knowledge and correct understanding of the Chinese and Japanese peoples. Mutual knowledge and understanding beget mutual respect, affection and confidence and lead to peace and amity. If the West and the East come to know each other better, there will be less racial prejudice, less suspicion and less jealousy between them and less danger to international peace. So let each of us study more of the other until we know that we are all brothers and sisters, members of one great human family.

Western Ignorance of Japanese Women.

In spite of the increasing accumulation by the Western peoples in recent years of knowledge concerning the Far East, as I have already said, there still remain many things concerning us of which they are ignorant or ill-informed. One of these things is the position of the women in Japan. I do not know anything about our sisters in China, India and other Eastern countries, but I suppose that they too do not occupy such a low position and are not in such a sad plight as we women of Japan have persistently been represented by many Western writers, missionaries and travellers to occupy and to be in. In fact, to read accounts given of us by these Western observers makes us wonder whether our life is worth living. We have been represented by them as being little better than slaves and plaything of men, who are petted one day and cast away the next day as their whims change. According to them, we are creatures with little education having no high ideal and possessing no personal rights; we are superstitious, ignorant, morally weak, degraded, wretchedly unhappy at all times, permanently doomed to do menial work and have little or nothing to enjoy in life.

Men are apt to measure and judge things by their own standard. Hence arise errors in judgment and understanding. Western observers and critics seeing us through coloured glasses, judging us through race prejudice and measuring us by a standard of their own mode of living, manners, customs, and religion, take it for granted because we Japanese women live and behave ourselves in a way different from the way of Western women, that we are inferior, unhappy, degraded in morals and are being trodden down by our men. Particularly objectionable is the way of certain persons, who, carried away by professional zeal, purposely misrepresent us or tell half-truths about us. Such a sort of a man, I must say, is a missionary in a city in Japan, of perhaps one hundred thousand, who is quoted by Bishop Herbert Welch, of the M. E. Church for Japan and Korea, in one of his books, "That One Face," as having said: "I do not know one happy home in this whole city, except the few homes where Jesus Christ has gone." There is no doubt that the few Christian homes he refers to are happy, but I know many non-Christian Japanese homes, which are cleaner and happier in every respect than some so-called Christian homes I happen to know.

Happy Women of the East.

To my Western sisters, I may here honestly and positively state that I consider myself exceedingly fortunate that I was born in Japan and brought up in the pure and simple atmosphere of Eastern culture. In fact I sometimes think, with all drawbacks, we Eastern women may be happier than Western women. True, as Bishop Welch says in the book I have just referred to, "the women of the Orient are used to work. They have always worked, millions of them, as house servants and as farm hands." But are all the women of the Occident living in ease and comfort with no work to do? Are not there in the West millions of women who work in households, factories, shops, offices, as servants, operatives, saleswomen and typists? Granting that menial work is heavier and cheerless than the work of typists, saleswomen, telephone girls and similar business women, does it mean that the women who carry it on are unhappy? Happiness is a state of mind and does not necessarily accompany ease and comfort. Superficially business women, who receive good salaries, dress themselves in pretty clothes and occasionally have time to see movie pictures or hear jazz music, may appear happier than women who have to keep indoors all the time doing routine household work or who have to work in the fields. Who knows, however, the former with troubles of heart and mind, disappointment, jealousy, vanity, constraint and anxiety, are more unhappy than the latter, who are care-free, simple-minded, and being conscious of their indispensability are contented with their lot? Most Japanese women stay at home nearly all the time doing all sorts of household work, caring for children as well as for men. They never go to society, rarely go on pleasure trips, are not much interested in social works, much less in politics. They are old-fashioned, conservative, shy of strangers and apparently very weak. To the people of the West especially of America, where women are given much freedom and outwardly paid much respect, the plight of Japanese women may appear to be extremely sad. Nevertheless I may tell them that we are not unhappy. Far from being unhappy, we are very happy, probably, as I have already said, happier than our Western sisters.

The reason is quite simple. We are happy because we sacrifice ourselves in order to make our children and men happy. We do not like the drudgery work we are assigned to, and we would like to enjoy all the nice things and comforts we deny ourselves and give to them. But we gladly work and give, because we know that by doing so we are making them happy and that we are indispensable to them. Nothing gives a man such happiness as the consciousness that because of his self-sacrifice others are happy. In fact what makes us happiest women on earth is the sense that we are doing our duty, that because of the service we give them by denying ourselves pleasures and comforts our children grow up well and strong and our fathers, husbands and brothers can live happily and do their duties to our sovereign and country, to humanity without anxiety for their homes. As taught by Christ, we know that love is the root of happiness and that to love most is to obtain supreme happiness. Many men and women are known to have sacrificed even their lives for love. How easy it is for us to deny ourselves transient pleasures and small comforts for the sake of those we love!

Loved and Respected by All.

In return we Japanese women are loved by our children, by our fathers, husbands and brothers. As we are indispensable to them, we are made much of by them. As daughters we are caressed and petted by our fathers, as wives we are dearly loved by our husbands, as mistresses we are treated as queens of homes and as mothers we are respected and obeyed by our children. Physical pleasures and material comforts are of course enjoyable, but they are temporary, transient. They soon satiate and what were pleasures or comforts before cease to be so after a short time of enjoyment. Many women of the West, who have enjoyed every pleasure and comfort, seem to feel bored, weary of life and to have no happiness in the midst of all the luxuries their wealth has bought. Let such women do as we are doing. Let them think first of, and work for, the happiness of others before minding their own ease and comfort; in other words, let them live not for themselves but let them love and live for those whom they love; they will find that life is one stretch of joy.

Emancipation of Women.

Of late I hear very frequently of the emancipation of women. What does it mean? Does it mean the entry by women into professional fields, into business? Are women who have become doctors, authors, journalists and teachers, or who have taken up the professions of typists, secretaries and book-keepers emancipated women? Or does the participation in politics of women or the possession of franchise by them mean their emancipation? If these things I have just mentioned are signs of the emancipation of women, it seems to me, that it means taking by women of work hitherto exclusively done by men. If so, the emancipation of woman is rapidly taking place in Japan, especially in cities, and if this is a sign of the progress of civilization, as it seems to be considered so in the West, Japan has no reason to feel ashamed. But is this emancipation of women, this replacing of men by women, conducive to the happiness of mankind, particularly of women? To a woman like myself who has been brought up in the traditional Oriental way, it seems that it is destructive of the law of nature, and if fully realized, instead of promoting our happiness it will greatly disturb, if not completely destroy it. It goes without saying that men and women are equals, but equality does not mean that women should take the place of men and vice versa. Nature has made men and women different in sex or physical constitution. Is it then strange or abnormal that for many centuries past men and women should have occupied, as they did, different positions in society and pursued different work? It is the result of evolution and natural selection. In other words, it is a phenomenon of the great law of nature. Now, if the emancipation of women is anything like what I understand to be, it is a movement going contrary to the fundamental principle of the universe. Any such movement is certain to end in disaster. I venture to say that this feminist movement was started by egoistic and shallow-minded women under the mistaken idea that men monopolize all privileges and life's good things. They had some weak-minded men, who wanted to curry favour with women, to support and encourage them in their revolt against men and the movement has been spreading to the Far East. In Japan it has been taken up by a few women with a smattering of Western civilization. As is usual with such sort of people, they make a great noise and so their agitation seems to be rapidly gaining ground. In reality, however, I am glad to say practically all the women of Japan have no sympathy with them As a matter of fact, many Japanese women are engaged in various professions, earning decent salaries. But most of them are doing so for the purpose of saving money for marriages or of helping their aged parents or younger brothers or sisters. Only a few remain single to the last and it is generally such unhappy women who are feminists crying for the emancipation of women.

Marriage in East and West.

Speaking of marriages, Western observers and critics often find fault with the Oriental custom which does not permit the free mingling of unmarried young people of the two sexes and the engagement of a young man with a young woman by themselves. It is true that marriage is generally arranged by parents, courtship being practically unknown in the East. But it is a question whether the Western way of allowing young men and women to have social intercourse and to choose their life's companions by themselves is really wise? It is claimed that marriage in the West is the climax of love between man and woman. If so, why are there in the West so many marriages which end in failure and even in tragedy? It seems to me that the Western way of leaving choice of husband or wife to the free will of young man or woman is very hazardous Young people do not possess much experience and knowledge of life and are apt to act on impulses without deep thinking. In many cases they mistake passion for love and on the impulse of passion they bind themselves with the tie of matrimony, thinking that they really love the other party. Passion soon cools down and they find that they have committed a blunder of life. This seems to explain the origin of the well-known western adage, "Marry in haste and repent at leisure," the truth of which is so often proved by facts in the West

In the Far East, in Japan in particular, it is older and experienced men and women who make choice for their sons and daughters of their future partners for life. Before two families enter into matrimonial relations, one with another, parents and senior members of each of the families make a full investigation into the social status, lineage, usage and so forth of the other as well as into the personal character, abilities, temperament, taste and health of the young man or woman concerned and only when they are satisfied that all is right, the young people are allowed to see each other, and if they are willing to become man and wife, their marriage is arranged. In former times it was not rare that young men and women were obliged to marry against their will in consideration of the interest of their families. Such marriages, however, are now very rare, the final decision being left to the free will of the young people concerned. Marriages arranged in such a way are generally successful and the homes thus set up are as happy as any in the West. It seems to me that of the two ways of arranging marriage ours is better, wiser, at least less hazardous than the Western. But this is a matter of difference of custom; it is not right for the East to disparage the West for the custom it follows, just as it is wrong for the West to find fault with the East for sticking to its usage.

As a woman of Japan, I have still many things I want to say to the people, particularly to my sisters, of the West and the East. As, however, I have written already too long, I lay down my pen, reserving them for a future issue of this journal.

SUPPLEMENT

TO

The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 12 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1926. Price One Anna

THE SOUTH AFRICAN INDIAN POSITION.

Since we wrote last, the two pieces of anti-Indian legislation which have been hanging over the heads of the South African Indians, threaten to become an accomplished fact. The Mines and Works Amendment Bill, popularly known as the Colour Bar Bill, which restricts the employment of Asiatics and Native Africans in certain occupations and which will have the effect of throwing thousands of Indians out of employment, has already passed the third reading, while the Anti-Asiatic Bill which seeks to segregate Indians in certain reserved areas, thus making their lives miserable and forcing them to leave the country, has already passed the first reading. The Colour Bar Bill, it will be remembered, was rejected last year by the South African Senate owing to the stout opposition of General Smuts. Whether it will share a similar fate this time also remains to be seen. That the Whites are determined to carry this legislation through at any cost is evidenced by the lengths to which they are prepared to go. The White press and responsible Ministers are repudiating even solemn undertakings which they have entered into and are treating them as nothing more than mere scraps of paper. In an interview to the Cape Times, Mr. Patrick Duncan, the Minister of Interior in General Smuts's Government, declared that no agreement was ever made with Indians that their rights would never be subject to any further restriction and that the present legislation is not a breach of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement as is often alleged. The Cape Times, commenting upon this, also echoes that General Smuts did not pledge the South African Legislature for all time not to alter the existing laws. The Smuts-Gandhi Agreement was arrived at as the result of the famous Passive Resistance Struggle which Indians in South Africa, under the gallant leadership of Mahatma Gandhi, had carried on for eight long years. As Mahatma Gandhi points out in a statement which we publish elsewhere, it is not to be supposed that after eight years of solid suffering, Indian settlers would be satisfied with an arrangement that might lead not to further amelioration of their status, but to further degradation, ultimately resulting in extinction. In this connection, we cannot do better than quote the Times of India, a paper certainly not unfriendly to the Whites:

To anybody with a spark of fair-mindedness the contemplated "colour" legislation is not only of itself a disgraceful act of Government but is also a breach of solemn undertakings. Mr. Duncan denies that the Smuts-Gandhi agreement has been in any way violated. Well, it is easy to prove it. The official (and mutually agreeable) interpretation of the Smuts-Gandhi agreement is "that the vested interests of those Indians who were then (in 1914, at the time the agreement was made) living and trading in townships, whether in contravention of the law or not, should be respected." The right to earn a living by any skill one naturally possesses or may have acquired may surely be regarded with propriety as a "vested right." Since the Mines and Works Bill expressly deprives Indians, simply because they are Indians, of a right to earn their living in specified occupations, it is surely no exaggeration to say that the present legislation is a gross breach of a solemn undertaking.

The Anti-Asiatic Bill is so heinous in its conception that it has provoked hostile comments even from the South African press. Even the Cape Times which has of late acquired much notoriety by its persistent vilifying propaganda against the Abdur Rahman Deputation, is forced to shed crocodile tears. It confesses to having read it with dismay and apprehension and characterises the procedure as utterly savage and wanton and without a vestige of jurisdiction. The Cape Argus, after regretting the refusal of Government to concur in the proposal for a Round Table Conference, says "In these days, no Government can afford to assume a purely dictatorial attitude. It must have not only right but reason on its side, or its prestige will inevitably suffer". The Natal Advertiser denounces the measure as cruel and unjust and impolitic from the Imperial view-point. There is not only a section of the press, but also a number of high-minded men like the Bishop of Pretoria who realise that, after all, there is a limit even to white racial arrogance. In the Assembly Mr. Alexander said that he opposed the Bill on the ground that it proceeded on racial and class lines and that a reasonable request from a sister member of the League of Nations for a Round Table Conference had been refused. The Bishop of Natal, preaching at St. Paul's, expressed his anxiety as to whether South Africa, without breaking her pledged word, could legislate on the lines proposed. India, he said, had kept, more than kept, her part of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement.

Meanwhile, a new clause introduced in the Bill is hailed by the White press as a great concession to Indian interests. Far from improving the old Bill, it only makes matters worse. The concession amounts to this,

that Indians are prohibited from hiring or renewing the lease of immoveable property for a period exceeding five years. It is thus clear that it is the intention of the Legislature to prohibit Indians from owning land anywhere in the country at the end of five years, though Government lawyers are at great pains to explain that hiring or leasing of immoveable property does not terminate in five years but can continue in periods of five years. Again, whereas the old Bill left the Cape Province free to apply or not its provisions, the new clause makes its application compulsory even in that province where Indians are treated better than in any other part of the Union. Anyway, it does not offer any material concession in the principles of the Bill which the Government of India with even a spark of self-respect can accept as a basis for compromise. A Reuter's message said the other day that the Anti-Asiatic Bill would be referred to a Select Committee before the second reading and a statement to that effect has also been made by Government in both the Houses of the Legislature. Though the Government of India Deputation will be heard on the principles of the Bill, it is highly improbable that any material change will be made at all in the provisions of the Bill by the present South African Union Government. This, then, is the situation in South Africa. The question that arises now is this: what is the Government of India doing in the face of all this? True, the Government of India is making representations to South Africa on the intensity of feeling in this country against the proposed legislation. It has also taken the Assembly into its confidence by private discussions with Pandit Motilal and other leaders. But we are afraid that, unless the Government of India brings pressure to bear on the South African Government from higher quarters, it will not be deterred from pursuing its inequitable legislation.

THE LIFE OF EAST INDIANS ON A SUGAR PLANTATION IN BRITISH GUIANA.

Mr. T. E. Inasi writes in the Chand, the Hindi Magazine, Allahabad:—

The first thing to attract a visitor's attention in a Sugar Plantation in British Guiana is the inadequate accommodation provided for the Female East Indians residing in that Plantation. The Sugar Plantations are owned by companies, most of the share-holders and Directors are Europeans. The Managers and Overseers are of European descent. They live in beautiful mansions, constructed on modern sanitary lines, with all necessary accommodations and conveniences, including recreation grounds; but the East Indians (called coolies) live in ranges of varying dimensions, approximately about 50 by 14 sq. ft. in area, with little or no openings for ventilation. These ranges or logies are divided up into rooms of about 120 sq. ft. in area. These have mud-floors, very few are half-wood and half-mud. These rooms are cleaned and plastered with a mixture of cow-dung and earth. Each has a window about 3 by 2½ sq. feet and a door about 21 sq. ft. in area. The openings are being closed at night for one or two obvious reasons, and thus, fresh air is entirely shut out. The rooms more or less resemble the stalls in a stable.

A family of males and females of about 5 or 6, generally occupies one of these rooms; a part-off made of paper, or any thin piece of cloth (from the family's expense) divides the room in two compartments. Privacy is entirely out of the question. There is no space for that. During the wet-seasons these rooms are damp and become very cold. Many of the East Indians who can't afford to buy a coat are bound by privation to spread a few bags on the mud-floor and rest themselves until the morning. This kind of rest is, I am quite sure, detrimental to the East Indian women especially during pregnancy and after child-birth. In these periods little or no nourishment is given to the woman, because the husband's wages are too small, and nothing can be saved out of them to meet up the needs. The Planters make no provision whatever, neither do they care a straw for what might be the consequence. Whenever the critical stage is reached, the female East Indians are admitted in the hospitals to be attended to by unsympathetic Negro mid-wives and nurses, who very often use physical force as part of their attendance. It might be well to mention that the surroundings of the ranges are insanitary, and because of this, the East Indian mothers and children are subject to a disease called Ankylostomiasis which is prevalent in British Guiana; and after a few months the whole community becomes anæmic, and most families are doomed, physically wrecked. After child-birth, say about 5 or 6 months, the East Indian women are called upon to work. If they disobey, a part of their husbands' wages is deducted for house-rent. Children above 8 years of age are compelled by the Plantation authorities to work in the "creole gang" for 6 days a week, beginning from 7 a. m. and close at 5 or 6 p. m., having an interval of one hour for breakfast. These children receive no education, and for this reason they become slaves to the Sugar Planters. Exploitation of child-labour has become a Planter's pleasure, and I am mentioning it without hesitation that that is one of the many forms of a cheap labour scheme. During the grinding periods, East Indian women are made to pick out water canes from the punt-trenches, they have to be in the water for several hours, returning home in the evening to sleep on the cold mud-floors. If at any time they refuse to do this kind of work, harsh treatment is meted out to them. In the public hospitals, railway trains, steamers and in other Government Departments insult to an East Indian is a common occurrence. The regular staff of these Departments is composed of Negroes. For some reason or other a Negro has a touch of hatred for an East Indian. It sometimes happens that a Negro would pull East Indians out of their seats in any of the Railway carriages or steamers and if the latter should resist, the Negro would compliment them with a few blows. On many occasions the East Indians generally hold their peace. If this matter is reported, the East Indians get no satisfaction. The Government controls these Departments, and it is to be regretted that it is blind to such treatment.

"The next thing I shall like to say something about, is the awkward system of Education in British Guiana; only the well-to-do East Indian parents can afford to educate thdir children in a secondary school by paying a monthly fee of a few dollars. In the elementary schools, there is no compulsory education for the East Indian girls; there is for the boys up to the age of 14. The Government allows the Planters to do as they please. The poorer classes of East Indians have not got the ghost of a chance to receive any kind of education in any of the Vernaculars. Sewing and domestic economy are unknown as subjects in schools for girls in this part of the British Empire. The only occupation for the East Indian children is the cleaning and manuring of the sugar-canes. Most of our grown-up girls are untrained; thus it becomes difficult for them to meet the future requirements of their homes, because their time and energy are wasted in the interests of the Sugar Planter.

The Immigration Department of British Guiana is a mere tool in the hands of the Planters. This Department is suspected of being a party to the oppression against the East Indians. In my opinion, there is no necessity for this Department to function any longer; the sooner it is got rid of the better would the East Indian's interests be represented. But before coming to a close, I would like to mention that the above are from my personal experience, and I have been an eye-witness to the many happenings. I grew up in a Sugar Plantation, and lived with my parents in a room in one of the very ranges. I received my education in the midst of wants, and by dint of hard labour, my parents helped me out of the mire. I extricated myself from the grip of theSugar Planters through the influence of the Canadian Mission in British Guiana, and to this Mission, especially to the Rev. Dr. J. B. Cropper, I give my thanks.

The Government has neglected to further education among the female East Indian children in the past, but I hope that, in the future, it will give some thought to remedy the evils of the present backward system of education by spending money in providing technical along with general education for the East Indians in a way which will mould them for the future man and womanhoods, and will help them to keep up the dignity of their race and encourage them to become the worthy citizens of Greater India.

HOW THE FRANCHISE WAS SECURED FOR INDIANS IN AUSTRALIA.

The Delhi correspondentof the Bombay Chronicle in the course of a communication to that paper recently unfolded the interesting history behind the recent grant of Federal Vote to Indians in Australia which was wrongly advertised in Anglo-Indian quarters as solely the result of the pledge of the Australian Prime Minister at the Imperial Conference. That nothing is further from truth was gathered by him from Mr. P. B. Bateman, a member of the Bar in Australia, who was on a visit to Dehi recently and who was instrumental in forcing the Australian Goverament to grant the Federal Vote to Indian residents. About 10 or 12 years ago Mr. Hughes who was the then Prime Minister of Australia, promised at the Imperial Conference in England that he would restore the vote (that had been taken away) to Indian residents in Australia. Mr. Bruce, the present Prime Minister of Australia, some years ago made a similar promise when Mr. Sastri visited Australia three years ago. He was also promised franchise. But these promises remained nothing more than pious declarations, and not the slightest move was made to restore the vote to the Indians. After Mr. Sastri's return from his Dominion tour, Mr. Bateman being a lawyer looked into the legal aspect of the whole business and in his opinion the Electoral Act which had been passed in 1902 and by which the franchise had been taken away from the Indians was unconstitutional. Mr. Bateman decided to get hold of some Indian residents in Australia to institute test proceedings against the Commonwealth Government. After a great deal of work and considerable delay entailed thereby he got hold of an Indian named Mitta Bullosh who consented to bring in the proceedings. The proceedings were started and carried on in accordance with the Commonwealth Ordinances before a Police Magistrate, although a very strong bar was retained. Mr. Bateman fought the matter out himself and succeeded in getting an order that the name of Mitta Bullosh should be placed upon the rolls, thereby causing a stir in the Commonwealth. The Federal Government immediately appealed against this order to the High Court of Australia. It might be mentioned that the bar of Australia practically laughed at Mr. Bateman's attitude, but two or three days before the matter was to be heard by the High Court, the Federal Crown Solicitor waited upon Mr. Bateman and announced that the appeal proceedings were going to be withdrawn. Mr. Bateman, of course, expressed astonishment and at the same time he pointed out that his purpose was more than merely securing the vote for the particular Indian. He desired the Federal Government to give him an undertaking that the right of franchise to Indians would be acknowledged later on. He obtained a letter to this effect and then waited upon the Crown Solicitor and pointed out that, as two of the States, namely, Western Australia and Queensland did not grant the State rights, Indian residents there could not, therefore, obtain those federal rights. The Crown Solicitor admitted this and a trouble arose as to the best method to overcome the difficulty.

Finally, Mr. Bateman drew up a Bill consisting of a few lines which enabled Government to get out of the mess into which it had got. The Prime Minister promised to make the Bill a Government one. It was introduced in the Senate. M. Bateman had to overcome the strong opposition of the Labour Party and had to do a good deal of lobbying day and night and finally obtained an agreement from the Labour Party that it would not oppose the Bill. It consequently went through the Senate. It had then to be dealt with by the House of Representatives. Here again Mr. Bateman did a similar amount of lobbying and the Bill was finally passed and became law.

It will thus be seen that the contention of one or two Anglo-Indian papers that the Federal Ministry was honouring a pledge given at the Imperial Conference is incorrect. No move whatever would have been made had it not been for Mr. Bateman's ingenuity in discovering the constitutional flaw and successfully fighting a test case and to him is, therefore, due the credit for this achievement and for his selfless labours on behalf of the Indians.

Mahatma Gandhi on Satyagraha in South Africa: In the latest number of the Young India, Mahatma Gandhi advises Indians in South Africa to await the result of the negotiations of the Government of India with the Union Government and adds that, when they have explored and tried every other available channel and failed to find a way out, the case for Satyagraha is complete.

MAHATMA GANDHI ON THE SMUTS-GANDHI AGREEMENT.

Mahatma Gandhi has made the following statement regarding the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement of 1914:—

Mr. Andrews has sent me a cable inviting me to make a statement on the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement of 1914, as it has given rise to a controversy in South Africa. I observe too that two South African divines have supported my contention.

Let it be remembered that the Agreement is a matter of record. It closed a struggle that had lasted for close on eight years, and covered many intermediate and interlocutory arrangements and agreements. Let it be also noted that the Government of India was not unconcerned with the Agreement. It supplemented the Indian Relief Measure that was almost simultaneously passed. As is common in all such arrangements, correspondence between parties is previously seen and approved by them. So was this correspondence mutually seen and accepted. My letter to General Smuts refers to the disabilities not covered by the Relief Act and expresses the hope that even those disabilities which were not then dealt with would be removed in course of time.

It is not to be supposed that after eight years of solid suffering, Indian settlers were satisfied with an arrangement that might lead not to further amelioration of their status but to their further degradation, ultimately resulting in extinction. But I do not wish to labour the point. There is the Indian offer—the Congress offer—to go to arbitration on the point. Let the Government of India ascertain for themselves the meaning of the Agreement and invite the Union Government to accept the principle of arbitration.

It is not for the first time that the South African Ministers have repudiated the arrangements and promises made by themselves. They repudiated the promises made to Mr. Gokhale about the £3 tax which, as a point of honour, was added to the objects of the Passive Resistance struggle and which ultimately the Union Government had to repeal. So it is the old trick now repeated. It is a matter of honour for India to insist upon the fulfilment of the Agreement of 1914.

South African Indian Deputation: Messrs. James Godfrey, V. S. C. Pather, A. H. Mirza and Amoo Bayat, members of the South African Deputation left for South Africa by the S. S. "Khandalla" on the 17th instant on the termination of their work in India. The other members of the Deputation, including Dr. Abdur Rahman, the leader, will remain in Delhi in order to render such assistance and information to the Indian leaders as may be necessary for a thorough grasp and understanding of the position when the debate takes place in the Assembly.

Protests Against S. African Legislation: Calcutta held a large non-party demonstration at the Town Hall on the 3rd instant to register her protest against the Class Areas Bill. Every community and every political party was represented. The Lord Bishop of Calcutta presided. Sir Abdur Rahim represented the Mahomedans while Mr F. B. James represented the Calcutta Europeans. All the speeches emphasised the fact that the Bill was a breach of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement of 1914 and that no occasion had arisen for the violation of what Mr. Andrews has well described as a "gentleman's agreement." Delhi also held a well-attended meeting at which Maulana Mahomed Ali, Pandit Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai participated to record her emphatic protest against the Colour Bar Bill recently passed by the South African Assembly.

Delhi's Reply to South Africa: The Delhi Municipal Committee after considerable discussion passed on the 3rd inst. unanimously Mr. Asaf Ali's resolution: "That in view of threatened anti-Indian legislation in South Africa, this Committee hopes that the Imperial Government will do all in its power to prevent materialisation of threat and should efforts of Imperial Government be infructuous, this Committee places on record its emphatic resolve to secure in as effectual a manner as possible the exclusion of non-Indian South African subjects from all municipal rights and privileges". The President of the Committee, Mr. Johnston, Deputy Commissioner, suggested deletion of the last part of the resolution, but as members wished to retain it he allowed the resolution to be passed unanimously.

Madras Governor Disallows Adjournment Motion on South Africa: The adjournment motion to be moved by Mr. S. Satyamurthi on the 8th inst. regarding the South African question in the Madras Legislative Council was disallowed by His Excellency the Governor. It was in the following terms: "That the business of the House be adjourned to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, viz., the critical position of Indians in South Africa brought about by the passing of the Colour Bar Bill and by the progress of the Class Areas Reservation, Immigration and Registration Bill with a view to the local Government representing to the Government of India the urgent and imperative need of their bringing pressure to bear on the South African Government to agree to a Round Table Conference before these Bills are proceeded with further and failing which to urge the Government of Great Britain to advise His Majesty the King to veto the Bills when they are finally passed."

Sir Hubert Carr on S. African Indians: Referring to the treatment of Indians in South Africa at the European Association's meeting held in Calcutta on the 9th instant, Sir Hubert Carr observed that all shades of opinion were united in the keenest resentment against the latest legislation by the South African Government. Indeed, he said, the Asiatic Bill was of a character which impelled those who spent their days in India to take steps to try and rectify the position. Their sympathy must be with their Indian friends in the struggle against the legislation under which they laboured in South Africa. It was no easy task for their Indian friends to be patient under that condition, but it was useless to attempt retaliation. The only course open to them was to press the Home Government to second the efforts of the Government of India in awakening more considerate spirit in the South African Government.

I. I. C Association's Wire to the Viceroy: The Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association has addressed the following telegram to the Viceroy: "The Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association begs to call your Excellency's attention to the fact that the Colour Bar Bill just passed in the South African Assembly is the first of its kind and is expressly directed against non-white peoples, and, as such, as your Excellency observed while opening the Legislative Assembly, is fundamentally inconsistent with the principles which bind the Empire together. The Council of the Association, therefore, considers this to be the appropriate occasion for the exercise of the power of veto vested in His Imperial Majesty and earnestly beseeches your Excellency to be pleased to urge His Majesty's Government to take necessary steps to prevent this catastrophe dangerous alike to the Indians in South Africa and to the integrity of the Empire."

Boycott of Natal Coal: The Bombay Council which opens on Feb. 22nd has in its list of agenda a resolution to be moved by Mr. Lalji Naranji urging the Government to issue instructions to all concerns managed by them not to use the Natal or the South African coal.

Natal Ordinance: A message from Durban says that the Bill validating the Natal Ordinance 7 of 1923 has passed all stages in the Assembly and the Senate and is awaiting the Royal Assent.

IS WAR INEVITABLE?

The Contemporary Review for November 25th 1925 has a well-written article on "Combative Instinct and Abolition of War" of which the following is a summary:

In discussions on the possibility of abolishing war, some one will say that the combative instinct in man will render wars inevitable and some one else will reply that the instinct can be sublimated and made to find a natural vent in games and allied activities. Popular notions about instincts are the results of generalisations based on the critical examination of one or two particular instincts. For example, the instinct of hunger is a constantly active process that keeps accumulating energy which must be discharged periodically in a specific activity. Similarly as regards the sex instinct, which can be satisfied directly or indirectly through "Sublimation." But these considerations cannot apply to all instincts. [Even as regards "Sublimation," very often, the more natural explanation will be to say that, though certain instincts have certain energies attached to them, there is also a large amount of general, undistributed psychic energy which, if blocked along the line of one instinct, flows the more strongly towards activities connected with other instincts.] Fear or combativeness is not constantly active but needs external circumstances to evoke it, so that, if the necessary object is absent, the instinct is absent. In fact it will be a disadvantage to have this class of instincts working constantly. For example, if, apart from the presence of an enemy, a species of animals were impelled to fly or fight periodically, this will be positively harmful to them. To say then that the combative instinct wants a periodical out-let is as bad as to say that, because man has the instinct of fear, he must, every now and then, be scared into fright. The fewer the occasions for such instincts the less readily are they evoked.

On this view games cannot offer an out-let for the combative instinct. On the other hand, they are a discipline for its repression. The specific emotion of the instinct is rage and aim, the destruction or disabling of the opponent. To the extent that the instinct intrudes into games, these become dirty and unsportsmanlike. The ruling motive in games is the love of glory finding the end in seeking the admiration rather than the fear or hatred of the opponent.

The fallacy that games are a substitute for war depends on the general observation that games are an out-let for pent-up energy and involve contests. But the emotional quality of the satisfaction is entirely different. The good health of which the energy is a sign is generally attended by good temper and is free from the irritability devoting combativeness. The man of boundless energy is less likely to be quarrelsome than one of less vitality. Secondly, the same surplus energy can find other out-lets for energies of body and mind which the conditions of modern life do not always give in times of peace, but the energy so released is of a general sort not specifically attached to any one instinct

The justice of this conclusion is seen in the fact that races most prone to fight are not the most energetic. The comparison here is not efficiency in war but readiness to fight without compelling occasion. The readiness to draw knife does not prove the existence of the courage and vitality connected with war.

We must be careful not to confuse combativeness with persistence in the face of obstacles. Witness ants dragging home food. The cause of the confusion is the incurable poetry of human speech. An obstacle is not necessarily an enemy. One may as well connect the love of a man for potatoes with the sex instinct.

Another consideration is this. The combative instinct has a peculiar power of calling up reserve energy at the right moment. In anger we are abnormally strong. The appearance of anger upon slight cause is a proof that the ordinary supply of energy is not enough to overcome the opposition. An allied fact is the case with which a man secretly feeling himself inferior in any direction gets angry. It is clear from all this that the usual argument about war being inevitable is due to loose thinking The combative instinct is not normally active unless it is provoked.

It may be argued that, since it is practically impossible to avoid occasions for provocation, it is useless to hope for a cessation of wars. But the stimulation of the instinct need not necessarily result in war. The instinct shows itself to be one of the most amenable to control. Firstly were such control lacking all wars will result in wholesale destruction of women, children and works of art. Secondly, in human history, victory has been to the race that has its combativeness well in hand. In actual war, the most valuable courage is the cool sort that does not need the support of anger. Unless the combative instinct is capable of severe restraint, no nation can have the unity which is strength.

Here again we must carefully distinguish between fighting tradition and a fighting instinct. The tradition affects the warrior caste or class whereas the instinct betrays its presence in all classes alike. The tradition is found in closer alliance with pride and love of glory than with sheer combativeness. It may also be noted that the tradition is confined to the male sex though the combative instinct is very strong in the femal sex when a mother has to guard her young. This and the combative instinct of the male for possession of the female still persist but, partly by change of taste, partly by law, civilisation has succeeded in securing that these instincts do not eventuate in violence on a large scale. There is also this consideration that, when private quarrels lead to blows, it is generally because they proceed to extremities too rapidly for deliberation, whereas in national disputes there is more time and incentive to think. It will follow that corporate combativeness is more amenable to control. Wars, therefore, are not due to the spontaneous pursuit of the nations' combative instinct, but the deliberate stimulation of it by Governments. Mob violence may now and then get out of hand for a short time, but there is no such thing as an organised Government being dragged into war against its will. The conclusion then is that the combative instinct is not so much to blame as love of power, unreasoning fear—real or pretended—of aggression on the part of others or the economic urge. In the last analysis it is such self-regarding instincts that are the real cause.

NEW MORALITY*

I do not know who used this phrase first but I came across it first in one of Ellen Key's books; so it is not original though very striking and, I fear, more striking than precise. At the outset, I want also to express the misgivings I have in mind while writing this short paper: there may be some amongst you to whom my ideas may not appear quite moral. In her book "Love and Marriage", Ellen Key has rightly said that, "only the profoundly moral can discover the dividing line, sharp as the edge of a sword, between new morality and old immorality"; for there is one very glaring characteristic of new morality, which makes it liable to be so confused even by well-meaning persons; it is this: new morality is subversive of the basis of conventional morality. How this is so I will try to make clear in what follows:—

Let us see what things are at the basis of the conventional morality. It is very significant that the average man at a certain stage of his growth, finds that he considers many things immoral without knowing clearly why. Even very primitive men have got this sense of sin. This phenomenon has led the early psychologists to think that there is a special faculty in man, the moral faculty, which can discern the bad from the good. Even the modern man has not completely got over this obsession of sin. Though he tries to give reasons for his moral judgments, those reasons are merely afterthoughts: the judgments were in his mind before he thought of justifying them. Anybody can verify this with reference to our ideas about sexual morality; the most emancipated amongst us have got in some corner of our minds inbred moral notions on the matter. Thus one important thing at the back of conventional morality is this absolutism: certain things are immoral, because they are inherently immoral. There are other factors beside this, as, for example, the sanctions of religion; conventional morality thus resolves itself mainly into a number of taboos, conventions and religious beliefs. It is this body of moral sanctions which has made possible the stability of all societies that have made any considerable progress in civilization; for otherwise, men would have destroyed each other and the whole social structure, by giving free play to their blind egoistic impulses, as they had not sufficient knowledge to guide their actions in the safe path of enlightened self-interest

But with the assertion of supremacy of the rationalistic outlook in [illegible] spheres of thought, specially after the great revolution in the thought-world brought about by the theory of evolution, men began to doubt, what has been called before, the absolutism in the ethical field. It was soon found out that the taboos, conventions and beliefs differed widely in different countries and different times We now find that the upper strata of all civilized societies are fairly free from this kind of conventional morality, though the masses are still chiefly influenced by it. The upper strata have, however, substituted rationalistic formulas for the older ones. Positivism, utilitarianism, hedonism, etc., are the results of this tendency. With the help of reason and intellect they hold up single patterns to be rigorously followed by life: instead of the dogmas of faith which had been reigning till then, they have substituted dogmas of the intellect, such as the "greatest good of the greatest number", etc Many of the older dogmas were also affiliated under some of these later intellectual formulas Nationalism and Patriotism, based as they were on the powerful herd-instincts and instincts of pugnacity or fighting, had to be accepted as parts of the moral scheme; not only there, but in several other cases, it was found that reason was quite unequal to the task of giving sanctions unaided for a harmonious moral life.

Recent advances in the field of psychology, made by the aid of experiments of a body of medical men, headed by Freud and Jung, have thrown a flood of light on deeper problems of ethics also. It has been conclusively shown by these thinkers what a great part our unconscious desires and wishes play in life, and how much fraught with danger is any course of action which ignores them. But it may be said: "If the desires and wishes are unconscious, how can we take account of them?" The chief contribution of Freud and the Psycho-analytic school of thinkers lies just here, in so far as it has practical value for our ethical life: not only is it demonstrated that the power of the unconscious wishes is very great, but also the way to bring these wishes out into the light of consciousness has been discovered by these thinkers.

Another school of psychologists, known as the Behaviouristic school has also contributed a great deal to revolutionise our ethical outlook. The eminent psychologist, Prof. McDougall, has been the first in the field to classify and formulate scientifically the different instincts which constitute the elements of our volitional life, and to trace the growth of higher morality from those animal instincts.

These advances of knowledge in different fields have revolutionised the ethical outlook of mankind so completely that we now speak of a new morality, which is not based on any static code of social or religious sanctions nor do we look up to any formula of the intellect, equally static, for guidance. New morality being an advance on the morality of the rationalistic thinkers, does not reject reason, but accepts it as the supreme instrument in the hand of man to serve life's purposes. But the very knowledge which reason gives him is the knowledge that the elements of his life are his own conscious and unconscious wishes, tendencies in the individual which have to be fulfilled in greater and greater degree according to his growing knowledge. Thus, the chief ethical problem for man is to know and to realise the depths of his own personality: so far, the new morality harks back to the doctrines, "wisdom is virtue" and "know thyself", of an age far older than that which is just passing. "Ethics is solely a question", as Epictetus so long ago said, "of dealing wisely with the phenomena of existence". The Ancients had realised this by a certain faculty which was not the moral faculty but a faculty of realising truth integrally instead of apprehending it by the intellect. But as Aurobindo points out: "The past encrusted a real nucleus of truth with such an accretion of perverting superstition and irrationalising dogmas that all advance in true knowledge was rendered impossible". Rationalistic materialism has done mankind the great service of destroying this crust of the past age and setting mankind on the path of progress. The path is laborious, but it is the only path leading onwards, and it is more than likely that we shall, as a race, again reach the same truths which the Ancients had individually realised by taking another path. Aurobindo writes: "Since the very soul of modern materialism is the search for knowledge, it will be unable to cry halt; as it reaches the barriers of sense knowledge and of the reasoning from sense knowledge, its very rush will carry it beyond." The path that the age just past had taken was not the path of the Ancients, but a blind alley of religious dogmas and social conventions; perhaps it was necessary for the stability of society, as the path of the Ancients could not have been followed by society as a whole.

The creed of new morality is based on the faith in the essentially progressive character of life—therefore, in the sanctity and primacy of personality. The individual is no longer sacrificed at the altar of some transcendental dogma of religion, society or event of the intellect; we, new moralists believe that "the happiness of the individual is the most important condition also for the enhancement of the race". This sounds very much like egoism which is likely to end in incessant struggles between all the individuals. Such fear does, however, betray a lack of knowledge about what constitutes the happiness of a man Love of others of the social instinct in man is as powerful a force as any other egoistic instincts.

While concluding, I must admit that this new morality is as yet for only the few in each country, the idealists, whose needs of self-realisation have grown beyond the scope afforded by their societies. In the words of Ellen Key, these idealists "know that this dying-off and replacing never takes place uniformly; that laws and customs, which have become a drag upon the lives of those in a better position, are still of advantage to the majority, and, therefore, ought to continue in existence, as long as they remain so. But they know at the same time that it is through the few in a better position—those whose needs are most ennobled—that a higher standard of existence will finally become the portion also of the majority. The condition of all development is not to be content with the present, but to have the courage to find a right answer to this question in thought or in action."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

LL. D. for Mahatma Gandhi: Last week an A. P. I. message stated that notice has been given of a resolution to be moved at a meeting of the Senate of the Madras University on 17th March next recommending that the honorary degree of LL. D. be conferred on Mahatma Gandhi for his services to humanity. How is it that no such proposal has emanated from the Bombay University which is supposed to be very liberal in conferring honorary degrees? Conservative Madras is taking the lead in this matter. Verily, a prophet is not honoured in his own country.

The Message of Vedanta: Swami Premananda, President, Vedanta Centre, Boston, U.S.A., author of numerous poetical works and works on Indian Philosophy, and editor of a Vedanta monthly, The Message of the East, arrived here last Friday after an absence from India of nearly 20 years. A public reception under the chairmanship of Mr. K. Natarajan was given to the Swami last Saturday. The Swami, replying, said the message he would give to India as a result of his experience in the West was that the true joy lay not in external possessions, but in the inner vision and self-consecrated service of others. That was also the message of Hinduism.

A Case Under the Prostitution Act: The following is from the Sind Observer: In order to evade the clutches of the law several notorious male pimps who have been living on the earnings of prostitutes have been giving out that they are paid servants of the prostitutes. A case has just been disposed of by the Additional City Magistrate of Karachi in which one Nur Mahi Karam Elahi, a Pathan, was placed on trial under the new Prostitution Act. It was alleged by the Prosecution that the accused had been living with one Barkat in Karachi since seven or eight years and, about five or six months ago, two more women, Kurshed and Sardari also came and lived with Barkat and her pimp Nur Mahi. The Magistrate in the evidence found that the accused had no other means of livelihood except a portion of the earning of the above prostitutes. He, therefore, sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 200 fine or two months' additional imprisonment.

Divorce and Crime Statistics in U. S. A: The Catholic Leader, Madras, writes: The most recent official figures show that crimes of divorce and murder are on the increase in the United States. Divorces increased from 165,096 in 1923 to 170,867 in 1924. And the homicide rate has more than doubled since 1905 and is now the highest in any country of the world. Dr. Frederick L. Hoffmann of New York assigns three causes for this alarming growth of crime: "a diminishing sense of responsibility to society, a diminishing sense of self-control, and a diminishing sense of responsibility to God for one's actions. Hence we can destroy or weaken these sources of evil only by teaching religion. For religion insists on duty to God, neighbour and self." It is the unfortunate separation of intellectual from religious education that is largely responsible for the increasing prevalence of crime not only in the United States but all over the world. No amount of intellectual culture can serve as a substitute for virtue. It is religion which furnishes the best motives for conduct and the noblest ideals of life and a godless sytsem of education must necessarily produce a generation of men who are without a sense of responsibility and dangerous to society.

Vocational Education: Sir Sivaganam Pillay, the present Development Minister, Madras, in his address at Trichinopoly to the Tamil University Conference, referring to the importance of vocational education in the Vernacular Middle Schools, said:—"It may also be useful to introduce in the Vernacular Middle Schools short courses of vocational training in such crafts as will arouse in the boys a sense of self-reliance and self-help in petty matters, otherwise requiring the intervention of a trained craftsman. The Vernacular Middle Schools in the Punjab have taken a definite step forward by introducing Practical Agriculture in their school course, and this innovation has been welcomed by the people, with whom the schools are now exceedingly popular. I may quote here with appropriateness what Mr. J. A. Richey has to say on this: "The special features of the Punjab scheme are that (a) a farm is attached to the school with an area and equipment sufficient for practical training on a reasonably large scale, and that (b) the training is given not by one of the specially selected for the vol teacners, but by a teacher the Agricultural College at Lyallpur. The [illegible] year at achieved an immediate popularity, and arrangements for the teaching of practical agriculture are already in progress, or nearing completion, in about 50 institutions or a quarter of the total number of Vernacular Middle Schools in the province." " The other provinces would also do well to follow this example.

Cochin Depressed Classes Conference: The tenth annual conference of the Cochin Ihiyya Maha Sabha was held at Cranganore on the 26th Jan. Over 2,000 delegates attended the session. Resolutions were passed urging the removal of all restrictions in the use of public roads and thoroughfares by the backward and depressed classes, the admission of non-Nairs into the State military department and the abolition of animal sacrifices in Bnogavathi temples One resolution urged that an Ezhnava judge should be appointed in the Cochin Chief Court, while another recommended that the period of service of the present Commissioner of Police be extended, or the appointment on the expiry of term of a Hindu to safeguard the interests of the community.

Traffic in Moplah Women: The Calicut correspondent of the Hindu (Madras) writes to that paper under date January 13th:—Since a year or two some Arab agents have been carrying on a regular traffic in Moplah women with some places in Arabia. The traffic commences with the advent of the Arabs in Calicut after the monsoon, and the latter are assisted in this shameful transaction by certain Moplah agents, who seem to be going about the district and inducing Moplah women to accompany the Arabs. In almost every mail train that leaves Calicut, Moplah women are seen taken by the Arab agents. They are sent in veiled garbs, which are not generally used by the women of the Moplah community in Malabar. The motive underlying the traffic is not known, and nobody knows the nature of the life these women are expected to lead in their new environments.

Cholera in Nepal Ended: The Director of Information, Bombay, writes to say that information has been received by the Government of Bombay that the outbreak of cholera at Birganj in Nepal has ended. Pilgrims who desire to visit Pasupatinath near Katmandu may therefore use the Raxaul-Birganj route, which was notified in a Press Note of January 27th as being closed to travellers.

The Madras Corporation and Khaddar: The Madras Corporation, at a recent sitting passed two resolutions, one imposing a Khaddar uniform on all Municipal employees, and another making spinning a compulsory subject in all Municipal schools in the city.

Cow Slaughter Prohibited: The Maharajah of the Sondur State, in the Bellary district, declared recently at Davangere that the slaughter of cows shall be forbidden in his State and that old and dry animals in the hands of itinerant butchers, if they happened to pass through his territory, would be liberated at the cost of the Government.

An Inter-communal Marriage: The Sunday Times, Lahore, reports the marriage of Mr. Jermandas, Private Secretary to H. H. the Maharaja Sahib of Kapurthala, with the daughter of Izzat Pasha, the ex-premier of Egypt. The marriage was celebrated in Paris according to Arya Samaj rites.

NOTES

Gokhale and Gandhi: Public meetings were held in Bombay, Poona and other places on Friday the 19th instant to honour the memory of Gokhale who died eleven years ago on that date. Gokhale died a few days after Mahatma Gandhi returned from South Africa. The two men were bound to each other by ties of deep affection and it almost seems as if there was a plan in the coincidence between the arrival of the one and the departure of the other. It was Mahatmaji's original idea, we believe, to join the Servants of India Society and make that body the principal venue of his work, but he and the other members found that there were differences between them on fundamental matters, and the idea had to be given up. The main difference between the Gokhale and the Gandhi view is that while the former regarded the English-educated class as the chief agency of national salvation, the latter regarded it as a devitalised body incapable of achieving any solid good, and as the first step towards national service, insisted on its divesting itself of all its acquired characters and becoming indistinguishable in outward appearance, if not inward aspiration, from the masses. In fact, the Gandhi scheme involved the skipping of a century of modern education and plunging right into the middle of the eighteenth century. The wheels of history never run back and the scheme has failed, and people are now turning again to the Gokhale plan which is the one which Indian leaders since Raja Ram Mohan Roy have favoured. The interest and enthusiasm shown in the recent Gokhale anniversary celebrations are evidence of this reaction from the Non-Co-operation scheme. There are negative and positive phases in the life of every individual and nation. They are like our waking and our sleeping hours, both of which are needed for a healthy life. The somewhat severe criticisms of some speakers at the Gokhale anniversary of the Non-Co-operation movement, should have been tempered by this consideration.

The Reforms Debate: The rejection by the Council of State of the resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. Phiroze Sethna urging the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the present constitution and to formulate a scheme for the establishment of responsible Government in India, clearly shows that the mentality and complexion of the Elders, after the new elections, have not materially changed. That the national demand which has been endorsed by almost every party in the country and by every conference that held its sessions during the Christmas week should have been thus unceremoniously turned down, does no credit to the wisdom or responsibility of the Elders. The Swarajists in the Council were more compromising in their attitude than before. Though Mr. Govind Das did not want a Royal Commission at all, because, in his opinion, such Commissions were a mere waste of time, Mr. Ramdas, the leader of the Swarajists in the Council of State, said that though there was no charm in a Royal Commission, he would accept it provided the personnel and terms of reference were satisfactory. But it is the Government that remain unresponsive. The Swarajists, with the talk of obstruction on their lips, have been as a matter of fact co-operating in every detail and there is no meaning, therefore, in Government asking at every step for more signs of good-will and co-operation. This reactionary attitude of the Government is only calculated to give a set-back to the movement for co-operation which is slowly gaining ground in the country as a result of the Responsive Co-operationists' propaganda.

The Railway Budget: The main features of the Railway Budget for 1926-27 introduced in the Assembly and Council of State simultaneously last Thursday, are that Government anticipate a profit of 10·45 crores and, deducting the loss on strategic lines, the net gain would be 871 lakhs and the net contribution to General Revenues 601 lakhs. The capital programme for the year would cost 22 crores, of which 15½ crores is for open works and 6½ crores for new constructions. In the Assembly, Sir Charles Innes also announced a 10 per cent reduction in the coal freight charged for a distance over 400 miles and the restoration of the grant of 32 lakhs rejected by the Assembly for giving effect to the Lee Commission concessions in regard to the railway companies' officers. On the whole, Sir Charles Innes should be congratulated on presenting once more a prosperity budget at the end of his term. Government have been, as usual, rather too pessimistic in their budget anticipations. In spite of the reduction in coal freights and fares in some railways, past experience fully justifies us in anticipating greater surpluses than what the Government have actually budgeted for. The policy of the Railway Board in respect of third class passengers has always been one of total neglect. While the first and second class fares have been reduced considerably, only a tardy concession has been given to third class passengers in respect of their fares. The Council of State this time took precedence over the Assembly in discussing the Railway Budget and, except for a few vehement protests from one or two Swarajist members and a mild demand for more Indianisation from others, the Government members had an easy time of the discussion in the Upper Chamber. Very different, however, was the case with the Assembly. As a protest against the Government's restoration of the Lee cut and their failure to appoint an Indian as successor to Mr. Sim, the Financial Commissioner, the Assembly by large majorities has turned down many demands. Government, of course, have got their weapon ready to their hands, but, as Lala Lajpat Rai said, it only paints the constitution in its true colours.

The Bombay Council : The budget session of the Bombay Council opened here last Monday with an inaugural address from His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson. In the course of his speech, His Excellency adverted to the deficit in the Budget for the coming financial year, the need for the revision of the Meston Settlement and the intention of his Government to complete the three blocks in the Development Scheme as recommended by the Majority of the Advisory Committee and provide 20 lakhs in the Budget to meet sinking charges and interest on the estimated loss of 3 crores. Beyond saying that the more he visited the scheme, the more anxious he became, His Excellency did not give any hopes of bringing to book all the parties concerned in the scheme which has been condemned as a scandal of the first magnitude not only in the Indian but in the British press. The press and the public of Bombay have been clamouring for a thorough inquiry into the whole question before any further steps are taken. We think it a reasonable suggestion and Government would be well advised to adopt it. The Sukkur Barrage Scheme also promises to go the way of the Back Bay Reclamation Scheme unless immediate steps are taken to prevent the alkaline salts which have been subsequently discovered in the soil. As regards the Bombay Budget for 1926-27 introduced by Sir Henry Lawrence the same day, the estimates show a deficit of Rs. 60 lakhs for the year. To meet this deficit, Government propose the re-imposition of the Stamp Act, the re-introduction of the revised schedules under Court Fees Act, and the imposition of increased taxation on the Transfer of Property in Bombay City, the remainder to be made up from balances. The Swarajists, under their new leader, Mr. L. B. Bhopatkar, have discarded their vow of silence and are taking part in the discussions.

Bengal Council Incident : We cannot too strongly condemn the strange methods indulged in by some of the Swarajist and Nationalist members of the Bengal Legislative Council at its recent sitting. It is a well-established convention that the dignity of the chair should be preserved, but no less a person than the Mayor of Calcutta and some gentlemen holding the dignified position of M. L. Cs. have been guilty of violating this elementary rule of conduct. The incident arose as follows. The President, Kumar Shibsekhareswar Roy, admitted an amendment to a resolution without the requisite previous notice. He was perfectly within his right to do so. But, whether he used the discretion vested in him well or ill on the particular occasion, is quite beside the point. If the President had mistakenly used his discretion, there were certainly open other constitutional ways for the members to ventilate their grievances, but it was nothing short of arrogance and deliberate insult to authority on their part to characterise his action as "insane," "unworthy," "childish" and similar abusive epithets, and thereupon they were rightly asked to clear out of the Council. But the malcontents, not content with the sorry exhibition of their rage and anger towards the President, held a meeting and brought forward a resolution in the Council urging the removal of the President, and we are glad to see that it has been thrown out by a large majority, a fate which they well deserved.

Sir Sivaswamy Iyer's Evidence : Some Liberal leaders have been giving evidence recently before the Skeen Committee. All, of course, emphasise the urgent need for the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst. The evidence tendered by Sir P. Sivaswamy Iyer is perhaps the strongest of all. Sir Sivaswamy is considered to be an expert on army matters and it is much to be regretted that his services have been denied to the Committee. Sir Sivaswamy said that he favoured the immediate establishment of an Indian Sandhurst not on grounds of sentiment, but because to compel the youths of the country to go to foreign countries for the purpose of military education seemed to him to be an anomaly which existed in no other civilised country and was inconsistent with the self-respect of India. If a moderate of moderates speaks thus, there can be no doubt about the opinion of the country as a whole. Sir Sivaswamy also pointed out Australia as model for India. Australia has got its own Duntroon, though it admits that it would be less expensive to train its officers abroad. The same applies to us, perhaps, with greater force. Sir Sivaswamy also warned that the principle of vicarious reward for the merits of the father should not be applied so as to override the claims of rival candidates of superior qualifications.

The New Party in the Assembly. The initial debate in the Legislative Assembly on the resolution brought forward by a Mahomedan member urging the extension of Reforms to the North West Frontier Provinces also, has led to a sharp cleavage of opinion between Hindu and Muslim M. L A.s. Both the communities seem to be organising on communal lines so as to secure their view-points. The secession of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Dewan Bahadur Rangachariar and some others from the Independent Party, though ostensibly for the purpose of forming a Nationalist Party, is represented as an attempt to consolidate the Hindu forces as a counterblast to a Muslim Party in contemplation at Delhi. We have already a surfeit of political parties and any party based on communal lines should be seriously discountenanced by all honest well-wishers of the country. Communalism has already attained its zenith and will only be fanned to alarming proportions by the proposed move of some our leaders. Since the above was in type, we have had the reassuring news that there is no foundation for the rumoured formation of a Muslim Party and that Pandit Madan Malaviya was thinking of forming a Nationalist Party long before the N. W. F. P. resolution came up for discussion in the Assembly.

The British Liberal Party: The secession of Sir Alfred Mond, Mr. Hilton Young and a number of other Liberals from the Liberal Party to the Conservative fold, takes away whatever remains of Liberalism. Indeed, Lloyd George's socialistic land policy has dealt the death-blow to Liberalism, which was for long one of the greatest forces in the country and which numbered among its ranks some of the greatest names in English history. Verily, as Mr. Macdonald says, it will not be long before Liberalism is confined to one man (Mr. Lloyd George) and three newspapers.

The Late Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Iyer : We deeply regret to record the death of Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Iyer. Since his retirement from the Madras High Court Bench, he actively interested himself in social and humanitarian movements. His thoughtful and cultured personality will be much missed in these fields.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1926.

SRI RAMAKRISHNA PARAMAHAMSA.

The 91st birth anniversary of Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa was celebrated on Sunday last at the Ramakrishna Ashram, Khar Road, Bombay, and a public meeting was also held on the same evening at the Marwadi Vidyalaya for the purpose. It is an immemorial Hindu tradition that while the death anniversaries of human ancestors are celebrated every year, it is the birth anniversary or jainty of divine avatars and personages that is commemorated from year to year. The celebration of the birth anniversary of Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa is due to the fact that he is regarded by many Hindus as an avatar incarnation of the Deity. Undoubtedly he attained in the flesh the stage at which the man in God becomes the God in man. What was his mission and his message?

Many eminent men who have observed Hinduism from without have criticised it as a religion without any definite creed or creeds, as comprising contradictory beliefs and as lacking in coherence. The fact, however, remains and must be explained that Hinduism, Hindu culture and the Hindu community have survived shocks which have extinguished other ancient civilizations, and are still very much alive. The secret of this wonderful vitality has been attempted to be explained by these critics as caste, the conservatism and the credulity of the Hindu temperament. But caste and credulity are not vitalising forces—quite the contrary. Hinduism, it would be more correct to say, has endured in spite of caste, in spite of custom and superstition. These are but the scaffolding which the builders of the Hindu socio-religious polity had to put up in order to facilitate their task, and they were never intended to be the structure themselves. We must seek for the source of the vitality of the system in some other quarter. Which is it? It is that, pre-eminent among the world-religions, Hinduism is the one which has taken the most care to maintain contact with the central power-house of the Universe. Hinduism is a cosmic religion, not a personal or national, or ethnic or ethical religion. It has its personal, national, ethnical and ethical aspects. But these are incidental and consequential. Above and beyond and beneath them all is the universal, the cosmic principle from which all the Hindu sects and schisms draw their spiritual sustenance, and in which they all find, in spite of their differences and conflicts, their central affinity.

In India, at the beginning of the last century, Hinduism had become perilously near breaking loose from its moorings. The need for a spiritual re-birth was most urgent. Raja Ram Mohan Roy founded the Brahmo Samaj to this end. The Samaj, however, developed a social and secular programme of its own which rather tended to overshadow its spiritual mission. Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa was, therefore, needed to concentrate on this spiritual work, and it is profoundly significant that not only was Keshab Chunder Sen, the great Brahmo leader, among the first to recognise the message of the Paramahamsa, but that Swami Vivekananda, the most illustrious of his disciples, who stands in the same relation to him as St. Paul to Jesus Christ, received his early religious bent as a member of the Brahmo Samaj.

A tree or a plant draws its sustenance from the soil through its roots hidden deep down in the earth—the larger the tree, the deeper does it strike its roots. A religion—every religion—has its roots in the religious experience of the mystic and, when the hidden springs of such experience run dry, the religion ceases to be a living principle—it becomes a dead formula. It no longer influences, but is itself influenced by its secular environment. Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa's great work was to remind India and the Hindus of this eternal truth, and to demonstrate to them the reality and the potency of religious experience as the foundation and justification of the idealistic view of the world.

Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa came to remind us that what India and the world lacks is a fresh outflow of the living waters of the spirit, and that, while with it political and all other problems will find an easy and natural solution, without it we must be constantly groping like the blind man in a dark cave for something which is not there. Since his time this ancient truth has gripped the finest minds among our people and is bearing fruit in a hundred different ways. The professed votaries of Sri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa may be counted by hundreds and thousands, but the grand truth that he preached and proved by his own life has reached far beyond the limits of India and is fast becoming a pervading world influence.

Nearly contemporaneous with the Paramahamsa was Swami Dayananda Sarasvati, the founder of the Arya Samaj. But the two men were as the poles asunder in their spiritual outlook. While the Paramahamsa worked out a spiritual synthesis in which all great religions were harmonised, Swami Dayananda isolated the Vedic not only from all non-Hindu but also from all post-Vedic Hindu religious evolution. The Vedic and the Vedantic revivals thus started side by side—the first in Gujarat and the second in Bengal. The former for a time made great progress in the Punjab and the United Provinces, but the latter though of slower growth has taken a more permanent hold of some of the most spiritually-minded people. An incident which occurred in the early life of the two men, gives a clue to the differences in their religious outlook. Both were Brahmins and they had as boys to officiate in the temples in their respective villages. One night young Dayananda is said to have seen a rat running up the stone idol of the temple and that upset his faith in idol-worship. Ramakrishna too failed for many days to get a glimpse of the spiritual significance of the idol of the goddess at whose daily puja he officiated. One day he vowed that if the goddess did not appear to him, he would kill himself. And, it is said, the vision was vouchsafed to him that very day and gave the turn to his mind which it retained all through life. The Paramahamsa was no more a believer in idol worship than Swami Dayananda. But he had no blind hatred of it either. He took the view that while the more highly-evolved minds needed not any concrete aid to their worship, such assistance may be beneficial in the case of less evolved minds, and that, therefore, it will not do to decry idol-worship in all cases. The poet, Tennyson, in his In Memoriam, has given expression to a similar view:

O, thou that after toil and storm
Mayst seem to have reach'd a purer air,
Whose faith has centre everywhere,
Nor cares to fix itself to form.

Leave thou thy sister when she prays
Her early Heaven, her happy views;
Nor thou with shadow'd hint confuse
A life that leads melodious days.

Her faith thro' form is pure as thine,
Her hands are quicker unto good.
Oh, sacred be the flesh and blood
To which she links a truth divine!

THE BOMBAY EXCISE ADMINISTRATION REPORT.

The salient features of the Excise Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for the financial year 1924–25 may be summed up as follows: (1) the nett excise revenue of the year decreased from Rs. 3,55,19,364 in the previous year to Rs. 3,52,71,239; (2) the consumption of country liquor declined from 1,708,118 gallons to 1,582,125 gallons; (3) the consumption of toddy decreased by 6,31,764 gallons; (4) there was a substantial increase in the consumption of potable foreign liquor with the exception of wines, the increase in imports and sales in the Presidency proper being 55,000 and 65,000 gallons respectively; (5) there was an appreciable increase in the consumption of ganja and bhang and a small decrease in the consumption of opium; (6) there was an increase of offences in regard to liquor from 3880 to 4236.

The policy of discouraging the consumption of the stronger country spirit by the restriction of a certain number of shops in each district to the exclusive sale of the weaker spirit which has been in force in the Presidency for the last four years is being continued. In spite of the fact that there was a further reduction by 5 per cent in the mofussil and 10 per cent in the Town and Island of Bombay in the rations fixed for the year, the consumption nowhere came up to the rations. The Commissioner of Excise, Mr. J. Ghosal, here corrects what he calls a fallacious argument advanced by many that, as the ration is not fully used up, the demand must be less than the ration. He explains that, whatever may be the quantity rationed, the licensee so fixes the price that all his money more or less comes to him. Unlike the previous year, toddy shows a decrease in consumption in 1924–25. But the Commissioner is still indulging in his alarmist observations that the diminished consumption both under country spirit and toddy would have been a matter for great congratulation, if there was not the lurking fear that the deficit was being made good by illicit or foreign liquor or by importation from Indian States. In fact, the whole Review of the Administration Report by the Commissioner of Excise is full of such anti-prohibitionistic bias which tries to minimise the effects of prohibition which the Bombay Government have accepted as the goal of their excise policy, and Government also in their Resolution seem to echo the reactionary views of the Commissioner. Elsewhere in the Report, the Commissioner complains of the lack of temperance propaganda as if to show that it is the Government that are very solicitous about the welfare of the masses but that it is they who do not take advantage of the facilities offered.

During the year under report, there was a staggering increase in the import and sale of foreign liquor. The Commissioner explains the increase in the consumption of fermented liquor, mostly those imported from foreign countries, as due to the preference shown by the labouring and middle classes for beer, on account of its cheapness compared to country liquor, and to the increased sales to troops at military canteens. The increase in the consumption of potable spirits the Commissioner is inclined to attribute to the fact that people resorted to cheap foreign spirits, mostly from Java and Germany, on account of their high strength and low cost compared to country liquor. The increase in the consumption of denatured spirits is explained as due to the larger use of this spirit for domestic and industrial purposes. We are glad to see that Government are taking steps for preventing the abuse of this spirit for potable purposes. Besides these general causes mentioned above for increased consumption of foreign liquor, the popular use as a preventive for plague in some places and the prohibition of "off" sales of country liquor in other places seem also to have led to an increased use of foreign liquor. There was only a slight decrease in the consumption of wine, in the year and the consumption of liquors manufactured in India and paying duty at tariff rates decreased as they could not compete with the cheaper brands of imported spirit. The increase of foreign liquor is thus a serious matter which demands urgent attention. In their Resolution on the Report, Government themselves admit that greater restrictions should be placed on foreign liquor. They have already raised the scale of license fees for its vend and we hope they will lose no time in taking further steps to prevent the importation and consumption of foreign liquor. Unless this is urgently done, the good effects produced by the decreased consumption of country spirit and toddy would largely have been nullified and the foreign liquor interests would be firmly entrenched in the country.

The increased use of the drugs is attributed by the Commissioner to diversion of custom from country spirit, due to the high price of liquor, the low selling price of ganja and the abolition of "off" sales of country spirit. Government also evidently accept this view. All the same, we welcome their proposal to take suitable steps to prevent the increased consumption of hemp drugs in the Presidency proper. Notwithstanding the decrease in the number of offences of illicit distillation in the year under report, the Commissioner asserts that the testimony of experienced officers proves that illicit distillation is on the increase. Though there may be some truth in this, there is no basis whatsoever for the alarming picture he raises when he says that crime has increased to a dangerous degree. Government, however, take a sane view of the matter. In their Resolution they admit that severe restrictions placed on old established habits must inevitably result in frequent breaches of those restrictions and to that extent the increase of excise crime, although it cannot but be viewed with alarm, is normal. Anyhow, there can be no objection to Government making a substantial increase in the excise force of the Presidency to deal with such crimes whenever and wherever they arise. In order to strike at the root of the evil, Government also propose a more radical remedy by the application of the Mhowra Act to the whole of the Presidency.

Government in their concluding remarks in their Resolution refer to the acceptance of total prohibition as the goal of their excise policy and the financial and administrative difficulties in the way of putting it into execution. They urge the need for the Legislative council to co-operate with them in suggesting to them ways and means for supplying the loss of revenue consequent upon the adoption by them of total prohibition, and put their faith on the new Committee that has been appointed for the purpose. We publish in our news columns the personnel and terms of reference of this Committee. Though the Government had accepted as early as November last year the resolution moved by Mr. R. G. Pradhan, it had taken them so long to give effect to it. As will be seen, the terms of reference to the Committee make it clear that, unless the Committee finds out new sources of taxation, the policy which Government have accepted as their goal will not be given effect to. The Province is already heavily taxed and proposals for other taxes for meeting the budget deficit are already being made and, in the circumstances, if only the Government are so minded, they can find out the necessary money by a systematic policy of retrenchment.

THE INDIAN INDUSTRIAL AND COMMERCIAL CONGRESS.

After an interval of six years, the Indian Industrial and Commercial Congress held its third session in Delhi on Saturday last under the presidentship of Lala Harkishenlal. It was mainly due to the initiative of the Indian Merchants' Chamber, Bombay, that the session of the Congress this year was made possible. The Hon. Mr. Phiroze Sethna, in his welcome speech as Chairman of the Reception Committee, pointed out the necessity for such an organisation. As he said, without the adequate tackling of industrial and economic problems, our national progress will only be a lop-sided instead of a harmonious and balanced development. It was Ranade who first realised that the economic domination of one country by another is more insidious and dangerous than political domination and increasing attention has since then been paid as much to social and economic as to political progress. More than ever, the present seems to be a fitting occasion for the formation of a body which can voice forth the unanimous demands of India in the industrial and economic field. The Royal Commission on Currency has almost finished its deliberations; the Report of the Taxation Enquiry Committee will soon see the light of day; and the Royal Commission on Agriculture is about to begin its deliberations. We, therefore, welcome the decision of the Congress to establish an Indian Associated Chamber of Commerce and we hope it will begin to function soon. The fact that nearly forty organisations took part in the Congress shows its thoroughly representative character and the interest taken in it by all the provinces of India.

The address of the President, though it fell much below ordinary expectations, was a lucid summary of India's economic downfall, its causes and remedies. "All the arts of legislation and the resources of the administration", he said, "joined hands with the enterprising Englishman to reduce India to a state of complete dependence on English manufacturers, leaving to her only the resources of agriculture. The State, no doubt, did take action in building railways and digging canals; but their utility in rehabilitating Indian manufactures and commerce has always been doubted. Further actions of the State, in imposing excise duties on cotton goods, in carrying on a currency policy in favour of England, adverse to Indian interests, in buying her requirements of machinery, railways, telegraphs, and telephone requirements in England, in using English-made stationery, in importing all the military requirements from England and even the requirements of jails, all this showed a distinct bias in favour of England". This is fairly a good summary of the causes which have turned India from an industrial to an agricultural country. Lala Harkishenlal was, however, inclined to attribute the present economic distress in India not only to the policy followed by Britain in India but also to the lack of faith and enterprise on the part of Indians and the spirit of social exclusiveness engendered by the social system in vogue. Whatever may be the causes which have brought about the present state of things, it is no use rueing over the past. As regards the remedies which he suggests, his remarks on Swadeshi, Charkha and Khaddar require only a brief notice here. Swadeshism is intimately connected with the system of administration in the country and, unless the Government is made more responsive to the people, there is no hope of inducing it to foster indigenous industries in the country by a system of thorough-going protection which even advanced countries have found necessary in their earlier stages of development. Charkha and Khaddar represent the same economic aspect. It cannot be denied that both of them have a place in any scheme of rural reconstruction, but it is idle to expect the economic salvation of India through them. Lala Harkishenlal's observations on the joint stock banking enterprise in this country are well worth considering. It need hardly be said that, to achieve any position now whatsoever, be it in industries or agriculture or in subsidiary industries or transport by sea, land and air, we require in the first instance banking, insurance and similar other modern financial institutions founded, organised, run and maintained on a national scale. Joint stock banking in India is still in its infancy and has touched only the fringe of the problem. As Lala Harkishenlal remarked, the resources of the Central Bank of India and the Punjab National Bank, certainly two of the biggest joint stock enterprises in this country, will not suffice to buy a broad-gauge railway from Delhi to Amballa and build for us one of the big ships that England is now building. Unless we have many more banks like these, joint stock banking will not have made much progress. In this connection, Lala Harkishenlal did well to point out the unfair competition which indigenous banking has to meet with in undeveloped areas from such big banks as the Imperial Bank of India which is opening its branches in tiny little places and doing direct lending business. Lala Harkishenlal made some valuable suggestions for the consideration of the Royal Commission on Agriculture: intensive and extensive, careful and selective agriculture, migration of population to industrial centres and the creation of industries, and the overhauling of the co-operative movement. In conclusion, the President pleaded for the cultivation of what he called a national opinion in these matters, so that the State action may soon change from unfavourable to neutral and then to a favourable one, and it is to the creation of this that the Commercial Congress will now have to turn its attention.

The resolutions passed at the Congress represent almost all the problems that are now agitating the commercial world and are in full consonance with public opinion. Among them may be mentioned the demand for a gold standard and gold currency, the restoration of the pre-war ratio between the rupee and gold, protection of indigenous industries on the model of the British Safeguarding of Industries Act, the encouragement of Indian shipping and transport by water, the Indianisation of the Services, the abolition of the company super-tax, a further reduction of coal freight etc. We hope Government will not fail to give effect to the resolution of the Congress demanding that a qualified Indian in active touch with the problems of Indian shipping should represent India at the International Labour Conference to be held in May at Geneva.

ENGLAND'S EDUCATIONAL POLICY IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I shall feel obliged to you if you will kindly allow me to reply to the criticism made by you on my book "England's Educational Policy in India" in your editorial dated April 18, 1925. Owing to pressure of work I could not do so earlier.

You say: "Mr. Oak's estimate of Lord Curzon's educational measure follows too much the predictions made of them by their opponents, which, however, have been largely falsified by subsequent events. It may be that these critics were right in assuming that the late Viceroy was actuated by a desire to curtail the facilities of higher education; but if that was his intention, his measures have proved ill-calculated to give effect to it.....It is easy to be wise after the event, but Mr. Oak seems to have scorned even this easy wisdom in this case."

All this criticism was unnecessary. My contention is that Lord Curzon's policy was intended to check the rapid growth of secondary education. Whether Lord Curzon succeeded or not is another matter. But, even then, one has to admit that His Excellency did succeed, though temporarily. From the statistical table given on page 131. (The Seventh Quinquennial Review. Vol. II) we find that, while the Quinquennial year ending 1901-02 showed an increase in secondary schools by 337, the Quinquennial year 1906-07 showed an increase by 188 only. We find the same thing with reference to the enrollment in schools. During the first period the increase was over 82,000 whereas during the second period it was under 51,000. If we include in this the growth of schools of girls also, the picture will be still worse. The contention of the progressive-minded people is that, taking into consideration that Indian education at that time was in its infancy, Lord Curzon's policy did change the trend of growth so far as secondary education is concerned, though after five years or so, secondary education once more started its onward march with the same vigour as before. Even a child can see that the ratio of growth fell down between the years 1903-08. If Lord Curzon had adopted a policy of paternalism or at least 'let alone', progress in that direction would have been faster than it actually was. Let me hasten to add here that, from the point of view of Lord Curzon, he was perfectly right and no Imperialist would have done otherwise. As I observed in my Preface: "The obvious reason why they (our rulers) do not follow the right policy is not because they do not know it, but because they believe, and perhaps rightly, that by so doing they would not be able to continue their autocratic rule over the economic exploitation of India."

Continuing you say: "In another particular, too, he has been led away by a current shibboleth about Indian Universities. The commonest criticism of them is that they are not teaching institutions. ..." The important difference between the American and the Indian Universities is", says Mr. Oak, "that, whereas, the former are residential and teaching bodies with a very liberal scheme of education, the latter are merely examining bodies." ...This is entirely wrong."

According to your opinion the Indian Universities are teaching bodies because the colleges that do the actual teaching are affiliated to them. The mere fact that our colleges are affiliated to Universities does not make the latter teaching bodies. Well might one say that because all our secondary schools are affiliated (recognized) by the Universities and teach the prescribed courses, secondary teaching also is done by the Universities. There is complete autonomy given to colleges in the selection of professors and in the method of teaching. The Universities appoint (without consulting the teaching bodies—the colleges) the examiners and conduct the examinations by one stereotyped set questionaires drawn to find out what the students do not know rather than to find out what they do. In America, on the other hand, the examining bodies and the teaching bodies are identical in every respect,—the examinations being conducted under the same roof. Whether this is the best mode to test students' knowledge or not is another question. What I am trying to prove is that it is an anomaly of facts to say that Indian Universities, with the exception of the Benares Hindu University and others of the kind, are teaching bodies.

From the press-opinions sent to me by the International Press-cuttings Bureau I find that my book has been very favourably received by the Indian press. I am contemplating, in the light of the criticism made by educators, to revise and enlarge the book so as to exclude all the errors of commission and omission made by me in this edition. It is not possible for me to get all the material I need from India. Under the circumstances I shall feel highly obliged to your readers if they would kindly send me their own publications of books and articles, dealing with educational reform, defects in the present system, etc. These would be returned to them if so desired.

BIRTH CONTROL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir?

I hope you will make room for a few lines in reply to Mrs. Ganti's attack on me in your issue of the 16th January which has just been brought to my notice. It is difficult to answer people who live in the clouds and refuse to descend to the realities of life, who probably regret that they have a body at all with its vile exigencies. Where this attitude is not sheer hypocrisy, there is a great deal of unconscious vanity in this kind of mentality. Nobody prevents these people from practising self-control or any other fad, even at the risk of injuring their bodies—what do they care for anything so low as the body after all? But when it comes to laying down rules for other people, these cannot be based on the mentality of a Buddha or a Paramahamsa. However desirable it may be for everybody to be a Buddha—in my opinion it is not—facts have to be faced, and Mrs. Ganti turns her back at them. I give all credit to Mrs. Ganti's patriotism when she speaks of India as 'a land where the most rigid cult had greatest followers, where hovel and the palace were alike sanctuary, and where every function of life was a sacrament'. Evidently there is no such thing as physiology for Mrs. Ganti; all is sacrament. Patriotism apart, there is not the slightest reason to suppose that India was any way different from other countries in respect of sex. The followers of rigid cults do not necessarily practise what they preach; in fact, great rigidity invariably leads to wide-spread hypocrisy. There may be widows in India, who, as Mrs. Ganti says, 'minister as divine deities of self-control and self-sacrifice,' but personally I would have respected them more if this deityhood had not been forced on them, not only by prohibiting marriage, but by disfiguring them to make them repulsive to men. As it is, I can only pity them. Forced celibacy never did anybody any good. The celibacy forced on the catholic clergy is known to have led to the grossest abuses. Besides, it is now known that the moderate exercise of every function of the body cannot but do good, and that it is only excess that is bad. What is moderate and what is excess is to be determined by individual experience as in the case of food, and not by a dictator. 'Purity of life' and 'high character' are not destroyed so long as one is moderate, i.e., so long as one does not injure oneself by passing the limit determined by experience.

Mrs. Ganti exclaims: 'Is not the secret key of India's vitality and power, spirituality and honour, home and society, self-control?' Where is this pretended vitality and power and all the rest of it? She adds further: 'Thoughtful men and physicians (which means those who agree with Mrs. Ganti, I suppose,) should protest against the propaganda of modern birth-controllers, which is doing great harm in the West whence it is imported.' The only harm I can see is that done to superstitions. I ask any honest reader to compare the present condition of India with that of Western countries. Apparently the result of all the 'vitality, spirituality etc., of India is that it becomes a ready prey to any foreign invader who cares to take advantage of its weakness. Western methods have led to scientific advance. None but a blind patriot can think India's present condition desirable or admire the methods that led to it. I do not.

'Whether the masses are capable to attain this high standard or not, is no reason to abandon it.' Vague talk of high or low standards does no good. Mahatma Gandhi lays down that the interval between successive children should be five years at least, and this is to be effected by self-control. Only a Utopian can think this possible for a married couple with normal bodies. Even the elite cannot pretend to this absurd standard; why talk contemptuously of the masses? What the elite refer to as carnal desire depends on the internal secretions of the sex glands in both sexes in the elite as in the masses. The ease or difficulty of self-control depends on the balance between these internal secretions (which cannot be controlled) and the strength of mind of the individual if he is inclined to use it. This strength of mind may, by practice, be increased up to a certain limit, different for different individuals. It ultimately depends on heredity and environment, like every other quality. In any individual, the maximum limit of strength of mind may or may not be enough to control the desire produced by the internal secretions. The individuals who can control it may thank their stars for it, but they have not the least right to assume airs of superiority. On the other hand, control is not always desirable, even if possible, beyond a certain limit. It may unduly hamper the action of the glands, and diminish the secretions which lead to general health.

There is absolutely nothing sordid or shameful in artificial methods. In fact the women who use them know more about their own bodies than those who consider ignorance synonymous with innocence, and hence can keep themselves cleaner. Giving a dog a bad name does not make it bad, though it may furnish an excuse for hanging it.

Says Mrs. Ganti: 'The solution of the problem of India's poverty lies entirely on humanitarian and not bestial lines.' Quite so. No beast has been known to practise birth-control by artificial methods, or by self-control either, which last is really as artificial as any other method.

Finally, I would inform Mrs. Ganti that there is a science called physiology.

WANTED INDIVIDUAL ACTION.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The fate of the political movement in India has always been the creation of new parties with diversity of views and convictions as well as different courses of action for

realpatidar.com

the same goal; but no party can claim to have exercised that amount of patience that is required to exhaust its own line of action to a successful end. They obviously fail through their own fault and attribute the cause to the people. The nation's precious time, energy and money are wasted for nothing but to settle the internal dissensions of our leaders, who are practically doing nothing for the political, social or economic advancement of the country. When the political agitation was conducted by moderates, there was no action required on the part of either the people or the leaders, because the so-called agitation involved no other work except that of passing pious resolutions, recording vehement protests and indulging in platform oratory. The Non-Co-operation movement was hailed with joy by the people, but a faction was created among the leaders on the plea of independent views and convictions, because it required a certain amount of sacrifice and not bluff, which was cold comfort to our easy-going politicians. Twenty-five to thirty thousand blooming young men gave up their desire for comforts, conveniences and even existence, and went to jail freely submitting to and ungrudgingly suffering the inhuman treatment of a civilised Christian Government, but through the action of a few ill-advised young men at Chauri Chaura, who constitute not even a drop in the ocean of Indian population, the movement was suspended on the ground that the country was not ready for Civil Disobedience. Can the whole people of India be held responsible for that? The Satyagraha campaigns at Nagpur and Vaikom and the Akali struggle in the Punjab are glaring instances when the people have unhesitatingly responded to the call of our leaders.

The sufferings of jail life prompted some of the leaders to enjoy Council chairs for some time and a new programme was placed before the country. The people meekly submitted to the wishes of the leaders and contributed their mite according to the then existing circumstances and, before that programme is worked to a successful end, the country is again to be goaded with another programme called "Responsive Co-operation", a vague term incapable of being convincingly explained by the authors themselves. When the Swaraj Party came into existence, they had to fight against No-Changers and hence they could not succeed in the last election; but now when the No-Changers have kept aloof and the Swarajists are given a carte blanche by the Congress and are hopeful of getting a sweeping majority in the next election, there comes a fight between Swarajists and Responsive Co-operationists, as a result of which the change of getting a sweeping majority to either party is perhaps sealed. After the next election, there will be four parties in the Indian Legislature, viz., Liberals, Independents, Swarajists and Responsive Co-operationists and, to form a majority, three of the four must join together, which is impossible and impracticable, judging from precedence. Therefore, success through constitutional agitation and destruction of dyarchy is out of the question. Are the people responsible for this? It is high time that we give up our yoke of loyalty to the leaders and take to our own course of action for the realisation of the political salvation of our Motherland. In the absence of leaders, the only course left open to us is to resort to individual action which, I feel certain, will take us to our goal earlier than any other course of action in the present circumstances. Let every Indian make up his mind not to wear foreign cloth, not to purchase English-made articles, not to do anything which is likely to wound the feelings or religious susceptibilities of other communities, not to observe the caste system, and not to allow evils of any kind to blemish his character. These can be practised without the advice of a political leader or a mandate from the Congress, and if the 320 millions of people will make up their minds to do as stated above, Swaraj is ours to-morrow.

Mahim, Bombay, Yours etc,
13th February 1926. N. N. MENON.

THE CASTE SYSTEM IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your issue of the Reformer of the 13th February, I read a note entitled "The Caste System in India." In that note Raja Ratnam Isaac says that some of the social reformers in India, including Mahatma Gandhi, are trying to bring about reforms by half measures. Mr. Raja Ratnam Isaac does not approve of half-way reform. He has placed before his readers as an example of "half-way reform" an extract from Mahatma Gandhi's speech on the subject of removing untouchability. The following is the extract: "I do not ask you to eat together, but just remove untouchability." By saying "I do not ask you to eat together", I think Mahatmaji means that he does not ask anyone to eat from the same plate with another. While touring in East Bengal, Mahatmaji expressly told an audience that he was against eating from the same plate with another for hygienic reasons and that, in spite of being a Hindu, he never permitted even his wife to take food with him from the same dish. Further, he clearly stated that he did not find any harm in taking food from the hands of an untouchable if it is cleanly cooked. He gave the audience to understand that removal of untouchability means that the touchables should not think themselves polluted if they are touched by the untouchables and that the touchables by all reasonable means should permit the untouchables to cook food for them.

Although it is a fact that newspaper reports are not always found correct, this statement of Mahatma Gandhi was given wide publicity and Mahatmaji has not contradicted it. So we can easily believe the correctness of the report. While I am drawing the reader's attention to this fact, I feel justified in concluding by saying that it is not quite fair to classify Mahatma Gandhi with the half-way reformers.

PROHIBITION CONVENTION AT DELHI.

The following are further details of the Prohibition Convention kindly sent to us for publication:—

FIRST BUSINESS MEETING: JANUARY 29th 1926.

The Meeting along with other resolutions discussed the acceptance of a resolution proposed by Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram urging Provincial Governments to introduce more scientific Temperance instruction in all Indian schools. The resolution was eventually withdrawn.

realpatidar.com

A discussion then took place on the urgent necessity for a sound financial basis for the future work of the League. It was decided that the sum of Rs. 12,000 was required annually for the work urgently necessary. The President suggested that a beginning should be made at once by personal and public appeal during the meetings of the Convention.

The following sums were promised:— Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, M. L. A., Rs. 100, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, M. L. A., Rs. 100, Maulana Mahomed Ali, Rs. 100, Bishop J. W. Robinson, Rs. 100 (pd.) Rai Bahadur R. S. Lala Paras Das, Rs. 100, the Punjab Temperance Federation per Mr. S. Singh, Rs. 100, Haji Wajihuddin, Rs. 50, Rev. Herbert Anderson, Rs. 50, Sardar Bahadur Lena Singh, Rs 25, Rev. Pickett, Rs. 25, a sympathiser, Rs. 25 (pd.) Mr. Prabhu Dayal, Rs. 10 (pd.,) Mir Mahomed Hossain, Rs. 10 (pd.,) Bangalore Temperance Federation, Rs. 100 (pd.,) Lucknow Temperance Federation, Rs. 100 (pd.,) Calcutta Temperance Federation, Rs. 100 (pd.,) W. C. T. U., Rs. 100 (pd.,) Total Rs. 1195.

It was resolved that Maulana Mahomed Ali should be appointed Vice-chairman of the Arrangements Committee.

The Meeting appointed a small Nominated Committee to suggest names for the officers and executive of the Prohibition League of India to report to the business meeting at its next session.

In view of the absence of Mr. K. Natarajan and Kumar Ganganand Sinha, M. L. A., the Meeting requested Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Maulana Mahomed Ali to speak at the mass-meeting in the Sangham Theatre on Saturday evening, January 30th.

SECOND BUSINESS SESSION: JANUARY 30th 1926.

The Constitution having been accepted, delegates from the Temperance Societies and Social Service League present, with life members whose names are hereby recorded, duly constituted themselves the Prohibition League of India:—

The Bangalore Temperance Federation, the Calcutta Temperance Federation, the Lucknow Temperance Federation, the Punjab Temperance Federation, the Amritsar Temperance Society, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Ahmednagar Total Abstinence Association, the Magetha Temperance Society, Amritsar District, the Madras Temperance League, the Mysore Civic and Social Service Progress Association, the Delhi Central Social Service League, Temperance Section, the Gujerat Temperance Association, All-India Bhatnagar Sadar Association Hind, Friends Foreign Mission Temperance Society, and the Telugu Church Temperance Association.

LIFE MEMBERS: Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Haji Wajihuddin, Rai Bahadur R. S. Lala Paras Das, Bishop J. W. Robinson and Maulana Mahomed Ali.

MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE: Maulana Mahomed Ali, C. F. Andrews Esq., Dr. Joseph Benjamin, Rai Bahadur Chuni Lal Bose C. I. E., Miss M. J. Campbell, Miss Helen Maya Das, Rai Bahadur R. S. Lala Paras Das, Dr. W. L. Ferguson, Rev. A. T. Hoffert, N. M. Joshi Esq., M. L. A., Subbu Krishnayar, Maulvi Abd ul Kasim, M. L. A., Lala Nand Lal K. T. Matthew Esq, B. A., B.L, Mr. Jamnadas Mehta, M. L. A, Dr. Harold Mann or Nominee, K. Natarajan Esq., K. T. Paul Esq., Rev. J.W. Pickett, K. L. Rallia Ram Esq., C. Rajagopalachari Esq., Lala Lajpat Rai, M.L.A., Maulvi Mahomed Shaffee, Master Sant Singh and Kumar Ganganand Sinha, M. L. A.

It was decided that the headquarters of the League should be Calcutta.

FINANCE: The League then considered further the necessary financial arrangements and accepted the following provisional budget for 1926-27:—Organizing Secretary Rs. 200 p. m. (house rent inclusive). Rs. 2,400; Travelling expenses for O. S. Rs. 100 p.m., Rs. 1200; Publicity quarterly notes and literature Rs. 200 p.m., Rs. 2400; Office Rs. 100 p.m., Rs. 1,200; Sending library of prohibition literature, Rs. 1,000; Lantern slides and lecture department, Rs. 1000; Executive Committee meeting, Rs. 1000; Stationery, postage etc., Rs. 500; Incidental Rs. 500; Total Rs. 12000 (approximately).

The Executive Committee was authorised to spend the income derived from affiliations, fees and donations upon the purposes suggested in.

THE OBJECTS OF THE LEAGUE. The representatives of the W.C.T.U., presented the following request under the signature of Emma S. Price and Ada R. Ferguson:—

The Women's Temperance Christian Union has circulated throughout India and Burma a petition to the Viceroy asking that he recognize the principle of local option and grant to local and provincial Governments the privilege of legislating concerning the same, this legislation to apply to all kinds of intoxicating liquors and drugs, whether foreign or domestic. We request that the Prohibition League endorse this petition which has secured over 25,000 signatures and forward the same to the Viceroy through some of its members who are in the Legislative Assembly.

It was resolved that the Convention endorses the petition and suggests that it be presented by deputation to the Viceroy-elect through members of the League who are members of the Legislative Assembly, viz.,:—Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Jamnadas Mehta Esq., Lala Lajpat Rai, M.L.A., Maulvi Mahomed Shaffee, and Kumar Ganganand Sinha.

THIRD BUSINESS SESSION: JAN. 31ST 1926.

The General Secretary moved that the Constitution be confirmed. Dr. Ferguson suggested that it might be wise not to have the number of Vice-Presidents confirmed to two and moved that the number 2 be eliminated. This was seconded, put to the meeting and carried.

The Secretary then moved that Miss M. J. Campbell be a Vice-President of the League and that Dr. S. P. Shroff, F. R. C S. B, be appointed a member of the Executive. This was seconded and carried.

A discussion then took place upon the immediate work upon which the League should concentrate. Various suggestions were made. Among them the first was the creation of fresh centres of prohibition interest throughout India. Suitable literature giving up-to-date facts and reporting any indication of growing public opinion was essential. It was felt that as many movements were getting definite attention paid to them by special activities lasting for a week, so it might be well to inaugurate a Prohibition Week in various important cities.

A further suggestion was made that the number of Hony. workers should be greatly increased—the League meeting travelling and out-of-pocket expenses when and where necessary.

On the subject of finance, the General Secretary said that two or three influential Indian friends had promised to do as much as they could in the immediate future. The weak spot of the Convention's enthusiasm had been its financial results, but he was hopeful that the difficulty would be solved. Meanwhile, when the promises given of support were fulfilled, they had enough to carry on the work without a paid Organizing Secretary for some months.

The general opinion seemed to be that the Convention had been a great success, and with the usual vote of thanks to hosts and hostesses, the local Reception Committee and especially its officers, to the Press, the speakers and the General Secretary, the Meeting came to a close.

COLOUR FEELING IN EUROPEAN COURTS.

Mr. K. M. Panikkar, sometimes Editor of the Swarajya and Hindustan Times, who is now on a visit to Europe, writes in the Hindu, Madras:—

For a long time the tradition in England was undoubtedly that law should be administered equally between man and man. It was so conservative a judge as Lord Mansfield who declared "Let the Black be Free" when a negro slave was brought by writ of Habeas Corpus before him. But recent events in England have tended to show how marked has been the change that has come over English judicial administration in this matter. In a number of cases which have recently come prominently before the public, to which I shall allude later, English "justice" has shown marked signs of being distinctively "white." We in India have long been familiar with this principle of a different law for the black and the white. Cases from South Africa, Malaya, Kenya and Ceylon are often enough reported in our newspapers to make us realize that in certain parts of the British Empire it is impossible to obtain justice against Europeans. Neither have instances been lacking in India itself. But there was always a belief that justice in England itself was unprejudiced and that in English Courts a man, whatever his colour, may receive justice. But after a close scrutiny of recent cases careful observers—including many liberal-minded Englishmen—have come to the painful conclusion that the old spirit of equality before law is vanishing in England.

This has been emphasised all the more by comparison with tendencies in the United States. The recent Rhinelander divorce case in the New York Courts in which the defendant, one of the wealthiest Americans, sued for the dissolution of his marriage with a negro domestic servant on the ground of her being "coloured," went against the white husband, much to the astonishment of English people A comparison of this case with the decision in a recent breach of promise suit by an English girl against an Indian Barrister of high standing affords an instructive parallel. In the latter case, the Indian was sued for a breach of promise to marry by a girl who claimed to have had a child by him 13 years ago. No evidence was produced. There was not even a letter, the only communication which passed between them being a Christmas card. There were no presents exchanged and the girl frankly said that he had not bought her even a box of chocolates. Sir Henry Slesser who defended the case declared that the act of courting must have changed greatly since his days if a couple engaged to marry were to carry on that courtship in this manner. Again it was pointed out that he was married at the time and that a photograph of his wife was on the mantel-piece. Yet with all this evidence the English jury awarded the girl £ 1,000 damages, probably the record in a case of this kind.

The case of Madame Fahmy—the French woman who shot her Egyptian husband in an English hotel—tells the same tale. The decision was frankly on the basis of the right of the white woman to protect herself from the depravity of her coloured husband. The history of Indian political trials in England is well-known. At least in two of the most celebrated instances—Tilak v. Chirol and Nair v. O'Dwyer—opinion in India holds that the decisions were influenced by extra judicial considerations. In fact it has plainly come to this now that as between Englishmen and Indians it is impossible to get justice in Courts even in England. As Mr. Sastri declared not long ago, the Empire is becoming permeated by the spirit of Boer-ism.

It is a pleasure to turn from England to other countries which have Asiatic possessions. It is well-known that in France colour feeling is totally absent in this as well as other spheres of life. In Portugal it is even better. Indians hold very high judicial offices in the mother-country itself. Cajitano Gonsalves, the Chief Justice or High Majesty, as he is called, is an Indian from Goa. During my short stay in Portugal what has struck me as being singularly important is the absolute equality between Portuguese citizens of colours and creeds. I shall try in another article to describe the position which Indians hold in this country and the rights and liberties they enjoy. For our present purpose it is sufficient to remember that, so far as judicial administration is concerned, there is no prejudice of any kind and that men without distinctions and colour can have equal law administered to them.

The change of spirit in England in this matter is to my mind an indication of the growing spirit of solidarity between the white races of the Empire. The feeling is visibly growing that the opinions and prejudices of colonial communities should be respected in England. Add to this the ever-increasing number of people who have themselves spent considerable portion of their time in Africa and Asia and the result is the growth in England of a feeling more akin to the spirit of the Boers than to the old freedom of England. In its relation to India this spirit is more antagonistic, and more retrograde. Unless the growth of this prejudice is checked, it seems to me that there cannot be any lasting understanding between England and India.

An Inter-Caste Widow Marriage: The Godhra correspondent of the Indian Daily Mail writes to that paper under date Feb. 22: A widow of the Modh Brahmin caste of Mentha near Mekanna has remarried a patidar youth of the same village. This is another instance of inter-caste remarriage, the first being that of Mrs. Lilavaty Sheth, a Jain woman of Ahmedabad remarrying Mr. Kanhaiyalal M. Munshi, a Bhargava Brahmin of Broach at Bombay.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Two Noted Anniversaries: Bombay celebrated last week the anniversaries of the late Mr. Gopal Krishna Gokhale and Swami Paramahamsa, the illustrious Guru of Swami Vivekananda. At the former meeting held on Friday the 19th inst., Sir Stanley Reed presided and Messrs. K. Natarajan and G. B. Trivedi were among those who spoke on the life and work of the illustrious Gokhale. Mr. K. Natarajan presided over the latter meeting held on Sunday last when enthusiastic speeches were made on the life and teachings of the great Swami.

The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association: The Elocution Competition of Hindu girls under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association, which was unavoidably postponed, will be held from Tuesday the 9th March to Sunday the 14th March at the Vanita Vishram Hall, Sandhurst Road, Girgaon, between the hours 6 to 8 p.m. Competitors who have already applied and those who may hereafter apply to take part in the competition are requested to get ready with their subjects. Detailed programme will be announced later on.

Personnel and Terms of Reference of the Prohibition Committee: In November last the Bombay Legislative Council passed the following resolution moved by Mr. R. G. Pradhan, M.L.C.:—"This Council recommends to the Governor-in-Council that a small Committee consisting of some elected members of the Legislative Council, officials and financial experts, be appointed to consider and report on the financial measures that should be introduced in order to give full effect to the policy of prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drink and drugs." In pursuance of this resolu tion Government have now appointed a Committee consisting of the following gentlemen:—Mr. J. A. Kay, Chairman. Members: Mr. B. P. Madon, Mr. R. G. Pradhan, M.L.C., Mr. Lalji Naranji, M.L.C., Mr. L.B. Bhopatkar, M.L.C., Mr. S.T. Kambli, M.L.C., Mr. Hooseinbhoy Abdoolabhoy Laljee, M.L.C., Mr. A.R. Dalal, I.C.S., Mr. B. W. Perry, I.C.S. Mr. Perry will also act as Secretary to the Committee. The Committee are requested:—(1) to calculate the net loss to Government due to total prohibition, including the cost of extra preventive staff; (2) to enquire into and suggest fresh avenues of taxation for making up the above loss; and (3) in consideration of the fact that the period within which total prohibition can be fully established cannot be definitely foreseen and that the amount of deficit in revenue will vary greatly from year to year, to lay down a programme by which extra taxation can be levied by stages as necessary.

C. P. Temperance Bill: We are glad to see that Mr. B. Raghavendra Rao, M. L. C., Nagpur, is introducing in the coming session of the C. P. Legislative Council "The Central Provinces Temperance Bill 1926." His Excellency Sir Montagu Butler, unlike the Governor of Bombay, has acted more wisely by allowing Mr. Rao's Local Option Bill. In his statement of objects and reasons, Mr. Raghavendra Rao says:—"The object of the Bill is to confer on municipal voters the power of controlling the issue of licences for the sale of country liquor in urban areas, and thereby to effect total prohibition which is officially accepted to be the ultimate goal of the excise policy of the Government. In August 1921 the local Government accepted the following resolution moved and unanimously passed in the Legislative Council: "This Council recommends to the Government to stop within as short a period as may be practicable the sale of liquor throughout the whole province." The practical result of the application of the policy dictated by the Council and the pressure exerted by general propaganda against drink as a social evil during the past few years has been a phenomenal reduction in the quantity of country liquor consumed throughout the province. Prohibition having been accepted to be the aim, local option by means of a referendum is, it is submitted, a stepping stone to the end in view. With the broad-based municipal franchise now in force in the province, the Bill will enable the Government to share with the people the responsibility for the location of liquor shops and thus respect local public feeling either way. The Bill has been drafted on the lines of the Scottish Temperance Act of 1913 and some other Acts in force in the self-governing Dominions of the British Empire."

Mahatma Gandhi on Prison Reform: Referring to Lord Lytton's statement in his recent address to the Calcutta Rotary Club that Government only hamper and spoil by interference in the work of prison reform, which should be undertaken only by humanitarian agencies, Mahatma Gandhi writes in Young India of the 18th instant: "As an old and experienced prisoner, however, I believe that Government have to begin the reform Lord Lytton will have his hearers to undertake. Humanitarians can but supplement Government efforts. As it is, the humanitarian, if he attempted anything, will first have to undo the mischief done in prisons where the environment hardens the criminal tendency, and in the case of innocent prisoner they learn how to commit crimes without being detected. I hold that humanitarian effort cannot cope with the evil wrought in the jails. Lord Lytton must have recognised this patent fact when in his introduction he talked of substituting 'reformation for retribution as the basis of our Penal Code.' But evidently in winding up his speech he forgot that he had intended his Penal Code to be the basis of reform, and as he realised that he had no reform to show to the credit of his Government, wound up by saying that it was no business of Government to attempt the reform."

Swadeshism in England: The Hindu, Madras, writes in its issue of the 20th instant: It is only in India that Swadeshism is viewed with suspicion by the authorities. In England His Majesty the King himself leads the way in advocating the encouragement of indigenous industries. Reuter reports a dramatic incident which occurred at the British Industries Fair yesterday in which His Majesty has given us a striking example of the Swadeshi spirit. On hearing that the type-writers used by Government offices were of a foreign manufacture he is reported to have exclaimed: "If British type-writers are used by other Governments, why are they not used by our own?" and added that it was a scandal into which he would personally enquire. Indians could point out to a thousand and one scandals of a deeper hue, but the pity is that we have none placed in high authority over us who would take such personal interest in our national affairs as the King.

NOTES

The Indian Budget: The outstanding features of the Government of India Budget for the current financial year are the abolition of the excise duty, a further remission of provincial contributions and no new taxation. The revenue for the year 1926-27 is expected to bring in a surplus of 305 lakhs, the estimated revenue being 133 crores and expenditure 130 crores. Of this surplus 175 lakhs will go to meet the abolition of the excise duty and 125 lakhs will be devoted to a further reduction of provincial contributions. In this latter respect. Bengal has always been the most favoured province as being thoroughly exempt from contributions from the beginning and Madras gets again the lion's share of the reduction, while the claims of Bombay, though contributing more to the Imperial revenue, have been completely ignored. Though Sir Basil Blackett may congratulate himself on his surplus budget and the sound finance which has made it possible, the country, however, cannot find any reason to congratulate the Finance Member. If the production of surpluses alone were sound finance, then credit should go to Sir Basil. But, sound finance should always connote increasing prosperity and contentment of the people. Judged by this standard, however, Sir Basil's financial administration is a failure. Surely, we do not want a surplus budget which starves essential services and takes away much from the poor taxpayer without giving him anything adequate in return. The abolition of the Excise Duty which Sir Basil makes much of has been acknowledged on all hands as long due. The same applies also to provincial contributions. As regards military expenditure, though we are assured of a paltry reduction of 1½ crores in the coming year, it is still higher than that recommended by the Inchcape Committee. And if only the Government were really solicitous about the interests of the masses which it professes to be, it would have lost no time in bringing down the postal rates to the old level. For all these reasons, therefore, the Budget is likely to meet with heavy opposition from all parties in the Assembly and the Swarajists are contemplating throwing out the Finance Bill wholesale. The proposed reservation of Rs. 50 lakhs from last year's surplus for an archæological fund, can well be utilised in other ways.

A Serious Indictment: Apart from the particular significance of Mr. Goswami's adjournment motion in the Assembly on the hunger-strike among the Regulation and Ordinance prisoners in Mandalay Jail which it carried by an overwhelming majority, the revelations of the Forward from Col. Mulvany's evidence before the Jails Committee which Mr. Goswami quoted serve to show the callous and inhuman treatment meted out to State prisoners. And the strangest part of the affair is that this damaging indictment was not made by an interested outsider but by an official who was directly concerned with the administration of the Jails department. The Colonel stated that not only was the solitary confinement to which State prisoners were subjected positively inhuman, but that misleading reports were deliberately submitted to Government. "I feel very strongly on the point," he said, "and I write under the greatest restraint. I consider that the share I was compelled to accept in the painful business was and is a disgrace which can never be obliterated and I cannot say any less than that my feelings were outraged by the cruelty of treatment I was ordered and expected to carry out." Nor was this all. The Colonel submitted his report to the Inspector-General of Prisons expressing his opinion against solitary confinement, because it would drive sensitive prisoners mad. But the Inspector-General returned the letter, asking him to reconsider it, because "it had to go to Simla and would arouse Olympian wrath" adding that "the degree of confinement was dictated by the Police", and requested that he should withdraw his report and substitute another in its place to the effect that the prisoners in solitary confinement were permitted exercises daily and that they were cheerful and keeping good health. But what was the attitude of the Jails Committee in this matter? It simply brushed aside Col. Mulvany's evidence and expressed its satisfaction at the treatment meted out to State prisoners. The only reply Government could give in defence was that this alleged ill-treatment took place in 1915 and that things have improved since then. But promptly came the contradiction to this from Lala Lajpat Rai, who had been himself a Regulation prisoner subsequently. Who knows how many evidences like that of Col. Mulvany have been suppressed and whitewashed?

Worship in Islam: We are indebted to Rev. E. E. Calverley, Ph. D., for the English translation of Al Ghazzali's Book of Thya published by the Christian Literature Society, Madras. Islam and Worship are inseparable. One who abandons the Islamic worship is called a Kafir who has freed himself from the protection of Mahommed. Worship is the devotional expression of Islam. Anyone who wishes to know something of Islam will find this translation a most useful one. Al Ghazzali is considered a learned ancient authority on the traditions and practices of Islam. Excellence of worship, inward acts and outward signs connected with the prayer, Imam and Friday congregations, are some of the subjects dealt with in the book. It contains hundreds of quotations from learned men of those days to support some of the sanest of views. It may be found very useful to educated Indians who will find in it a useful solvent of communal differences if only they listen to what their own religion teaches. Very suggestive is the story of Abu Abdulla Bin Yasar Al Basri who was once worshipping in the mosque at Basra, when a side of the mosque fell. Thereupon the people gathered together, but he was not the least cognizant of it until he withdrew from the worship. Amir Bin Abdulla was one of the most lowly of worshippers and when he would worship, his daughter would perhaps beat the tambourine, the women would talk of whatever they want in the house and he would hear that but would not understand it. The translation is in a very easy style and the translator deserves congratulations on the most useful work he has done. The index adds value to the book. The book is handy and nicely printed. It is priced at Rs. 2-8.

A Missionary Enterprise: The Report of the Union Mission Tuberculosis Sanatorium, Arogyavaram, near Madanapalle, (South India) for the years 1915-25, bears eloquent testimony to the valuable work the Christian Missionaries are doing in the field of medical relief to which we have often referred in appreciative terms in these columns. The institution was started on July 19, 1915, and owes its origin to the efforts of a small band of enthusiastic medical missionaries representing seven Missionary Societies in South India. The Sanatorium is situated at an excellent place 2,500 ft. above sea-level, four miles outside Madanapalle, and enjoys an equable climate throughout the year. It is aptly called "Arogyavaram" meaning thereby that health is given there by God in answer to prayers. The Sanatorium has provision for 142 beds. The daily average number of patients during the first year was 69·4, but during the succeeding years the number gradually increased until at last it reached 136·2 last year. The number of patients treated has almost doubled during the ten years. While the patients during the first few years came mostly from South India, during the latter half of the period, they have come from Travancore in the South to Calcutta in the North. During the first few years, most of the patients were Christians, but during the last five years, Hindus and Mahomedans have been just in the majority. All classes and communities are well represented and usually about 20 per cent of the patients who are too poor to pay anything are admitted free of charge. The service rendered by this institution to the public at large and the whole of India is thus incalculable and, as such, it deserves every encouragement in its campaign against Tuberculosis. We are particularly glad to see that the Sanatorium authorities are not misusing the ministry of healing for their conversion propaganda unlike the Matunga Leper Asylum, Bombay, to which we referred last year.

Purity Work in Calcutta: The splendid work that is being done by the Calcutta Vigilance Association towards the eradication of the social evil in the city, needs no mention here. It is estimated that between 1600 and 2000 young girls of from 9 to 13 years of age or even younger, mostly kidnapped from villages, are at present detained for immoral purposes in Calcutta brothels, and this number is increasing year by year. The Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act which came into operation in 1923 gives powers to the Police to remove from houses of ill-fame all girls under the age of 14. But this cannot be done until suitable provision is made for them. The Calcutta Vigilance Association thereupon prepared a scheme in 1924 for a Rescue Home for the reception of non-Christian minor girls and His Excellency Lord Lytton in an inspiring appeal commended it to public support and encouragement. But, from a copy of the Annual Report of the Association for 1924-25, we see that public enthusiasm in the cause is flagging and that only a paltry sum of Rs. 12,000 out of the required one lakh has so far been contributed. We would, therefore, strongly appeal on behalf of the Association to the public of Bengal to bring the Rescue Home into existence as early as possible.

Economics and Social Reform: Mr. E. Govindan, in a communication published elsewhere, draws attention to the change in social outlook produced even among the most orthodox by the inexorable operation of the Science of Economics. In several parts of the country, the financial burden which marriage customs impose upon the people is incalculable. Apart from the heavy dowries which the bride's party has to give to the bridegroom, the marriage festivities which are spread over more than five days entail heavy expense and instances are not wanting where people have borrowed heavily to celebrate marriage festivities in all their grandeur with no thought for the morrow. But, of late, a custom has grown up in South India of poor people performing their marriage ceremonies in the course of one day in such temples as Tirupati, and we are glad to see that such a wholesome custom is getting itself established even in out-of-the-way villages. We only wish that the rich set a good example to the poor in this respect.

Insufficient Hospital Accommodation: The adjournmnnt motion that was recently moved in the Madras Legislative Council on the incident of the death of a Law College student owing to the insufficiency of beds in the General Hospital, reveals a scandalous state of things in respect of hospital accommodation in that city. Although on paper Madras has a larger number of beds per thousand than other cities, the case in point brings into relief its inability to meet such grave contingencies. The benighted Presidency would do well to emulate the example of philanthropic Bombay in increasing its hospital accommodation. We hope Government and the Corporation will lose no time in bestirring themselves on this matter.

An Undesirable Innovation: At the annual banquet given by the President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation to the Governor, an innovation was introduced which is objectionable on more than one ground. A silver vessel filled with wine, we are told, was handed round and it went the round of the whole company beginning from the President and ending with the guest of the evening, each person taking a sip out of the cup. This was an ancient Anglo-Saxon custom originally intended as a precaution against the host administering posion to his guests in wine. Why it should be revived in India where, among the higher castes, sipping from the same cup is regarded as uncleanly and not permissible even as between parents and children, it is not easy to understand. We also object to this insidious way of indoctrinating unsuspecting guests into the liquor habit. We trust that the next President, whoever he may be, will not regard this as a healthy precedent to be perpetuated at Corporation dinners.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MARCH 6, 1926.

THE INDORE MAHARAJA'S ABDICATION.

Mysterious, says the Gita, is the course of action. The Maharaja Tukoji Rao Holkar would not have dreamt when some years ago he admitted the singing girl, Mumtaz, to his favour that the consequence will be that one day he will have to abdicate his gadi. Mumtaz, according to all accounts, was treated as a queen or rather as few queens are treated by their royal husbands. But as is always the case with passion, a sudden revulsion took possession of one of the couple—in this case, the woman. She found means of escaping from her gilded surroundings. This but added fuel to the fire of the Maharaja's passion for her and he longed to have her back in Indore with all the fervour of his high-strung emotional nature. His entourage caught the contagion and laid plans to restore her to their master at any cost. The last plan was to kidnap her in a motor car from the friend she had found in Bombay. The couple were followed up Malabar Hill on the evening of January 13th last year. Their car was stopped by another colliding against it, and out of the latter stepped out some men who tried to get hold of Mumtaz and drag her into their car. In the confusion which ensued, one of the men shot and mortally wounded her companion, and the party had nearly succeeded in carrying her off, when by an accident some English military officers happening to pass that way interfered and rescued her. The men were arrested and tried by the Bombay High Court. Three were sentenced to death but one of them becoming mad, when he was waiting to be hanged, was sent to a Lunatic Asylum where he is still confined. The other two were duly executed. The other accused, with the exception of one man, were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. The public were not satisfied that these men were the arch-culprits and the Judge in his summing up to the Jury referred to a hidden hand which instigated the crime. Counsel for the defence of the principal accused pleaded for a lenient sentence on the ground that the men were obviously only hired agents and that they had not themselves any motive to murder Mr. Bawla.

There were rumours that the Government of India were taking action to find out the hidden hand behind the crime. But few sensations outlast a whole year. The public had well-nigh forgotten the whole painful episode when suddenly, at the end of January this year, it was announced that the Maharaja Holkar had been given the alternative of appearing before a Commission to be appointed to enquire into his connection with the Bawla murder case, but that it was open to His Highness to decline the offer. The Government communique was silent as to what the consequence would be of his taking the latter course, but it was clear that it could only be abdication. The Maharaja took nearly a month to consider his course and sought counsels from eminent Indian lawyers and administrators. At last it was announced on Saturday last that he had abdicated in favour of his son and that the abdication had been accepted by the Governor-General. The Maharaja's letter of abdication has since been published and in it he says that he has decided on this course as a matter of principle, as he holds that ruling Princes in his position could not be brought to trial. "Rightly or wrongly," he says, "I have all along adhered to the belief that neither on the analogy of international law nor as a matter resting upon treaty is a Prince of my position liable to be tried". He refers to a letter which he wrote to Government in 1919 on the suggestion, contained in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, of the trial of ruling Princes by a Commission on which their Order should be represented, and adds: "It is not my purpose to enter into argument on this point any further, but holding strongly as I do the views set forth in the letter as to the status, rights and privileges of a Ruler of my position, I cannot persuade myself to act contrary to my convictions and to accept a Commission of Enquiry. Rather than sacrifice the principle for which I have stood throughout my career as a ruler, it would be more dignified to sacrifice my own self by abdication". The Maharaja proceeds to say that he fully realizes that the world from the mere fact of his not forcing an inquiry may wrongly draw its own conclusions as to his guilt, and may never realize that it was not consciousness of guilt but adherence to principle which had determined his action. "Hence", he concludes, "I abdicate my throne in favour of my son on the understanding that no further enquiry into my alleged connection with the Malabar Hill tragedy will be made." The Agent to the Governor-General replying the same day on behalf of the Government of India gave the desired undertaking and added: "Your Highness's abdication in favour of your son must, therefore, be considered complete in every respect."

The Maharaja is in error in thinking that the world will not realize that it was not consciousness of guilt that had determined his action. On the contrary, the world is far too much inclined to take a charitable view of the escapades of persons in high place. The world argues that the position of utter irresponsibility in which Indian ruling Princes find themselves is such as to undermine the moral sense of all but the strongest natures. It is, therefore, willing to forget in Princes follies which, in the case of ordinary men, will lead to their being branded as moral lepers. As for the Maharaja Holkar's complicity in the Malabar Hill murder, we adhere to the opinion which we expressed on the conclusion of the trial in the Bombay High Court. "The Maharaja", we wrote, "by virtue of his position as the ruler of a State, had no opportunity of contradicting the allegations made with reference to him before the Court, and it will not, therefore, be fair to take his silence as amounting to a confirmation of them. Nor has there been any proof that His Highness was privy to or

cognisant of the conspiracy in which some of his officers and servants were engaged to kidnap Mumtaz." While there seems to be no room for doubt that the Maharaja, in his anxious desire to get back the woman, did his utmost to achieve the object, there is no evidence whatever that he intended or countenanced the idea of violent crime in the accomplishment of his heart's desire. While, therefore, we (and the world) have no difficulty in believing that the Maharaja was not actuated by a guilty conscience in deciding on his abdication, we regard the "principle" on which he takes his stand as dangerous in the highest degree to his own State as well as to States which have the misfortune to be situated in its neighbourhood. That principle, shortly, is that a man merely because he happens to be born a Prince is entitled with impunity to commit any offence he pleases without being called to account either by the victims or by those who are bound to protect their lives and liberties. The logical consequence of this principle is that British India should have declared war against Indore and, perhaps, annexed it as the result of conquest. British India is precluded from following this course just because it is the paramount power, and it is by virtue of being so that it has a right to call ruling Princes to account for gross personal misconduct or maladministration. His Highness's decision is wise, but his reasons for it are far otherwise. Before concluding, we should say that we cannot see why the Maharaja should make the abandonment of further enquiry into the affair the condition precedent of his abdication. His protest that he is abdicating on a principle and not from consciousness of guilt, would be unmistakably vindicated, if an enquiry establishes his innocence of any complicity in it.

THE TAXATION ENQUIRY COMMITTEE.

The Indian Taxation Enquiry Committee which was appointed in May 1924, has recently submitted its report. The Committee was asked to examine the manner in which the burden of taxation is distributed at present between the different classes of the population, to consider whether the whole scheme of taxation, central, provincial and local, is equitable and in accordance with economic principles and, if not, in what respects it is defective, and to report on the suitability of alternative sources of taxation. It was also further instructed to institute such an enquiry into the economic condition of the people as it might consider necessary for the purpose and to report on the adequacy of the material already available and to make suggestions as to the best manner in which it may be supplemented and the most suitable agency for a wider economic enquiry. It may be remembered that the Todhunter Committee was condemned by public opinion, as it amounted more or less to putting the cart before the horse in the absence of reliable information as to the economic condition of the people and their capacity to bear any further taxation. The latter part of the terms of reference was, therefore, subsequently transferred to the Economic Enquiry Committee presided over by Sir M. Visveswaraiah. But, as the report of this Committee was made available only when the Taxation Committee was drafting its report, it could not derive any material help from it. And even if it had itself conducted such a special enquiry, the Committee doubts whether it would have been of any value for its purpose at all. In the circumstances, the Committee was forced to fall back upon general considerations regarding incomes and standards of living of typical classes of the population. Its conclusions may be of much value from the theoretical point of view, but are not of any use to the practical administrator, since they are formed more on fancies and text-book maxims than on realities. The Committee is, therefore, naturally misled into thinking that excepting two classes—the landless agricultural labourers and the small traders in towns—the burden of taxation borne by the people is comparatively light. In fact, the whole tenour of the Report is based on this wrong assumption that the people of India can afford to bear additional burdens, a conclusion that stands condemned, on its own admission, owing to the lack of reliable statistical material. Of the various means which the Committee has suggested for increasing the resources of the local bodies, the proposals for giving the Municipalities power to tax advertisements and to levy a fee for the registration of marriages in selected areas are not likely to meet with approval.

In regard to the last part of the reference, the recommendations of the Committee fall under two heads: remission of taxation in certain cases, and proposals for further taxes to substitute those removed or reduced. Among the former may be mentioned the reduction in the customs duties on conventional necessities, especially on sugar, the removal of the export duty on hides, the standardisation of land revenue and a reduction of court fees in certain cases, and among new sources of taxation suggested are the regrading of the income-tax between Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 25,000, the introduction of a super-tax on income from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 50,000, enhancement in the rate of duty on country-made foreign liquors and an increase in the excise duty on country spirits in certain provinces, a general extension of probate duties, extension of the tax on entertainments and betting, imposition of taxation on tobacco, export duties on lac, oil-seeds, bones and other manures, and the imposition of income-tax on agricultural incomes. Certain of the Committee's findings are noteworthy. The Committee points out that the defects in the present system of land revenue assessment are a want of definiteness both as regards the rate and the basis of assessment and that, as a scheme of taxation, it is not only not progressive, but actually tends in the opposite direction. At one end is the largest landlord who pays a comparatively small part of his surplus, while on the other is the cultivator of the uneconomic holding paying a disproportionate contribution which often drives him into the arms of the money-lender. Another of the defects pointed out by the Committee is that only a small amount of the land revenue is spent on rural development and the material well-being of the poor agriculturists and hence its unpopularity. The Committee, therefore, recommends an income-tax on agricultural incomes or a death duty and the standardisation of the land revenue on the basis of an annual value, ie., gross produce less cost of production, and at a rate not exceeding 25 per cent of the annual value. The Committee's attitude towards the salt duty can hardly be called fair. It says that the figures of consumption do not indicate that the duty has restricted the consumption below the quantity necessary for health and that there is much to be said for the continuance of the salt duty. This argument of the Committee is hardly convincing. Because salt is an absolute necessity, the mass of the community cannot do without it and it is all the more necessary, therefore, for any Government which cares for the prosperity and contentment of the people to tax it only as a last resort, when all other avenues have been explored. The statistics of consumption is, therefore, not the proper criterion of the justification of this tax. Another of the reasons that have led the Committee to recommend the continuance of the duty is the facility of collecting additional revenue in cases of grave emergency. The morale is thus sacrificed to facility of collection in taxation.

NATIONAL LIFE AND HARMONY.

(By Mrs. Kusudini Ganti).

The pages of history reveal that the prevalence of materialism and vice precedes a national downfall. It is evident that the practice of religion or virtue to any extreme also works out a national decay.

With the dawn of the doctrine of Theism, India rose to the highest pinnacle of her spiritual glory. The worship of one True God, as the father, protector and saviour became the redeeming faith of an ancient era. Its adjunct thesis upheld this theory that the salvation of the soul is to be attained by its deliverance from all worldly ties and affections. When this theory had its hold on the minds of the people, they began to grow indifferent to all things and concerns of the world and worldly pursuits. This faith fertilized the spirit of mendicancy among millions, most of whom left home as recluse, and those who stayed back remained as the most indolent and supine class of the human society.

Whether this Theistic doctrine of the Upanishads, that developed a mystic faith which believed in a divine providence in every event and detail of the life of the devotee, had any spiritual contribution to the Theory of Karma or not, this philosophy grew to be a religious faith with the people giving birth to the spirit of Fatalism. Fatalists said: 'Do what you may, try as you will, you can not avert your fate pre-decreed by the Providence after the fruits of your previous birth.' When this faith held a stronger grip on the hearts of the people, they became irresponsible and lethargical workers in the field of life. This fatalism totally divested the people of self-respect, self-help, self-reliance, courage and ingenuity, and sapped them of all the moral sinew that could ever work out any success in any sphere of life. This fatalism was so instilled in the very vein and blood of the people, that even now, after the lapse of a century and a half of British rule, they are incapable of getting rid of the effects of its baneful venom. So long as mendicancy and fatalism do not bid farewell to the Indian shores, India's economic life remains stranded.

The pride of ancient India was her lofty womanhood. Versed in deep knowledge, skilled in arts and artifice, Indian women enjoyed the greatest freedom at home and abroad. Books written by them on higher mathematics and Sanskrit and such other subjects and their works of paintings rouse awe and admiration even in the minds of the modern men. In later period, worldly sages with nothing but the silt of spirituality left in them conserved their energies and activities in the arena of home alone. She was the heroine of joint home of joint hearth, consisting of about a hundred or more members of the one and the same family. It was not only a residence for them all but a rest-house for the guests, travellers, strangers, the poor and the needy. It was based on the highest principles of religion and humanity and was an institution that combined almost all the civic needs and features of the modern hostel, hospital, social and charity-centres all in one, without any cost or trouble to the outsiders. The sylvan homes were fortified against all urgency as well as against the various evils of the modern society. Under its shady, soothing roof centrally situated the lady of the house with crown of glory—that worlds could not purchase—the very personification of wisdom and virtue. The heroic devotion, deep affection, self-effacement and self-control displayed by the Indian ladies is unique in the history of the world. But her mental horizon rendered hazy, from the throne of sovereignty she descended to the thraldom of meniality. And no truer chord touched the harp of human history than Tennyson's muse:—

The woman's cause is man's;
They rise or sink together.

Hindu civilization, religion and culture collectively and vigorously centred all their force to build up a broad domestic and deeper social life as the means to consolidate its national life as well as to gather profuse harvest of joy and spiritual bliss. Its rigid religious rules, social custom and four varnashrams rendered luxuriant growth of the excellences of heart, spirituality, peacefulness and bountiful charity; but for the utter lack of scope for the freedom of thought, individuality, ingenuity, independence and temerity, the moral stamina of a glorious nation was totally undermined.

The warring nations vigilant of national consolidation were not aspirant of that internal development of far and near domestic and deeper social attachments, that has been the source of the richest heritage and wealth of the Eastern life, culture, literature and spirituality. On the other hand, their combative instinct has developed an abnormal love for freedom, individuality and enjoyment that came between the blending of old and new ties of nearest affections in a larger life of love and amity. But people have a craving for human society and larger life; and when the evasive nature of man drifts away to the whirlpool of society-life that is ever demanding in expenditure, insatiable in desire and inordinate in love of pleasure, luxury and display with its attendant various evils and crimes, he is only buffeted in the hopes of a futile self-realization; for the order of things contribute only towards a nobler evolution and self-realization. The complication reaches its climax when marriage is dreaded of and maternity is denied which threatens domestic felicity as well as national stability.

ADDISON AS A SOCIAL REFORMER.

(By Mr. R. L. Phansalkar.)

In the history of the English literature, the name of Addison, as Professor Hudson puts it, is essentially associated with that of Steele. Addison had already, distinguished himself as the composer of Latin verses English poems and some prose writings. Although his "Campaign", "The Treatise of Medals" and the "Battle of the Cranes and Pygmies" were appreciated at all the English academies and even by the fastidious French critic, Boileau, they never raised Addison far above mediocrity. Addison had further displayed his capacity by writing the popular tragedy of Cato loudly applauded at the Drury Lane Theatre and at other places. But when he began to contribute to the Tatler, the paper started by Steele, both the writer and his reader found that Addison had a peculiar marvel of his own in this domain. The Essays are chiefly characterized by the happy strokes of wit and the Dean Inge humour, occasional flashes of imagination, moralising element to an agreeable extent, and, above all, the deliberate

realpatidar.com

omission of the then common lampoons and bitter satires. The style of the Essays is of a gliding nature. Prof. Hoare calls it "precisely the style of an educated man's conversation". Dr. Johnson observes: "His prose is the model of middle style; on grave subjects not formal, on light occasions not grovelling; pure without scrupulosity and exact without apparent elaborating. Whoever wishes to attain an English style, familiar but not coarse and elegant but not ostentatious must give his days and nights to the study of Addison".

The regaling and even elevating nature of his humour draws a host of readers towards the Essays. Let him be at the highest of his discourse; he will never descend into the tone of a Jack Pudding or a Cynic. Throughout, the tone is of a gentleman, in whom the quickest sense of the ridiculous is constantly tempered by good nature and good breeding. We feel the charm; we give ourselves up to it; but we strive in vain to analyse it.

The historical importance of the Essays is of considerable value. It is in Addison's Essays that the conspicuous dawn of drawing characters takes place. His happy portrait of Sir Roger is the standard of a typical mediaeval gentleman of conventional tastes and gentle breeding, without any aweful defect or an unnatural trait. His Essays border on that period of literature when the Drama began to retire to the background and when the advent of the Novel was approaching fast.

The Literature of the Restoration period had created in the public mind the righteous notion that there was some connection between genius and profligacy, between the domestic virtues and the sullen formalities of the Puritans. Also, the masses were groping between the two extremes of political opinion viz., absolute submission to the reigning monarch or full realization of individual rights. Addison's work, therefore, was to harmonize conflicting social elements, to bring order out of chaos in the sphere of criticism and to form right ways of thinking about questions of morals and tastes and good breeding. "He was the chief architect of public opinion in the eighteenth century." That century is sometimes regarded as an age of destructive analysis but in reality its energies were largely devoted to political, social and literary reconstruction. The literature is unreal, affected, remote from life. Real feelings were, however, put into comedy but comedies as a rule were corrupt. The general public read books of history, poetry and criticism. They hated the tone of the Court, but were influenced by its grace and elegance. Thus the nation growing in wealth every day was ready to be moulded by the influence of some master-hand. To prove that reconciliation was possible between wit and virtue, to show that under the English constitutional monarchy, aristocracy and democracy might be combined in harmony, and also that humanity and culture were not in antagonism with religion, was the task of an essayist, man of letters and statesman—all in one. Addison was, therefore, the man best fitted for the situation. He himself expressed more than once that his endeavour was "to enliven morality with wit" or "to temper wit with morality". The place assigned to woman in the Spectator was new. Rightly enough the Essays emphasised that "she is not only the companion of man but the source of grace and refinement in social life".

THE VIDHVA VIVAH SAHAIK SABHA, C. P.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

As your valuable paper is the best medium for the ventilation of matters pertaining to social reform among the members of the Hindu community, I crave the hospitality of its columns in inviting the attention of gentlemen interested in the Widow Marriage Movement, that my humble self has recently taken up the duties of Honorary Secretary to Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha in the Central Provinces. Since the publication of a notice in certain newspapers I have received applications from several persons who are prepared to marry suitable Hindu widows as will be seen from the particulars of six gentlemen given below:

A. Widower, age 27, Teacher in an Indian State, income Rs. 70 p.m.

B. Widower, age 31, Pleader in an Indian State, income Rs. 300 p.m.

C. Bachelor, age 26, Teacher in U. P., income Rs. 100 p.m.

D. Bachelor, age 25, Journalist in Bombay, income Rs. 200 p.m.

E. Widower, age 32, Merchant, Jubbulpore, income Rs. 200 p.m.

F. Widower, age 36, Teacher in Bihar, income Rs. 100 p m.

G. Bachelor, age 26, Government Service in U. P., income Rs. 60 p.m.

There are several other male applicants (a few of whom are not unwilling to contract inter-provincial marriages) with whom I am in correspondence, but, so far, I have received no inquiries, (with one exception) from the guardian of widows, nor from gentlemen who would kindly consent to form a Society for the amelioration of the hard lot of the poor Hindu widows. The hope that an appeal in your paper may attract the attention of the reformers in these provinces is my apology for troubling you with this letter.

Yours etc.,

Jubbulpore,
1st March
1926.

Hony. Secretary, V. V. S. Sabha,

WANTED INDIVIDUAL ACTION,

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read in the last issue of your Reformer a letter written by Mr. N. N. Menon asking the national leaders to abdicate there leadership and advising the people to resort to individual action. He also says that he feels certain that the millennium will come much earlier if they only boycott English goods, do not observe caste etc., and adds that no advice of a political leader or a mandate from the Congress is required for these. An excellent idea and an easy solution of the problem indeed! But who is to bell the cat? Does Mr. Menon realise the result of the danger, if every individual of the 320 millions of people of India resorts to actions according to his or her fancy? He admits that it was on account of a few ill-advised persons who could not keep up to non-violence that the Chauri Chawra cause failed. Exactly so. If the movement failed to achieve the expected result in spite of the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi and other responsible national leaders, how is Swaraj going to be achieved by individual action which must necessarily be a clash of interests, principles and details, for even our national leaders who have got the experience of at least a quarter of a century in the political field and are in close touch with political developments both in India and elsewhere are not unanimous in their convictions as to the utility or otherwise of the boycott and other problems, although they are all more or less aspiring for the goal of Swaraj according to their own ideal and interpretation? I shall be satisfied if Mr. Menon can give some instances in political, social, religious, martial or any other field of action at any time in the history of humanity where success of a far-reaching consequence was attained by individual action without leadership and the collective will of the people. Who is to instruct the people to resort to individual action if every leader is to retire from the field? Morever, I cannot make out how the leaders stand in the way of our wearing country-made clothes, purchasing Indian-made articles, doing away with caste and other things mentioned by Mr. Menon. They are, on the contrary, advising the people, and exhorting them in season and out of season to do exactly as Mr. Menon wants the people to do. Indians as a whole want to be first convinced at least intellectually about the success of any scheme to be worked out and it is the duty of its framers to place the masses in a position to understand the whole programme. I, being one of the latter, request Mr. Menon to kindly enlighten me and others of my way of thinking in the matter.

ECONOMICS AND SOCIAL REFORM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I am writing these lines with a view to reflect as fairly as possible the change of attitude towards social reform among Brahmins in rural parts, due to economic causes.

In a village next to mine, namely, Kuthanoor, Cheyyar Taluq, North Arcot District (South India), there live very poor but orthodox Brahmin families. They cannot be said to be well-read in the Shastras, but it can be more rightly pointed out that in daily life and on ceremonial occasions, they care more for the letter than for the spirit of Shastraic injunctions.

Recently two such families in the above village celebrated marriages. You know among Brahmins the function lasts for five days. In the present case, this notion was entirely given up and what is now obtaining in holy places like Tirupati has come to stay in an out-of-the-way village.

This may appear insignificant in the eyes of those who always go in for big sensational things, but to those discerning critics of Indian social life and customs, it has an importance all its own and is likely to have far-reaching consequences in future.

As an instance of social ferment, I may also add that some months back a Kathyayana married a Brahmin girl of a different sub-caste. I withhold their names for personal reasons. So far there is no social ban on the party concerned.

I am glad to say that the Suklayajurvadis in our parts are slowly adopting a right perspective in social reform and the Science of Economics is after all proving a mighty leveller.

North Eluppai, Natteray P.O., Yours etc.,

BURMESE WOMEN.

Mr. John Pillay writes to the Welfare :—

In these days of aggressive feminism, when the popular conception of ideal womanhood seems to consist in being hair-less, shapeless and sex-less, when ideal womanhood seems to consist in being no woman at all, in fact, it is gratifying to know that there are still some women who are content enough to remain as God meant them to be. Of such are the Burmese women.

At the present moment the Western ideal of womanhood (conceived by women themselves) appears to have a strong appeal to the rest of womankind. There seems to be a powerful tendency on the part of the women of hitherto retired nature to look up to the Western women as examples of model women, and to emulate their mode, philosophy and conception of life. And this tendency is becoming increasingly evident. Egyptian women have discarded their veils, and the Turkish women are no longer the mere chattel and toy of their men. Even the Indian women seem to have rallied to the banner of Western women's idealism, for there are to-day quite a good few Indian women who are so proud of having achieved the status of their Western sisters.

But not so the Burmese women. They certainly have heard all about this terrible new woman and even have seen a few specimens of the breed, but they are decidedly not captured by the glamour. They are not against this new woman, but yet not in sympathy: they do not ridicule, neither do they envy. True, there are some who ape the foreign style, it may be in dress or in the art of living, but they are those only who have espoused foreign husbands, and are of such small number that they do not count at all. As for the other wonderful laurels which the Western women have lately acquired, such as social, economic and political freedom the Burmese women already have always had. They made such a song of women having taken to oars, and of having worked as porters and drivers during the last War. But there are Burmese women to-day, as always, who are earning their living by rowing ferry boats and driving carts (they are equivalent for motors), and carrying luggage and things. And as for being sexless, manly and such other Spartan qualities, the Burmese women have no use, no liking for them. No, they wish always to remain as womanly as a woman ought to be according to religious teachings, ancient examples and tradition. They would not merely sooner be, but actually strive to be the complement of man, the ministering angel in the home, the mother of as many as God shall bestow. And withal by no means a social, economic or political nonentity. The late ex-Queen Supayalat was an epitome of Burmese womanhood. She married whom she liked, practically got the throne for her husband, and virtually ruled; a religious woman, good wife, fond mother, generous friend, and very proud.

FREEDOM WITH DIFFERENCE.

The most outstanding quality of the Burmese women is their capability. They are extremely capable, alike in the sphere legitimately woman's and in man's sphere. In woman's sphere, they are universally admitted to be one of the best house-wives, the best mothers; and they are admitted by all to possess the acme of feminine grace, tenderness and charm. In man's sphere, they have a business capacity equal to man's and there have always been women financiers, traders, merchants, farmers, bazaar sellers and itinerant peddlers; they can fight with the strength of a man, can protect themselves against any odds, and they will not shrink from death. In fact, the Burmese woman combines in herself all the cream of womanliness and all that is manly. There have been many a St. Cecilia, and many a Johan of Arc as well.

A woman so capable must necessarily be independent of man or circumstances. She is utterly free, and can do what she fancies—if she so chooses. But she does not always choose. She likes to look up to her man, be protected and looked after by him, and so far as he is concerned she will be his mate, mother and menial. Herein is the difference between freedom desired by the Western woman and the freedom of the Burmese, that while the former's ultimate aim of freedom is in the equalizing of the sexes, the latter's dearest desire is to be as much a woman as good fortune will allow. A Burmese woman would sooner think of cutting her nose off than cutting off her hair, and as for playing football or riding a horse astride or donning a male apparel, she would rather be a drunkard than which there is nothing more unwomanly A Burmese woman will never ride a bicycle, and far from parading about in one-piece bathing costumes she will not expose her body beyond the wrists and the least possible of the toes, without at the same time going to the extreme of a ghastly garb which will cover up her pretty silks and her prettier face. Not to make too fine a point of it, the larger part of the freedom in which a Western woman revels, the Burmese woman considers licence.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The doctrine of self-determination which is a cult with the Western women is no cult to the Burmese: it is an inheritance, a birth-right. Being so the boon is never abused. Where else should the liberty for self-determination prove most beneficial if not in the power to choose one's own career in life. And, for all that there is to the contrary what career for a woman is greater, nobler and more natural than "motherhood?" For a woman, that is the summit of her mission in life, the beginning, the end, the one engrossing duty to her creator and to humanity. At least such is the light in which the Burmese woman interprets the purpose of her being. So motherhood, with all its sweet responsibilities (which some of the other women call drudgery), becomes her chief concern in life. And being a chief concern, she needs must be careful to avoid coming a cropper, as the phrase is. Therefore, in the matter of marriage, she determines for herself. She will marry the man with whom she thinks she can be happy for a life-time. Should, however, she find at any time that she had made a mistake, she could leave her failure behind, and she could marry another man straightaway, if such should be the mutual desire. Therefore are marriage and divorce so admirably simple: a mutual consent, some witnesses, and they are married or divorced in the sight of God, man and the law of the realm. Sometimes marriage may involve elaborate and protracted ceremony as a whim on the part of the principals, but divorce never: it is done in a minute, at any time the two shall say the word. Again, a marriage may be entirely an affair of parental arrangement in which the bride acquiesces unreservedly from a sense of filial duty. But divorce is entirely her own affair, and she will have it when she wills.

If, as probably, this utter simplicity of the rites of marriage and divorce had been the work of women, then it is a clear proof at once of how well a Burmese woman can look after herself, and how highly she esteems motherhood, for, if marriage and divorce had hard and fast rules, then life would have been far from free indeed, and motherhood an undertaking to be looked at several times before the leap. In the countries where marriage and divorce are not so simple the women are shy of matrimony, nay, they dread it so much that they have come to hate it. And hating it, they have unsexed themselves, and so consign the most important excuse for their existence on earth into the limbo of things discarded. But the Burmese women can afford to be true to their prescribed destiny, for marriage has no terrors for them—as no marriage should have. Nor are there any sort of humiliations: they have not to take their husbands' names, there is no visible sign of her state, such as the wedding ring, or that usual prefix of wifehood "Mrs." and they do not have to vow to "obey" their husbands. In marrying, they have not killed their souls: at the very first twinge they can repair to healthier climes. Furthermore, a widow may remarry at once, and there is in it no question of indecent haste. So also can a divorced woman, not being bothered about decree nisi and the time it takes to become absolute. As a matter of fact, a Burmese woman can marry another man before she is divorced or widowed. There is no law for bigamy. Her widowhood would follow (if her new spouse were a terrible fellow), and her divorce would follow automatically. But she does not do that sort of thing. She likes to clear the old mess first and begin on a new page. She does not do that sort of thing, because as has been said above, she does not wish to abuse the boon.

THE FRUITS OF SIX YEARS.

Dr. Francis Scott McBride, General Superintendent Anti-Saloon League of America, who has done heroic service in the cause of Prohibition, writes in the United Presbyterian:—

The fruits of the six years of prohibition are such as to make certain the success of this cause. The one who wants prohibition to be a success will not fail to note its progress. It is working too well for the wets.

These six years have contributed greatly towards adjusting the governmental machinery necessary to make prohibition really effective. Intoxicants cannot be taken away from twenty-five million users overnight. The corruption in public life, put there by a lawless liquor traffic, cannot be cleared out by by a single effort. The great money interests embraced in this traffic cannot all be diverted into better channels by the mere enacting of a law.

The situation at the beginning of 1926 is the most encouraging of any time in the history of the great reform. This is true notwithstanding the fact that the wet forces are making the most tremendous effort they have ever made to break prohibition. They shall, however, fail, though they are doing their best. "When the wicked spring as the grass and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever."

The accomplishments of these six dry years show the trend of the prohibition cause; they challenge our attention and call forth our devotion in finishing the fight. Prohibition has not reached the one hundred per cent. standard of perfection, but it is well on the way. Witness the following victories:

First, Legislation. National enforcement legislation includes the adoption of the national prohibition acts—the Volstead law and the supplemental enforcement acts; enforcement appropriations from year to year; the enlistment of the Cost Guard; the concentration of liquor in government warehouses. Thirty-three states had enforcement codes when prohibition was enacted. In all of the others except Maryland state enforcement laws were enacted. New York alone has repealed its code. In the two states whose laws the courts have declared invalid, new enforcement codes will be enacted at the earliest opportunity. In 1925 enforcement laws have been strengthened in Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Montano, Nebraska, Newada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregan, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah and Wyoming. Massachusettes enacted an enforcement statute by referendum in 1924 with a favourable vote more than 100,000 greater than any previous vote on the enforcement issue. State codes have also been enacted in California and Missouri following referendum victories. Efforts on behalf of the wets to secure wet legislation have been defeated in more than half of the states. Since prohibition was adopted there have been three national primaries and elections. Each one increased the majority committed to enforcement over preceding elections. This proves an enforcement legislation has the continued and increasing support of public opinion.

Second, Law Administration. The eighteenth amendment, the Volstead Act and other enforcement measures have been sustained by the supreme court. The supreme court has also established the fact that Congress has power to regulate the manufacture and distribution of non-alcoholic beverages. The executive and justice departments have declared that "the federal government will use all its resources for prohibition enforcement." New regulations provide for better supervision of industrial alcohol and non-beverage liquors, safeguard against the illegal use of wine intended for religious rites, safeguard against the use of potable liquors in non-beverage alcoholic preparations, and eliminate whisky as an ingredient in proprietary medicinal preparations. The customs service and the prohibition department are now co-ordinated under the assistant secretary of the treasury. Anti-smuggling treaties have been negotiated with nine nations, headed by Great Britain. Other treaties are now awaiting completion. Padlock injunctions were 90 per cent. higher in 1925 han in 1923. Prison sentences are given more freely—"Confines" are more effective than fines! The bootlegger is, however, paying the cost of his own prosecution. Wisconsin spent $184,850 in four years for enforcement and collected $1,391,417 in fines. Ohio's expenditure was $105,202.02 for 1925 and receipts in fines and penalties were $2,202,764.24. In 43 counties in Illinois they expended $47,560 and collected in fines $300,811. Fines and penalties amounting to $7,934,8546.9 have been imposed in cases tried in the federal courts.

Third, Benefits. The economic benefits of prohibition have been inestimable. Roger Babson gives great credit to prohibition for stimulation of trade because of the diversion of the billions of dollars formerly used for drink into constructive channels. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, has said: "There can be no doubt of the economic benefits of prohibition—prohibition is putting money in the family pocketbook." The social benefits were also great. Drunkenness has decreased. Arrests for intoxication were 350,000 fewer last year than the last wet year, although the police now arrest a far greater proportion of the drunks. The death rate has declined. Alcoholic insanity has been reduced approximately two-thirds. Drink-cure hospitals once numbered 275; now but 20 remain, and most of these are associated with general sanatariums and hospitals. The ethical benefits of prohibition, as well, are great. We have less political corruption, increased church membership and attendance, a better home life, a citizenship with a new note of service and with a greater moral fibre.

The Christian and the Christian Church made prohibition possible. The sixth anniversary of prohibition challenges us to do the more difficult task—to make possible the complete establishment of this potent, patriotic principle in our own country and its extension to the ends of the earth.

VACCINATION BY MOUTH.

The old-fashioned notion that the function of a doctor is to cure people who are ill is slowly disappearing, and one is coming to realise that in the future the principal function of medical science will be to prevent people from becoming ill. Instead of paying a doctor to make you better you will pay him to keep you well; as soon as a patient falls sick his fees, instead of beginning, will cease. This prospective revolution depends partly on the Public Health Services, the importance of whose work can scarcely be over-rated, and partly on the theory of immunisation. That blessed word Immunity means much and is but little understood. Everybody knows that when a child has had measles it is comparatively safe from another attack, and all sensible people realise that a vaccination scare is like a certificate of safety from small-pox. The manner in which this immunity is brought about is rather complicated, and is perhaps not yet fully understood—at any rate the recent important investigations of Professor Besredka of the Pasteur Institute do not wholly confirm previous ideas.

Unpleasant Methods.

But the main thing is that immunisation has been proved to be effective and practicable. Small-pox has practically been stamped out of Europe by it, and

nteric fever, which once held the record of decimating n army in the field, has ceased to be a factor of any nportance to army medical authorities. This is be- ıuse anti-typhoid inoculation is compulsory in the 'my. But it is not compulsory elsewhere and so ty- ıoid even is still rife amongst the civil population.

Hitherto it has been impracticable even to suggest ıat everyone should be artificially immunised against ıteric fever, because the method in use was rather ıpleasant and in many cases there was a definite ɔntra-indication for it. The subcutaneous injection of ead typhoid bacilli was usually followed by unpleasant 'mptoms for a day or two, the initial puncture had tle attraction for many people, and people suffering om various heart affections, from a fulness of the liver '—in the case of women—of the uterus were prohibit- l from enjoying its protection. It was not safe to in- ulate the very young or the very old. The new ethod of Professor Besredka suffers from none of ese disadvantages, since his immunising agent is con- ined in tabloid form, is taken through the mouth, has ) untoward re-actions, and is perfectly safe for infants, valids and the aged.

Immunity Local.

The discovery made by Professor Besredka—who is e successor of Metchnikoff at the Pasteur Institute— that immunity is a local thing. At present the injec- ɔn of a dead culture into the blood-stream is intended induce a general immunity, but the Besredka is this: at as all invading micro-organisms have a selective finity for some particular organ, so there should be a finite protective vaccine for each organ. Thus he und that dysentery and cholera bacilli make their way 'aight to the intestinal wall; a rabbit was inoculated th these bacilli through a vein in its ear, and was led five hours later. The autopsy showed all the cilli on the intestinal wall—they had made their way ere as fast as they could, disdaining all other homes. l that is necessary then to immunise against dysentery cholera is to immunise the intestinal wall, since this the only organ open to attack, and the best way of munising it is by the most direct route, that is, through e mouth. But there was a difficulty in the way, for e dead bacilli in the tablet could not find their way rough the wall at all times. Only when there was a :e excretion of bile was ingress possible. Professor 'sredka's solution to this difficulty was to include in e tabloid a certain proportion of synthesised bile to t as a sort of key to the gates on the walls of the estine. The tabloids are prepared by La Biotharapie Paris, according to the researches of Prof. Besredka. large stock is held in this country by G. Loucatos and ', Amarchand Building, Ballard Estate, Bombay.

The advantages of this new vaccination are obvious. e process is simple and safe, attended by no discomfort, :oretically sound; it demands no apparatus or skilled eadance and above all there is ample proof that it is ective. In 1923 a thousand people in Petrograd were :cinated by the mouth during an epidemic of Shiga's ɜentery; nine cases occurred amongst them, of which developed immediately after vaccination before im- ınisation was completed. In an epidemic at the litary School at La Fleche those vaccinated by the uth fared better than those vaccinated in the ordi- y way, and there are many contributory testimonies to its efficacy from both private and official sources in France. And this harmless, painless immunisation is possible against typhoid, dysentery, cholera and other diseases which intermittently scourge the East. Profes- sor Besredka's contribution to medical science is not yet universally known, but when it is and its efficacy univer- sally proved, his name will deserve a rank equal to the greatest of those who have dignified the profession of Galen with their wisdom and labour.—The Times of India, Bombay.

THE INDORE MAHARAJA'S ABDICATION.

Another Foreign and Political Department Communique dated March 3rd regarding the Maharaja of Indore's abdication states:—

"In a communique issued by this Department on 27th February, 1926, it was stated that the abdication of the Maharaja Holkar of Indore had been accepted by the Governor-General-in-Council and that a further communication on the subject would be issued in due course. The letter received from the Maharaja formally abdicating and the reply sent to him by the Agent to the Governor-General in Central India, accepting the abdication are now published for general information:—

Maharaja's Letter.

Camp Bijasani,
Febry. 26, 1926.

To
The Hon. Mr. Glancy, Agent to the Governor-General in Central India.

My honoured and valued friend,—

On behalf of His Excellency the Viceroy you offered me the option of either a Commission of Enquiry under the terms of the Government of India Resolution No. 426 (R) dated 29th October, 1920, Foreign and Political Department or a Committee of Enquiry composed of two members in regard to the Malabar Hill tragedy. Rightly or wrongly, I have all along adhered to the belief that neither on the analogy of international law nor as a matter resting upon Treaty is a Prince of my position liable to be tried. I would refer you to paras 29 to 31 of the letter of the Chief Minister to the Central India Agency dated 16th of December, 1919, in connexion with the recommendations made in Chapter X of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, a copy of which is annexed for ready reference. (This letter is not published.) It is not my purpose to enter into argument on this point any further but, holding strongly as I do the views set forth in the letter referred to as early as 8 years ago as to the status, rights and privileges of a Ruler of my position, I cannot persuade myself to act contrary to my convictions and to accept a Commission or Committee of Enquiry. Rather than sacrifice the principle for which I have stood throughout my career as a ruler, it would be more dignified to sacrifice my own self by abdication. I fully realized that the world from the mere fact of my not facing an enquiry may wrongly draw its own conclusions as to my guilt and may never realize that it was not the consciousness of guilt but adherence to a principle which had determined my action. Hence, I abdicate my throne in favour of my son on the understanding that no further enquiry into my alleged co nection with the Malabar Hill tragedy will be made. I have authorised Mr. D. M. Narasinga Rao to place before you my wishes in regard to future arrangements for my State, my family and myself and I feel confident His Excellency the Viceroy will be pleased to consider them sympathetically. I desire to express high consideration which I entertain for you and to subscribe myself as your sincere friend.

AGENT'S REPLY.

From

The Central India Agency,

Indore.

To Dated, Febr. 26, 1926.

The Maharaja of Indore.

My honoured and valued friend,—

I beg to acknowledge Your Highness's letter dated 26th February, 1926, in which Your Highness informs me of your objection to the appointment of a Commission of Enquiry in connection with the Bawla case. It is not for me in this letter to discuss the reasons which have led Your Highness to come to this decision. In the next place Your Highness expressed the intention of abdicating at once on the understanding that no further enquiry will be made into the alleged connection of Your Highness with the Bawla case. I am authorised on behalf of the Governor-General-in-Council to accept this Your Highness's formal abdication and to give at the same time the undertaking for which your Highness asks in regard to any further enquiries in the Bawla case. Your Highness's abdication in favour of your son must, therefore, be considered complete in every respect. I observe that all other matters are left for "sympathetic consideration" of His Excellency the Viceroy. As to these I shall await a visit from Mr. Narasinga Rao whom you have authorised to act on your behalf and communicate to Your Highness, in due course, the decisions of the Government of India I desire to express the high consideration which I entertain for you and to subscribe myself as your sincere friend.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Correction: In the further details of the Prohibition Convention at Delhi which we published last week, in the para under provisional budget, the amount under Executive Committee Meeting should be Rs. 1800 and not Rs. 1000, and the word "approximately" within brackets at the end should be deleted.

A Charity Concert: The charity concert held in the Sir Cowasji Jehangir hall on Friday the 26th February, in aid of the Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum, under the auspices of the Arya Mahila Samaj, was a great success. Many sympathisers were present on the occasion and an amount of Rs. 5,000 was realised. Mr. K. Natarajan, in the course of his speech, traced the history of the Orphanage and thanked the public for their sympathetic support and encouragement. Much credit is also due to Mrs. Atiya Begum for the success of the function.

The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association: The following is the programme of the Ladies' Elocution Competition that will be held under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association at the Vanita Vishram Hall, Bombay :— Tuesday, the 9th March at 6 p.m., Marathi Junior Competition. Wednesday, the 10th March 6 p. m., Marathi Junior Competition. Thursday, the 11th March, Gujarathi Junior and Senior Competition. Friday, the 12th March, Marathi Senior Competition. Saturday, the 13th March, from 5 to 7 p. m., Marathi Senior Competition. Sunday the 14th March, from 5 to 7 p. m. Prize Distribution.

Fourth Andhra Desa Kalavantula (Devadasi) Social Conference, Gudivada: Mr. G. Subbaiah, Treasurer of the Committee, writes:—The Reception Committee of the Conference met again and elected Mr. Asvadhasi Ramamoorty Mrudanga Vidvan, as its Chairman and Mr. Kale Suryaprakasam, B.A., L.T., Teacher, Pittapur Maharaja's College, Coconada, to the presidentship of the Mahasabha to come off on the 3rd and 4th of April, 1926, during the ensuing Easter. With the funds raised locally the arrangements for the Conference are proceeding briskly. It is a matter of some gratification that the movement has been able to evoke enthusiasm among the community especially the younger generation. It is earnestly hoped that, as already appealed for, the members of the community as well as those of other communities that wish well for our community will kindly help onwards the movement with their encouraging presence and contributions.

Purity Mission: Mr. V. V. Giri, the President of the last sessions of All-India Trade Union Congress which was held at Madras on the 9th and 10th January 1926, emphasised on the Purity Mission of Bombay in his speech which reads as follows:—It is the duty of Labour Associations not only to look after the economic welfare of their members but also to the improvement of their social and moral conditions. In this connection, I heartily commend to you the good work of the Purity Mission started by the Central Labour Board, Bombay, under the able guidence of Mr. S. H. Jhabvala for whose saintly character I have the greatest respect. The Mission was started with the object of helping the labourer to give up his habits of vice and encourage him to live an honest, peaceful and contented life. The Mission carries on a campaign in favour of Prohibition and every Sunday a small party starts from the office of the Board with banners and handbills and goes in procession to the Labour quarters where sermons are delivered. Bhajan parties consisting of Sadhus and social workers visit the localities and explain the evils of drink, gambling and other vices. This is the sort of education that a labourer wants and this will make him a better man both socially and economically.

Co-operative Women and the International Economic Conference: Frau Freundlich, President of the International Co-operative Women's Guild, and a prominent Socialist member of the Austrian Parliament, has just been appointed by the League of Nations as a member of the Preparatory Committee set up to arrange the agenda for the International Economic Conference which is shortly to be held at Geneva. Frau Freundlich has exceptional qualifications for such a position. She has been for many years on the board of the Austrian Co-operative Wholesale Society which won wide recognition after the War for its enterprise and success in tackling some of the country's economic difficulties. During the War she was a director of the Ministry of Food, and she has also long experience as a member of the progressive socialist City Council of Viennna, while her position on the Central Committee of the International Co-operative Alliance has brought her into contact with many international problems. The International Co-operative Women's Guild has strongly pressed for the appointment of a woman on the Preparatory Committee, for women have their very special part in the economic life of the world. Though Frau Freundlich, like the rest of the Committee, will sit as an individual, her appointment is no doubt partly the result of this action, and it is satisfactory that the workers' organisations are to have the opportunity of making their views felt on what should be a very important body. From January 9th 1926, the office of the International Co-operative Women's Guild is at 38, Downshire Hill, Hampstead, London, N. W. 3.

The Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha: The Hony. Secretary writes: Reports of 213 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, (Punjab) throughout India in the month of January 1926: I. According to Caste:—Brahman 56, Khatri 24, Arora 10, Kaisth 10, Aggarwal 31, Rajput 15, Sikh 29, Misc. 38, Total 213. II. According to Provinces:—Punjab and N. W. F. P. 141, Delhi 8, Sindh 3, U. P. 45, Assam 2, Bengal 5, Madras 1, Bombay 1, C. I. 6, Total 213. III. Voluntary donations received during the month of January 1926 is Rs. 37-10-0.

America and Prohibition: A Reuter's message from Washington says that, with the object of enforcing prohibition, Government is considering a proposal to buy the entire stock of medicinal whisky in the country to prevent its flowing into bootleg channels. The estimated cost is 300 million dollars. Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, opposes the step on the ground that Government will thereby be engaging in business but his Assistant Secretary, Mr. Andrews, who is in charge of the enforcement of prohibition, strongly favours the scheme.

NOTES

The Swarajist Exodus: After sitting in the Legislatures for over two years, the Swarajists withdrew on Monday on a mandate from the Central Executive of the Party. Pandit Motilal Nehru, the leader of the Party, made a long speech in the Assembly declaring that the failure of Government to pay heed to the united demand of the country for a further step towards self-government, has made it impossible for his Party to continue to sit in the Councils and participate in their work, and walked out of the Legislative Assembly with his followers numbering nearly 40. The scene was reproduced with local variations in all the Provincial Legislative Councils. In the Punjab, a leading member of the Party, after withdrawing for a day, returned to his seat on the next, and he has explained that in his opinion his constituents do not desire him to leave the Council. In Bombay, most of the Swarajists are "Responsive Co-operators," and though for the time they have withdrawn in obedience to the mandate, it is understood that they will resign their seats and their membership of the Swaraj Party, and seek re-election as Independents in the ensuing by-elections. The fact is that the Swaraj Party is rapidly disintegrating and Pandit Motilal has merely made a virtue of necessity.

The Widows' Cause: The Punjab Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, is to be congratulated on bringing out a journal specially devoted to the cause of widows. The February number, a copy of which we have received, makes out a good case for the validity of widow marriages among Hindus and opinions are quoted from the various Shastraic text-books and prominent public men in India to support it. For instance, the Manu Smriti, which is certainly a high authority on Hindu Law, says that it is canonical for a woman to take another husband on receiving no tidings of a husband, on his demise, on his turning an ascetic, on his being found impotent, on his degradation, or under any one of these five calamities. The journal also contains touching articles, based on personal knowledge and experience, depicting the miserable condition of young widows, often leading to conversion to other religions, immorality and infanticide. The total number of widow marriages reported from different centres of activites during 1925 was 2,663 as against 1,603 last year, certainly a good advance on previous years, but nothing when compared with the total number of Hindu widows in India, viz., 21,255,554 and under 25 years of age 1,530,644. Leaflets and booklets numbering two lakhs and literature costing Rs. 1688 in different languages and dialects were printed and broadcasted during the year with a view to educate public opinion in the matter. The journal contains a list of widows willing to re-marry and a list of candidates for whom suitable widows are required. We are sure that all those who are interested in the subject will find much useful information in this journal and we appeal to them to do everything in their power to encourage such a well-deserving cause.

The Medical Circular: The medical circular which the Government of India have issued to the provincial Governments proposing the reservation of 236 out of a total number of 292 seats in the civil side for the European I. M. S., came in for a good deal of criticism at the hands of non-official members during the budget discussions in the Bombay Legislative Council. The reactionary character of the proposal may be judged from the fact that even Dr. Paranjpye, a moderate of moderates, was forced to characterise it as outrageous and atrocious. Though Bombay's share is only 15, it is a pretty large number considering it carries some of the biggest lucrative medical posts in the Presidency which means in effect that Indians will be shut out of them on the score of their racial inferiority. The recommendation of the Lee Commission that every European in every nook and corner of India should be attended only by a European doctor upon which Government take their stand, if pushed to its logical conclusion, will only result in each community clamouring for its own men. Besides putting a stop to Indianization, the effect of the circular will be to discourage Indian youths from entering the I. M. S. in future and deprive the best Indian talents of expert knowledge and skill in the medical profession which their European colleagues enjoy at their expense.

The Buddha Gaya Question: Among other things, the All-India Congress Committee that met recently at Delhi settled the Buddha Gaya question by confirming the recommendations of its special committee vesting the control and management of the Buddha Gaya temple in a committee of ten of whom five were to be Hindus and five to be Buddhists of India, Nepal, Burma and Ceylon, it being provided that of the five Hindus the Mohant shall be one and one shall be a Hindu Minister of the Government of Bihar and Orissa. The decision seems to be the best and most reasonable under the circumstances. A section of Buddhists, however, has been demanding the entire control of the temple by Buddhists on the ground that until it came into the hands of the Hindu Mohunt in the 13th century A. D., it was built, owned and maintained by the Buddhists. There is no use in basing a claim merely on a title which is many centuries old. Moreover the temple has now become as holy and important to Hindus as to Buddhists and Hindus have as much veneration for Bhagwan Buddha, his life and teachings as to any of the other Hindu Avatars. We hope the Buddhists will realise this and co-operate with the Hindus in managing the affairs of the temple without any heart-burning on their side.

The Hindu Mahasabha : The All-India Hindu Mahasabha meets to-day at Delhi. We do not want to repeat again what we have said on other occasions about the great work of national reconstruction that awaits it. We only wish to point out one thing. The Mahasabha, as it is, seems to be organised only as a counterblast to Muslim organisations and not with a view to introduce much-needed reforms in the Hindu society. That this is so, was evidenced by the resignation of Swami Shraddhanand from the Vice-Presidentship and membership of the Executive Committee of the Mahasabha as a protest against his not being allowed to move a resolution at a session of the Sabha, held recently at Rohtak urging the remarriage of child and girl widows. Unless the cruel custom which condemns thousands of young girls to eternal misery and shame is done away with, the stain on Hinduism will not be removed. This is the key social reform to which Hindu leaders should turn their attention and we hope the Hindu Sabha will take note of it.

Prohibition in the Punjab : We are sorry to see that the Punjab Legislative Council rejected on the 2nd instant by an overwhelming majority the resolution moved by a non-official member urging the adoption of total prohibition as the goal of Government excise policy. We never thought the wet interests in that Province would be so strong as to score such a decided victory over the dry interests. The Minister concerned who was more or less saved by the vote of the Council, clutched at all arguments he could use against prohibition. One such was that the policy of prohibition in America has been a complete failure. This is avowedly only a one-sided statement and as against the opinion of this humble Minister of Punjab may be placed the testimony of the late British Premier, Mr. Lloyd George, which we printed sometime back in our Prohibition Supplement. The Home Secretary said that the Council should not determine by legislation what a man should eat or drink. This is not the issue. The State has the same right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor as it has to prohibit practices which lead to race degeneracy.

Purity Work in Bombay : We publish elsewhere the lecture delivered by Miss Davis of the League of Mercy on purity work in Bombay at the Bombay Students' Brotherhood. It was a lucid summary of the social evil as it is to-day in Bombay and its possible remedies. More than preventive work, what is needed at present is rescue work and rescue homes. To put an end to the evil all at once by a stroke of legislation, as is often urged, will only result in throwing into the streets thousands of misguided women without ensuring them any means of subsistence. Short-cuts in this as in other social matters will only end in disaster. Another point Miss Davis did well to emphasise is that it is not the women alone that are at the bottom of the evil as is generally supposed, but that it is the men who are really at the bottom of it. It is the men that create the demand for women, and if there is no demand, there will naturally be no supply. Social purity work should, therefore, first begin by men among men and it is up to a body like the Students' Brotherhood to undertake it so that at least the younger generations may grow up free from this vice.

Untouchables and Temple Entry : It is reported that Mr. T. K. Madhavan, the Vykom Satyagraha leader and nominated member of the Travancore Popular Assembly, has resigned his membership of the Assembly as a protest against the Government vetoing his resolution for permitting all Hindus, without distinction of caste, to enter Hindu temples and worship. We think Mr. Madhavan would have done well to wait for some time before bringing in a resolution of this kind. The Vaikom Satyagraha solved only the problem of the Vaikom temple and not that of other temples. There is no gainsaying the fact that a wonderful awakening has come among the caste Hindus in Malabar towards the recognition of the rights of their untouchable brethren, but there are still cases of caste Hindu opposition as at Suchindram where a Satyagraha has been resorted to. When thus public roads round temples have not been thrown open to untouchables in many places, it is unlikely that caste Hindu opinion would have been prepared for such an extreme step in religious ideas as was involved in Mr. Madhavan's resolution. We feel at the same time that the Travancore Government which, under its new ruler, has shown a commendable enthusiasm in ameliorating the conditions of the depressed classes, made a mistake in not allowing the resolution to be even discussed. Far from embarrassing it, it would only have helped it to gauge caste Hindu opinion on the matter and would have removed the odium attaching to its action.

Disabilities of Indians in Britain: The Hindu, Madras, publishes a communication from the Glasgow Indian Union protesting against the unjust action taken against some Indians under the Alien Seamen Order. Under this Order issued by the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, certain law-abiding and peaceful Indians in Glasgow who have been living there from periods of three to fourteen years and employed as pedlars, labourers and seamen are registered as Alien Seamen. The Glasgow Union further says that this action of the Home Office is only the culmination of a general policy of systematic exclusion of Indians which has developed in recent years, and it points out by way of example that Indians have on the ground of their nationality been refused admission to certain picture houses and some other places of entertainment in Glasgow which is considered to be the most liberal city in Scotland. We had thought that the colour bar was existing only in the Dominions and some foreign countries, but we now see that the Boer virus is as active in the very heart of Great Britain as in South Africa as a result of which some British Indian subjects will be deprived of their elementary rights of citizenship on account of the colour of their skin. We hope someone will raise this question in the Central Legislature.

What Is Brahmacharya? : Mahatma Gandhi in a recent issue of Young India interprets Brahmacharya as synonymous with celibacy. "Brahmacharya means", he writes, "not merely mechanical celibacy, but it means complete control over all the organs and senses enabling one to attain perfect freedom from all passion and hence from sin in thought, word and deed." In one of the Upanishads, the term is expressly applied to what we should call continence in marriage, which is perhaps a more difficult discipline than outright celibacy. The view of marriage generally propounded by Mahatmaji is not quite consistent with the old Hindu conception of the householder or grihastha stage being the most meritorious as it is the most essential to social well-being.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

SAGOTRA MARRIAGES.

The following was published in a recent issue of the Hindustan Times of Delhi: "Judgment was pronounced on the 6th February 1926 in Chandulal versus Shamsunder by L. Ghanshyam Dass, M.A., LL.B. A very important point of law was involved in the suit as to whether marriage in the same Gotra amongst Vaish Agarwals and the issue thereof, is or is not valid. The Court after hearing prolonged and learned arguments extending over a fortnight on either side decided the point in an elaborate and lucid judgment in favour of the defendant holding the Sagotra marriage and the issue thereof valid and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. The suit was hanging on for over eight years." This, we believe, is the first decision of the kind and it remains to be seen whether it will be upheld by the Punjab High Court, if there is an appeal against the decision of the lower Court. If there be no appeal, the point will remain uncertain, as the decision of a Court lower than the High Court is not binding on other Courts even in the province. We hope, therefore, that there will be an appeal so that the important point of law involved in the case may be authoritatively settled at least for the Punjab. Indian High Courts are not obliged to follow one another's decisions, but the pronouncement of one High Court cannot be lightly put aside by the others. If possible, it is desirable that the case should be taken to and an authoritative decision obtained thereon from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which will be binding upon all Courts, including High Courts, in the country. The prohibition of marriages between persons belonging to the same gotra, is regarded as a fundamental principle of the Hindu law of marriage even more binding than the prohibition of marriage between near relatives. Marriages of cousins, that is, of the children of brothers and sisters, are prohibited by the Hindu Law, but on the principle that custom overrides the written law, such marriages have been treated as valid in Southern India. But the merriage of persons of the same gotra is nowhere valid, neither in the north nor the south, nor the east or the west.

The ban on such marriages, whatever its origin, has become utterly unmeaning at the present time. Gotras are not based upon consanguinity. Certain Rishis in the dim and distant past were designated as the founders of gotras and all the twice-born were apportioned among these gotras. The gotras were probably at first tribal groups, but they ceased to have any recognisable significance long ago. The gotra of each family and individual, however, is jealously preserved and, though we have heard of cases in which it has been falsified in order to enable an otherwise desirable marriage to be celebrated between two persons of the same gotra, it is highly improbable that such cases have been very common. The mode in which the gotra descends is this. Children belong to the father's gotra, but on marriage girls take the gotra of their husbands which has necessarily to be one different from that in which she was born, namely, her father's. The children of brothers cannot intermarry because they belong to the same gotra. But, as remarked above, in South India children of a brother and a sister can do so, as they belong to different gotras, namely, those of their fathers. The gotra cuts across sub-castes and even the main castes, so that people of different sub-castes and castes may and do belong to the same gotra. There is nothing in the Hindu Law to prevent the marriage of a Brahmin of Bengal with a Brahmin of Bombay, but if the two belong to the same gotra, their marriage will be null and void. The abolition of this unmeaning prohibition is a needed reform in the Hindu law of marriage. Marriages within the prohibited degrees, recognised in all countries, are forbidden among Hindus also, but this additional ban, resting upon no rational principle, should be got rid of. The full text of the Punjab decision is not published but we hope that it will be made available to the public. It is important to know whether it relies upon any dispensation of the Hindu Law for the special and exclusive benefit of Vaishya Agarwals or whether it proceeds on general principles applicable to all the twice-born castes. Further, in the Punjab, where political and social conditions have for centuries been in a constant state of unsettlement, customary law has come to be recognised to a very much larger extent than in most other provinces; and it is possible that the Judge who decided this case has based his view of the validity of a sagotra marriage upon some local custom. All these points will be cleared up when we have the full text of his judgment before us.

The word, gotra, as it occurs in the Veda has been interpreted as "cow-stall" or as "herd." The learned authors of the Vedic Index prefer the latter sense as it explains best the use of the term in later literature as denoting the family or the clan. Marriages between persons of the same gotra were not prohibited in Vedic times, and change of gotra was possible as in the case of Sunahsepa and Grtsamada who, once an Angirasa, became a Bhargava. As in the case of other Hindu social institutions, their ancient elasticity was lost in course of time and they hardened into what Bagheot has aptly called "cakes of custom." As mentioned above, marriage with the daughter of a paternal uncle is now forbidden to all Hindus, but this seems to have been permitted in the earliest times. "In the Gobhila Grhya Sutra and Dharma Sutras," it is stated in the Vedic Index, "are found prohibitions against marriage in the gotra or within six degrees on the mother's or the father's side, but in the Satapatha Brahmana marriage is allowed in the third or fourth generation, the former being allowed, according to Harisvamin, by the Kanvas, and the second by the Saurastras, while the Daksinatyas allowed marriage with the daughter of the mother's brother or the son of the father's sister, but presumably not with the daughter of the mother's sister or the son of the father's brother. The prohibition of marriage within the gotra cannot then have existed, though naturally marriages outside the gotra were frequent."

THE ADVENTURE FOR WORLD BROTHERHOOD.

The National Young Women's Christian Association, Calcutta, has brought out a neat little study circle booklet entitled "The Adventure for World Brotherhood." It is a short review of the movement for world brotherhood from ancient to modern times and the good work that is being done by the League of Nations and other societies for securing world peace. The conception that civilization is a common inheritance and a collective responsibility is only of comparatively recent growth. The Greeks, though they attained the perfection of democracy in their small city states, had no notion of the unity of mankind and called their neighbours "barbarians." The Roman Empire which followed achieved the unique task of uniting diverse peoples under a uniform peaceful rule, but in those days the terms "nationalism" and "internationalism" were not born. Under Charlemagne, when the Holy Roman Empire was established, the idea of unity took a great step; but it was not the unity of civilization as a whole, but only of Catholic Christendom. The Renaissance and Reformation gave a rude shock to this idea of the essential unity of a Christian Empire and replaced it by the ideal of the unfettered sovereignty of the State, which resulted in the establishment of absolute monarchies in some States and constitutional monarchies in others. But during all this period, there were men who were dreaming of the great ideals which have to-day found embodiment in the League of Nations—Henri Quatre of arbitration, Grotius of a basis for international law-making and William Penn of universal peace. The War of American Independence and the French Revolution led to the formulation of a theory of aggressive nationalism in the nineteenth century. The result was that the Europe of this century was full of struggles in the course of which many nations achieved their independence. But side by side with the growth of nationalism in the political sphere, there grew up also the idea of international unity in commerce, industry, labour, science and art. Whereas in 1815 there was not a single international organisation, by 1913 there were thirty public international conferences dealing with such subjects as postage, health, railways, labour, tariffs, prison reform etc. Then came the Great War of 1914 which, whatever its immediate causes were, was undoubtedly the outcome of the doctrine of nationalism which taught the unfettered sovereignty and self-sufficiency of the State. The War, in spite of the untold sufferings it inflicted upon Europe and the whole world, had one good result in that it turned men's attention for the first time to the necessity of having a permanent organization for the purpose of international law, arbitration and co-operation, so that the recurrence of War would be made less possible. The world owes a deep debt of gratitude to that great American statesman, President Woodrow Wilson, for it is to his fourteen points that we have to trace the origin of the League of Nations of to-day. The world after all found that nationalism and internationalism are not irreconcilable. The Covenant of the League establishes a form of international government that corresponds nearly to that existing in modern civilized States. There is, first of all, an annual Assembly meeting at Geneva to which each Member State sends delegates. Then, there is a smaller body called the Council, which meets more frequently than the Assembly consisting of the four Great Powers, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan and six States elected from time to time by the Assembly, and it is upon the enlargement of the permanent seats in the Council on the application of Germany to a permanent seat in it that acute controversy is now raging. The Council in turn appoints certain committees, composed for the most part of experts, to deal with the different humanitarian and other activities such as the reduction of armaments, control of opium and other dangerous drugs, suppression of traffic in women and children etc. Whatever may be the shortcomings of the League in other respects, the work done by it in the economic reconstruction of post-war Europe, especially of poverty-stricken Austria and Hungary, and in satisfactorily solving the problem of the Russian and Greek refugees, is incalculable. The good results achieved by the international conventions on labour, opium and health are only well-known and it is a matter for congratulation that India has been taking active part in them and, what is more, she has given effect to the resolutions passed at such conferences unlike some so-called Big Powers. Public opinion in all countries in favour of the League is being organised by League of Nations Societies and in our own country we hope the efforts of Dr. Pillai of the League of Nations Secretariat will bear fruit. But unless the East is placed on an equal footing with the West in the councils of the League, it cannot but be looked upon as the servile instrument of Western Imperialism. And so far as India is concerned, she has found by experience that the contribution which she pays as a original member of the League of Nations is rather disproportionate to the benefits she derives from it.

PRIME NEEDS OF INDIAN AGRICULTURE.

(By Mr. E. Govindan).

As Agriculture is the main-stay of more than 75 per cent of the people in India, and as the Science of Economics is closely related to our political progress, the appointment of the Royal Commission on Indian Agriculture to find out ways and means for improving the condition of the agriculturists, though long overdue, is really welcome. Better late than never.

But the appointment of the Commission itself would not economically better the lot of the poor tillers of the soil unless the problem is tackled with great sympathy and insight and solved most satisfactorily. Indeed, Indian agriculture is in a decadent state and this is well reflected in the daily life of the farmer with all his wants and woes. As the State is for the sake of society, the Commission should duly consider the following needs and make recommendations about them to Government.

GOVERNMENT AND THE LAND-HOLDING CLASSES.

At the outset, it should be pointed out that general education should precede agricultural education and improvement; for to give agricultural education without a knowledge of the three R's, is just like sowing the seed without ploughing the land. The importance of this education is well brought out by a writer in the Modern Review for May, 1920. He writes: "If Indian Agriculture is really to be improved, if this great industry of India is to be based on a sound basis, and if prosperity and happiness, in an increasing degree, are to be attained, education is an important means to the end; and all talk of Agricultural improvement and any amount of research work, will be of little avail, if there is no general education."

To improve the economic status of the agriculturists, Government should, in a more sympathetic manner than hitherto, come to their aid in all ways possible, presumably, through the Imperial Department of Agriculture, with bureaus of Plant Industry, of Entomology, of Animal Industry and such like. What is intended to convey is, that the department, through its provincial organisations, should try to cover a number of activities, calculated to make the work of the farmer "more elevating, more pleasant, more attractive, and more profitable". Succintly put, they are as under:

(a) Vernacular Agricultural Schools should be established in rural areas, besides colleges in provincial centres, in each province with farms for practical agriculture and demonstration work attached to them. The aim of such institutions should be to provide the farmer and the land-holder with the necessary training and for that "market and its fluctuations, sources of capital, co-operation, the relation of agriculture to economics, and subjects of a similar nature, should have a place in the prescribed studies".

(b) An Indian farmer, if he is true to his alma mater, if that expression can be used, needs money to purchase fertilizers and to use modern farm machinery and to buy more lands. It is really doubtful whether the Co-operative Banks in the country-side would secure him loans on reasonable terms. We should, therefore, have more banks like Land Banks in America. In this matter and other allied ones, the Indian Government may profitably look to uncle Sam for guidance and inspiration.

Provided items (a) and (b) are faithfully carried out by the Government in the interests of the masses, the earning capacity of the people is greatly increased, severe restraint is imposed on Indian exodus, far more remunerative wages can be given and the problem of middle class unemployment is to a certain extent solved. When we say so, we do not derogate the importance of general education.

GOVERNMENT AND THE LANDLESS.

Dr. Radhakamal Mukerjee writes: "As long as there is no radical change in the rural economy of India through land adjustment, agricultural co-operation or scientific farming, the problem of landless peasants will become more and more acute and there will be a tendency for this class to come in line with the industrial proletariat of the cities. That will portend social upheavals which will be full of grave consequences to the agricultural civilization of India." It is needless to observe that there is much truth in the above statement and that it is a reminder to Government to do its duty by agricultural India. Indeed, the problem of the landless is a pressing one. At present, the yield of the land is very low in normal years; while the labourers are getting more vocal and more aggressive, due to economic causes, the economic position of the landed gentry is getting worse. Besides, cottage industries are nowhere and the relations between the landlord and the labourer are anything but cordial. It is humbly suggested that the Commission should take note of this factor and recommend proper measures to ease the situation and to safeguared their respective interests. A discontented proletariat will be a drag on agricultural progress.

If the Royal Commission on Agriculture really means business and if the British Government is to stick to its policy of progressive realisation of Self-Government in India, the needs of Agricultural India should be looked into with a view to establish the industry on a scientific basis; for an ill-fed, ill-clad nation would be an obstacle in the path of political progress.

The question is: Would the British Government, which at present upholds the theory of economic exploitation as a sure means to political power, turn over a new leaf and help to liberate the political conscience of the masses? Let the Royal Commission reply.

THE "KANARESE" OF OLD BOMBAY—AND MR. EDWARDES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Thanks are due to you for drawing your readers' attention to your authority for a statement which had long been intriguing me, in your issue of the 13th ult. From your quotation it must be clear to every discerning reader that my conjecture regarding the nature of the 'Kanarese' commonly associated with old Bombay was correct to a point. All the circumstances mentioned in the foot-note reproduced from B. M. Malabari's book go to corroborate my suggestions (1) as to what the old rulers of the island (or islands) had to do with your 'Kanarese', and (2) how this 'Kanarese' is but a blind translation of the 'Canarin' of the Portuguese who used to apply the term to a tongue and people quite different from the Kanarese truly so-called. And I say this pace Mr. Edwardes whose amateurish antiquarianism has proved as misleading on this point as on some others. He remarks that 'the early inhabitants of these islands were to a large extent of Southern Dravidian origin', and that was why, he says, preference was given to Kanarese over other vernaculars current in Bombay in those early days! But we know that Portuguese and Konkani Marathi were (besides English) the only tongues likely to be spoken by any considerable number in the Bombay of those days. So we can be sure, Mr. Edwardes has here drawn on his imagination to explain a supposed fact. Frankly, in other words, our antiquarian has sought to illuminate an ill-understood point of Bombay antiquities by simply stooping to romance. May St. Somebody, patron of antiquaries, save us from such lights for ever! Such hikmet apart—that there may be no excuse on the score of excusable ignorance of the old Portuguese expression mentioned, I feel bound to bring to your readers' notice that mine of information, at once very varied, curious, and almost perfectly accurate, entitled Hobson-Jobson ( s. v. Canarin)—a famous English work by Yule and Burnell, of which I procured a copy only lately after my query was printed, but which was published years before Mr. Edwardes embarked upon his antiquarian career. In fact, it must appear to those who have watched that not very original career that some of its occasional lapses are such as every school-boy and school-girl in India may be expected to avoid.

FOREIGN TOURISTS IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

It appears to have become the habit of the Westerners and Americans especially to visit India and other countries of the East of late. Whatever the work of propagandists might be to the contrary it cannot be denied that a great many of the Americans regard the Oriental countries as places where there are people endowed with black magic and curious customs and mighty monarchs with their big harems containing beautiful women—not "ladies" for they are not supposed to be 'polished' according to the Western conception. This is largely the work of a growing industry in America, namely, the cinema films slangly termed "movies". The movies depict Oriental life and character with a mendacity peculiar to the protagonists of the industry. There is a majority of producers with ready stories containing a hero, a Westerner endowed with all the qualities of Abel, fighting against an Oriental villain who is a veritable Cain. A cosy travel in a costly floating palace brings these hordes of curiously curiosity-stricken section of humanity to Bombay, where, after having attended to their personal comforts and paraphernalia, they take a stroll through the streets, view the buildings and other prominent places, and buy what they term as curious in some of the shops where they find wealth and time enough to whet their curiosity. A stereotyped programme of an organisation of business-like porters, who call themselves Passengers' and touring and clearing Agents, takes them to the Taj at Agra, the Kutb at Delhi and occasionally to the Ajanta frescoes, and the tour is finished and they have seen India! If any scribe accompanies them he goes home to write to the journals about the wealth and prosperity of the Indians! But do they visit the villages where the majority of Indian population is half-starved and half-clothed but heavily taxed? No. But if they visit at least one of the many villages of India they will be disillusioned about the prosperity of the Indian masses to whom famine, flood, drought and destruction are the sources of constant danger.

If they view the Taj it is certainly not in the light of its glory as an ancient monument of a divine art, architecture, but as a "mighty marble construction of a Moghul monarch who in his eccentricity built it as a tomb for his wife whom he doted upon". Their minds are engrossed by the brick and mortar of the prominent towns like Bombay which are to them a sufficient indication of India's wealth. Some of these batches contain professors and men of culture and repute, but it is a pity that they too join their more materialistically-inclined compatriots in their outlook of Eastern life and conditions; whereas if they would shed their shyness and contempt and look into India more closely they would be surprised to find that India is more advanced in culture and philosophy than the West. A day's conversation with Gandhi or Tagore or both will enlighten them more than their sky-scrapers and oil-kings and movie-magnates.

They would not care to examine India's fight for freedom but would go home and tell their friends and countrymen that India is "Iri't".

What is wanted is not this sort of inclination but a new one. Americans should put a stop to their hatred for coloured people if they want to get into touch with the East. They should regard and respect every religion of the world as though it were their own religion. A 24 hours', 48 hours' or for the matter of that, even 72 hours' visit would not be sufficient for their being acquainted with Indian conditions, life, culture and civilisation. Their attention should not be confined to monuments alone. They should get into touch with the peoples of the parts they visit and acquaint themselves with the prosperity or otherwise of the country if they wanted to tell their own people about India and the East in its real condition. The irreligious habit of the White races of looking at the coloured people as hewers of wood and drawers of water should go. With this liberal and new outlook they will not only enlighten themselves but also contribute to the confluence of the culture of the East and the West which will ultimately promise the unity of mankind.

ELEVATION OF THE DEPRESSED CLASSES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In ancient India, the Hindus were divided into four castes. The highest, that of Brahmins, was devoted to religion and the cultivation of the sciences; to the second belonged the preservation of the State; they were its sovereigns and its magistrates in peace, and soldiers in war; the third were the husbandmen and merchants; the fourth, the artisans, labourers, and servants. These are inseparable distinctions, and descend from generation to generation.

Of these four castes, the fourth was the Sudras. They were the descendants of the vanquished race which inhabited India before the Aryan invasion. They were divided into many tribes and families, each considering itself superior to the other. This unhappy social tendency was undoubtedly the effect of the caste-system, which separated them and prevented them to unite together for the struggle to obtain a footing of perfect equality.

realpatidar.com

The depressed classes of the present age are the descendants of the Sudras of ancient India. They are morally separated from the high class Hindus though they are locally intermingled with them.

The upper classes of the Hindus of our time are as little willing to share the national power with the lower orders as their forefathers had been.

If anybody passionately desires to elevate every class of our people, let him first attempt to transform this motley and priest-ridden people into a homogeneous body, worshipping in the spirit of tolerant and enlightened Hinduism, animated in its relation of class to class by the humane philosophy of the present century.

AMRITALAL MAJUMDAR.

BURMESE WOMEN.

( Concluded from the previous issue ).

STATUS AS ASSIGNED BY RELIGION.

Not only does she not abuse the boon, but she rarely takes advantage of her many privileges. A perfectly free agent as she is, unfettered to do almost anything that a man may do, she yet would prefer to waive everything, and be a lesser being than a man. To have to be always at arms against man would make her lose reverence for him, and to lose reverence for man would be against her religious precept: and to insist upon her equality with man would mean defiance of her religion. For her religion says that a woman is so far beneath a man, so far indeed beneath any male animal that were she and dog to stand in front of a sanctified mirror, the mirror would reflect only the dog and not her. Women are the lowliest of creatures that are made according to the religion of the Burmese: they are the most unclean. Even amongst the women themselves—such is the sacredness of man—she who has borne the greatest number of sons takes spiritual precedence. And the Burmese woman, being nothing if not religious, piously accepts the poor status thus assigned, and leads a life befitting one so mean, so unclean, and so despised. She does reverence unto all men; she kneels and folds her hands in the Burmese attitude of adoration to her husband every night before she goes to bed, and often every morning too. She would not sit at the same level with any man older than herself, and she would stand if such man were not seated. She would be extremely careful to keep her own clothes well and far apart from man's, for to let the clothes of her unclean person get mixed with man's would mean to her a sin requiring adequate expiation. It is much more serious to her in the case of bodily contact with man, however accidental the incident. But deliberately to challenge a man were beyond all expiations. Is it, therefore, any wonder that with so scrupulous a reverence of man she should wish to be always a lesser being than a man? She ever strives to be that, though irresistible circumstances will occasionally force her to unholy combat. Truly she uses her privileges wisely. And therefore is—does it not follow?—her freedom so vast.

BURMESE WOMEN AND MODERNISM.

The Burmese women have no stomach for imported modernism. Just as they would not ride bicycle or wear shoes or take to open air games, they would not drive a motor car or a carriage, though they may go about in both. The English education, which by some is called the higher education, is another bit of modernism for which the Burmese women have little esteem. Hence one could count on one's fingers the number of women in colleges. But higher education in their own sense of the phrase is followed by women up to a very high standard indeed, and is accessible to one and all. One of the things that Burmese women would not do is to profane that which is sacred. Education is sacred to them, and the idea at the back of securing English education, in most cases at least, is to turn it into monetary gain and nothing more. To do so is to them profanity of the most abandoned sort. Their own idea of education is for the salvation of the soul and not for the benefit of the flesh, and consists purely of scriptural learning for the proficiency in which there is no earthly use. Then there is that very modern achievement—the entry of women into the ranks of masculine occupations, such as the learned professions, civil service, and so on. As has been pointed out, the Burmese women always try to avoid diligent endeavour to keep out of callings which are distinctly masculine. It is no glory to them to be building a bridge or shielding a criminal or signing governmental despatches. Sooner would a Burmese women be at home, perhaps rocking a cradle or mending clothes. As a result, there are but few, if any at all, Burmese women engaged in public life.

But there are Burmese women in politics! Very strange and it becomes stranger still when one remembers that to the Burmese women politics must be both modern and masculine. It is modern because in the days of their own kings there was no such thing as politics. The kings were autocrats, unhampered by parliaments or legislative assemblies or councils. A king was all that. And the people were content, especially the women. Hence the science of politics had not been an esential acquisition, nor yet a desirable hobby. Even in the West, the participation of women in politics only dates from the spread of democracy, and in many cases only as recently as since extremely unlikely under Burmese kings. And women they have been to-day in the political arena but for extreme provocation. The foreign yoke so bruises their necks and foreign arrogance so hurts their sensitiveness. Still they would have preferred to keep out of politics, and meekly resign themselves to their Karma. But such resignation they found was cruelly damaging to the prestige and honour of their nationality. And so the flare of nationalism burst forth, and the women are in the fray. There are to-day in Burma many political associations exclusively for women sponsored, managed and presided by women. Very recently a number of these associations were declared illegal by the Government and there was a wholesale imprisonment of delinquents, regardless of sex. Gaoled were many women, among whom mere girls, one of them barely eighteen summers and eighteen months was her sentence! But "Be of good cheer" must have been their slogan, for women are still in politics revelling, toiling, achieving. All the same, they would have liked to leave politics alone. It is a question of "needs must when the devil drives." But where the devil is not so evident, the Burmese women do not countenance modernism in any shape or form.

SOCIAL PURITY WORK IN BOMBAY.

A public lecture was delivered by Miss M. Catherine Davis of the League of Mercy on the Need For Social Purity Work in Bombay at the Bombay Students' Brotherhood on Wednesday the 3rd instant. The lecturer, in the course of her speech, said:

In 1921, Government appointed an expert Committee of Enquiry into this subject and the Majority Report, subsequently published, provides sad reading. Bombay by its possession of a segregated area is a market of ill fame for European countries and up-country States. The Census Report of 1921 and the police figures state that there are 885 brothels in this area with over 5,000 inmates. Bombay has a festering sore in its midst and the general public health is consequently affected. Clandestine immorality outside the area is largely on the increase. Street order is bad and disease is rampant. The number of girls leading immoral lives probably stands at nearly 15,000. These are hard facts. What has been done? The Prostitution Act of 1923 was passed penalising some of the worst forms of commercialised vice and the Vigilance Association was born and is doing active work to-day.

This brief, bald statement is sufficient to show us the crying need for social purity work in this city. No permanent good can, however, be done without right constructive thinking. We must think out our moral values anew and only when we have analysed our own attitude to vice and virtue can we go forward and theorise about other people. We must be ready to challenge conventions and not tamely accept them without thought. There are four things in particular which essentially need profound thought, our attitude to sex, our opinion of marriage, our accepted moral standard and our principle of action. The foundation of social purity rests on individual purity and individual purity on the appreciation of sex as something holy and God-given. Psychologists tell us it is our strongest instinct and, therefore, one of our main bases of character and one of the chief springs of thought and action. Let us formulate a high ideal of sex, reverence it as "a great impulse of life and love," a spark of God's own creative energy, and remember "it is not sex but its degradation which is shameful."

The higher our ideal of sex, the nobler will be the conception of marriage. As marriage involves the giving of personality, body, soul and spirit, it must be permanent and monogamous, and it must demand, in preparation, a life of charity, binding on the man as well as on the woman. Both are equal in the endowment of personality, though both differ in function. In both cases illicit union cannot but impair personality.

If we held such an ideal of marriage it follows naturally that we believe in the unity of the moral law. Morality is really natural in the sense that by obedience to its dictates we are obeying the law of our inmost being whereas by license we enslave our true selves to the dominance of our lower selves. License and freedom are very opposites.

Right Action: Preventive Work.

Having by right thinking laid bare the roots of evil let us examine what right action can follow. We are up against the oldest and one of the biggest problems in the world. Short-cut methods which dam the channel of evil without tapping its sources of supply cannot but create a flood and produce disaster. First in our programme must, therefore, come social purity work by men amongst men, as it is from them the demand comes and it is the demand which renders possible the supply. Rescue work must start amongst men if it is to be effective amongst women. Bombay is faced by the problem of the "surplus man." Until men's moral standards have been raised, drastic reform is impossible —for to close the tolerated area at one fell swoop to-day would be to endanger the safety of all womanhood throughout the city. Rid Bombay of the major force of that demand and then we can campaign for immediate abolition. It is up to an organisation like the Bombay Students' Brotherhood to lead the van in preaching the gospel of social purity amongst the manhood of the city.

Better education is the next right action needed, an education which will mould character and not merely train the brain. Habits of self-control should be taught from the earliest years. The fact of life should be gradually and truthfully unfolded to our growing boys and girls and the ideal of personal purity and the sanctity of fatherhood and motherhood directly taught. Physical fitness in sport is recognised as the result of physical training—moral calibre too depends on moral education. As the boys of India are helped to attain a greater self-control, the practice of early marriage may be dropped and the education of girls raised to an equal standard and an equal duration as vouchsafed to the average boy.

Social Reform stands next in our programme to education as economics plays a far larger part in producing moral problems than has been realised. Unemployment, sweated labour and bad housing are all indirect causes of immorality. Girls and boys are allowed to grow up amidst demoralising conditions to face a struggle to maintain an honest livelihood which often proves too hard for them. The path of least resistance is often, therefore, followed.

Legislation.

Improved legislation must also be worked for. A large field of preventive work has been closed to us by the non-operation of the Children's Act of 1924 The Age of Consent Bill 1925 must by all keen workers of social purity be regarded but as the first step in a right direction—but as no more than that. The Prostitution Act of 1923 as it stands to-day calls for amendment and extension. The Vigilance Association has been successful in getting the question of its amendment brought before the present session. The amendments suggested make for the greater efficiency of the measure to crave the support of all keen citizens. The question of extending the scope of this measure to legislate against the keepers of brothels as well as against pimps and procurers is to be the goal of our work in the future. This will mean the eventual closing of the tolerated area in gradual stages. Good cannot be done by wrong methods. Several wrong methods have been and are being suggested. For instance the suggestion to remove toleration merely to superimpose regulation—which is based on the same wrong principle of the system now in force. A second wrong method would be to clear away the area in Bombay and establish it in the mofussil. By this means evil would still be compacted with and the dangers of an unsatisfied demand left in Bombay. A third and equally wrong method would be to close down now all brothels by one sweeping law. Public opinion has not yet been educated up to this. Provision has not yet been made for the thousands of poor victims uprooted from their livelihood. The problem we are facing is too big for summary action. We must be content to work for the education of public opinion and to lop off by degrees the main branches of the tree of evil. The work can only be done by stages. Disorderly houses can first be removed from tram routes; foreign and up-country inmates can be gradually repatriated and the most insanitary brothels compulsorily condemned. Thus and only thus can we work slowly and patiently towards eventual abolition.

realpatidar.com

These are some of the main avenues of right action in preventive work. In this way we can hope to lessen the evils of to-morrow but meanwhile in rescue work we must tackle the evil of to-day. Preventive work has priority of place in our programme but rescue work must also play its part.

Rescue Work.

Surely it is in rescue work that one feels the call of fellowship and brotherhood. It is the gospel of friendship in action. Rescue work means much more than removing people from bad conditions. They have to be re-associated in the march of progress. A new outlook on life has to be supplied; adequate technical training to be given and employment found. It is for rescue work that we need more homes and institutions. Very little is being done at present in Bombay—there are in fact only four homes and one small clearing house just started by the Vigilance Association in the city. Until more workers come forward, and more accommodation is available, we can do little. The Children's Act when it comes into force will largely fail to rescue children from moral danger, so long as we lack schools and homes. The eventual clearing away of the tolerated area can only come when accommodation has been made more adequate. We must appeal for Indian workers to come forward and for the different Indian communities to realise their own responsibility in this matter. In England we have realised the need of specialised accommodation for the various types of cases to be helped. Institutions of widely differing kinds exist—homes for difficult children, shelters and refuges and long time training homes for girl mothers and baby hostels and medical homes. Here in Bombay lack of accommodation entails a housing together of cases of many different types to the detriment of all.

Lastly we must appeal as part of the needed rescue work for greater facilities for treatment of those suffering from venereal diseases. Bombay needs more free treatment centres—more inpatient accommodation in hospitals and a seamen's medical home as in other great ports of the world.

BILL TO AMEND THE BOMBAY PROSTITUTION ACT.

The Bill to amend the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act has been published in the "Bombay Government Gazette" of Feb. 19th. The objects of the amendment are explained in the following notes on the clauses:-

Clause 3.—Under section 3 the offence of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution is punishable with imprisonment for the term which may extend to eight days or with fine which may extend to fifty rupees. The punishment has proved inadequate and has no deterrent effect. It is, therefore, proposed to enhance the punishment to one of three months' imprisonment or a fine of one hundred rupees.

Clause 4.—Under section 9 the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, has been vested with certain powers which may be exercised by him with respect to persons residing in the City of Bombay. Since the passing of the Act it has been represented to Government that the powers exerciseable by the Commissioner of Police under section 9 should also be available in other places where conditions approximate to those in the City of Bombay, and the object of the amendment is to give District Magistrates such powers. As, however, the conditions in places other than the City of Bombay are, in many respects, different from those in Bombay, it is proposed that the District Magistrates should ordinarily exercise the powers conferred on them by section 153 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, and that they should exercise the wider powers conferred by proposed section 9 (6) only so far as the conditions in each district render the exercise of such powers necessary.

Clause 5.—Sub-section (1) of section 10 of the Act by its grammatical structure restricts the powers of a police officer to arrest a person, against whom information of an offence under section 3 of the Act has been received, to cases where the offence is committed in his presence. This was not intended when the Act was passed and this hampers the action of the police in cases in which immediate action is necessary. The amendment is intended to remedy this defect. For the same reason the last two lines of the sub-section have been omitted.

Clause 6—Sub-clause (a).—Section 123 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902, as it stood before amendment, included two sections and made punishable an unauthorized return to the City of Bombay of persons removed under section 27 which related to gangs or under section 28 which related to prostitutes and brothel—keepers of the same Act. Section 33 (1 authorized a police officer to arrest without warrant any persons offending under section 123. Section 28 was repealed by the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act, 1923, which reproduced its provision in Section 9 and in making consequential amendments the fact that section 123 included 2 cases was overlooked in amending section 33 (1) and the reference to section 123 therein was wholly omitted. The consequence is that the power of a police officer to arrest gangs without warrant has been taken away, a result which was not contemplated when the Act was passed. This clause is intended to re-enact the former provisions of Section 33 (1) as regards gangs under Section 123 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.

Sub-clause (b).—The effect of the existing clause (e) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the Act is to deprive a police officer in the City of Bombay of the power to arrest without warrant in respect of all the offences specified in Section 120 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902. The intention, however, was to deprive

him of such power in respect of the offences specified in clauses (a) and (b) only of that Section as these clauses have been repealed by clause (f) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the Act. Clause (b) gives effect to this intention.

INTENSIVE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS IN LUCKNOW.

We are asked to give publicity to the following:—

The third annual Intensive Course for Teachers under the joint auspices of the Ewing Christian College and the Lucknow Christian College will be held in Lucknow from March 6th to April 16th, 1926. The aims of the Course are:—(1) to acquaint teachers with the best methods of teaching and the help given by educational psychology in the solution of every-day problems; (2) to provide opportunities for observing expert teaching and for practice teaching under criticism; (3) to impart enthusiasm for the continued study of the science of education, and for its application; and (4) to create a wider professional outlook among teachers. Students for the Course should reach Lucknow not later than the morning of March 6th and should come to Reid Hall (School of Commerce), at the Christian College, Golaganj. Sleeping accommodations will be available from the night of March 5th. The Course will be open to male teachers who have passed the High School Examination or its equivalent and have taught for at least one year. Preference will be given to applicants who are Christians. A limited number of prospective teachers may be admitted without meeting the requirement of one year's teaching experience, if they are otherwise well qualified. Address applications to Rev. J. C. Manry, Secretary, Training Course, Ewing Christian College, Allahabad. The tuition fee for the Course is Rs. 15. This fee will not be charged in the case of teachers deputed by schools of the American Presbyterian Mission, the Methodist Episcopal Church, or any other Mission or Church which may share in the financial support of the Course. A registration fee of Rs. 5 will be charged from all students on registration. The tuition and registration fees are both payable on or before March 6th. Board and lodging will be provided at cost. These charges will amount to about Rs. 15 per month for board and Rs. 5 for room rent and electric light during the entire Course. These charges are payable monthly in advance. The Courses of Study include Practice Teaching, Problems of Teaching, Problems of Technique, School Management and Hygiene, Religious Education, Methods of Teaching, Child Study, and Oral English in the High School. More attention will be paid to Practice Teaching than in either of the former Courses. The study of psychology and technique will be closely related to the work in the classroom. Approximately one-sixth of the entire period will be devoted to continuous practice. A carefully selected library of modern books on education provides ample opportunities for those who desire to read widely in the professional field. Former students have expressed special appreciation of this provision. A series of special lectures on subjects of interest to teachers will be arranged for Friday evenings, beginning with March 12th. The teachers of the city will be invited to attend these lectures. On each Saturday of the Course, beginning with March 13th, visits will be paid to places and institutions of interest in the city of Lucknow, including the Parks, the University, the Isabella Thoburn College for Women, La Martiniere College, the Prince of Wales Zoological Gardens, factories, printing presses, etc. Methods of conducting such excursions with school classes will be emphasized. Daily participation in athletics will be expected of all. The Course will be held in the Reid Hall of the School of Commerce, Lucknow Christian College.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Prohibition League, Malabar: With a view to co-ordinate the activities of the Temperance organisations and movements in the District and to start Temperance organisations wherever necessary, a well-attended meeting was held on Friday the 26th January at Calicut in the premises of the Servants of India Society. Signatories to the notice convening the meeting included the leaders of all political parties in Calicut. Among those present were Messrs. C. Krishnan, Manjeri Ramaiyer, B. S. Tripuranthaka Mudaliar, K. Madhavan Nair, C. Gopalan Nair, E. Raman Menon, A. K. T. K M. Gupta Nambudripad, K. V. Suryanarayana Aiyar, K. Madhava Menon, E. Prasad and Isaac Pillai of the Y M. C. A., Dr. Balaram and P. A. Sankara Sastri, Rao Bahadur V. Govindan, Rao Saheb U. B. Srinivasa Rao, Mr. C. Krishnan, B.A., B. L., Editor of the Mitawadi was voted to the chair. Mr. Manjeri Ramaiyer moved the main resolution regarding the formation of the Prohibition League. He spoke at length on the need for such organisations to deal with the evils that are seriously threatening the society and made an earnest appeal to all to spare no efforts to do propaganda and agitate for the removal of the curse of drink. Messrs. Tripuranthaka Mudaliar and K. Madhavan Nair supported the resolution pointing out that the League provided a platform on which people belonging to different religions and political parties could join and work for the common cause putting aside their differences. Mr. A. S. Krishna Aiyar, Vakil, spoke on the need for active propaganda. The resolution was unanimously passed. Then Mr. K. V. Suryanarayana Aiyar proposed and Mr. C. Gopalan Nair seconded that the following office-bearers be appointed:— Mr. C. Krishnan, B.A., B L., President, Messrs. Manjeri Ramaiyer and K. Madhavan Nair, B.A., B.L., Vice-Presidents, Mr. B. S. Tripuranthaka Mudaliar, Treasurer and Messrs. C. Gopalan Nair, B.A., B L., E. Raman Menon, B.A., L T. and R. Suryanarayana Rao of the Servants of India Society as Joint Secretaries. A Committee with power to co-opt consisting of Messrs. Rao Saheb U. B. Srinivasa Rao, M. S. Madhava Rao, E. Prasad, Gupta Nambudripad, K. Madhava Menon, P. A. Sankara Sastri, K. V. Suryanarayana Aiyar, Dr, Balaram, Miss Unaki and Srimati Ramabai Madhava Rao, was also appointed.

Problem of Women's Education: Presiding recently at the prize distribution of the Bethune College and School, Mr. E. F. Oaten, Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, advocated reform of women's education. He said in effect women should guide and control the system of education for their sex. In their attempt to persuade the girls into schools they offered a course of study devised for boys which was alleged by competent critics, English and Indian, to expose the future motherhood contrary to a wasting influence and to impose a strain which owing to lack of adaptation to new conditions was harmful to their health. He said that he himself was not going to sketch any proposal for a better state of things. He was a mere man and he considered this was not a matter to be settled by men. At the same time he had his views and one of them was that Bengalee girls of fifteen or sixteen ought not to be exposed to the strain and worry of examination at all, specially in those cases where marriage was destined to follow shortly after. Mr. Oaten recalled that the former Principal of the Bethune College, Miss Janau, had advocated a commission of women to deal with women's education. The Sadler Commission practically adopted the suggestion and advocated a special standing committee of women to advise the Board of Secondary and Intermediate Education and a special board of women enjoying a substantial measure of autonomy in the University of Calcutta to organise a provision for advanced education for women. Mr Oaten advised the women of Bengal to take the matter up and with a united voice to demand that standing committee and that special board proposed by the Sadler Commission. The women should tell them with one voice what they wanted and keep on telling them until they got it. For, until the conditions were changed and schools were freed from examination fetish and given a curriculum advised and approved by the women, he not only did not believe a large extension of secondary education was possible but was exceedingly doubtful whether it was wholly desirable.

Secondary Commercial Examination: In response to representations made urging the need for the establishment of a Secondary Commercial Examination based on the conditions existing in this Presidency, the Bombay Government have decided to institute a Commercial and Clerical Certificate Examination. For this examination the following subjects will be compulsory :—1. English, including Precis Writing and Commercial Correspondence. 2. Commercial Arithmetic, chiefly of a practical nature. 3. Elementary Book-keeping. 4. Commercial Geography. In addition there will be two optional subjects, selected from (1) Shorthand, (2) Type-writing, (3) Office Management, Filing, etc., (4) Accountancy, i. e., more advanced book-keeping, (5) Administration, i. e., relations of Government with local bodies, (6) Indian Banking (Elementary) and such other subjects as may hereafter be thought necessary. It is proposed to hold the examination in April, the first examination being held in 1927. No candidate will be admitted to the examination unless he has, during the previous academic year, been a regular student of an institution recognised for the purposes of this examination. Applications for recognition for the purposes of the examination should be addressed to the Director of Public Instruction and submitted through the Inspector of Commercial Schools, C/o. The Principal, Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics, Bombay.

Indian Art Publication: Messrs. T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd., 1, Adelphi Terrace, London, W. C. 2, announce the publication of the "Charm of Indian Art" by W. E. Gladstone Solomon, Demy 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, 10s. 6d. net. The author of this very interesting book can claim to write with authority, for he is the Principal of the Sir J. J. School of Art, Bombay, and Curator of the Art Section of the Prince of Wales' Museum in that city. The book is full of good things, legends and fairy tales, illustrating the author's points, and the pictures, showing the masterpieces of Indian craft, as well as of domestic art in the homes of the people, are beautiful.

Radha Soami Dham, Benares State: A meeting of the Satsangis of Radha Soami Dham, Benares State, was held on the 18th January 1926 (Basant Panchami) to lay the foundation of Radha Soami Sanskrit School in the premises of the Radha Soami Dham Temple. Satsangis from Gorakapur, Azamgarh, Chunar and Ranchi etc., were present in the meeting besides the inhabitants of adjoining villages. The School was opened in the presence of Babu Lalta Prasad Sahib, Deputy Inspector of Schools, Benares State, after a short and impressive speech by Mahrishi Shiv Bart Lal Sahib, M. A., LL. D. The Pandit who has been appointed as Head Teacher is an able man. It is expected that the school will be able to do useful and good work among the Brahman residents of Benares State who are mostly illiterate.

Maharajas of Darbhanga and Baroda Honoured: The Varanashi Vidya Parishat of Benares has been pleased to confer the titles of Bharat Dharma Diwakar and Bharat Vidya Kala Sudhakar on their Highnesses the Maharajas of Darbhanga and Baroda respectively in recognition of their varied high attributes. Both these honours were announced by His Holiness Sankaracharya Maharaj of Sarda Pitha, at the Sanatan Dharma Sammelan, Dwarka, in which several princes participated.

Awakening of Caste-Hindus in Malabar The new awakening that has come over caste Hindus as a result of the recent satyagraha campaigns is evidenced in the remarkable fact that sixty Pulayas were allowed to pass unmolested along the temple road at Chengannur in Central Travancore with the approval of the local caste Hindu leaders. The Hindu leaders themselves escorted the untouchables to the temple gate where they made their offerings of fruits and ghee. Police were not in evidence anywhere and the whole thing passed off without hitch.

Swami Shraddhanand and Hindu Mahasabha: Swami Shraddhanand has resigned his Vice-Presidentship and membership of the Executive committee of the Hindu Mahasabha for the reason that he was not allowed to move at the Hindu Sabha held at Rohtak under the presidency of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya a resolution advocating the re-marriage of child widows as in the opinion of the promoters of the Hindu Sabha movement such an act would tell upon its activities.

A Maternity Home in Ahmedabad: Sheth Chunilal Nagindas Chinoy has offered to give one lakh of rupees to the Municipality for the opening of a maternity home for high caste Hindu women. Half the sum will be given for the construction and equipment of the home provided the Municipality gives land free near the Municipal office and half the sum would be given in Government promissory notes for the maintenance of the home out of the interest accruing from that sum.

Vice-Chancellor of Andhra University: It is understood that Mr. C. R. Reddy, M.L.C., of the United Nationalist Party has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of the Andhra University and Mr. C. D. Subrahmanya Chetty of the Indian Educational Service and now District Educational Officer, Registrar of the same University.

A Distinguished Lady Honoured: Mrs. Vidyagauri Ramanbhai Nilkanth, M. B. B., has been awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind Gold Medal recently. She was the recipient of an address from the Sanitary Association of Ahmedabad in honour of the same.

Hospitals in the Mofussil: A Press Note from the Director of Information, Bombay, says: A revised rule relating to the Advisory Committees of Hospitals in the mofussil says that members of the Advisory Committee may visit the hospital as often as they like and any day during reasonable hours either individually or in committee. Should the committee desire to visit for any particular purpose, the time of such visit should be arranged with the Medical Officer concerned.

NOTES

Gokhale and Gandhi: We publish to-day a letter from Mr. G. Ramachandran, Shantiniketan, taking exception to a recent contrast which we made between Gokhale and Gandhi. Our main point was that while Gokhale relied mainly upon the English-educated classes for working out the regeneration of the country, Mahatma Gandhi regarded them and English education itself as a hindrance to it. Mr. Ramachandran's niceties are beside the point. No one says that the Indian educational system is perfect. There is no perfect system anywhere in the world. But while Tagore did not propose to sweep aside the existing system but only to improve upon it, Gandhi wanted students to come out of the recognised schools and colleges, to have the Universities closed, and educated men to convert themselves by wearing coarse Khaddar, by plying the Charkha and by letting their children run about in the streets rather than attend the existing institutions, into imitation peasants and farmers. What Mahatmaji thought of Western culture is not the point at issue. The point is that his plan, if it had succeeded, would have put an end to English education and the English-educated classes. No one who views the question with an unbiassed mind, can fail to see that the idea of secular freedom, as distinguished from spiritual freedom, was foreign to the genuis of both Hindu and Mahomedan culture and that India owes it entirely to English education, and that the English-educated classes alone understand and appreciate it to any extent. Even they have not fully grasped the significance of freedom as the condition of the evolution of humanity, individual and social as well as spiritual, otherwise they would have thrown themselves heart and soul in the movements of social and religious reform more than in political agitation. The remedy is more and not less of English and Western education. Gokhale told the educated classes that while they had on the one hand to struggle against a powerful bureaucracy, on the other, they had to struggle with a vast mass of ignorant and superstitious humanity. They stood between the two forces and had to maintain the struggle on both points. Mahatmaji, in order to concentrate upon the struggle with the bureaucracy, abandoned, at least during the Non-Co-operation interlude, the struggle with the ignorant and illiterate masses and, in fact, made them the arbiter of the national destiny. That, as far as we can foresee, will be the verdict on Mahatmaji's incursion into politics of any one who fifty or a hundred years hence views it in its strict historical perspective.

Sir Leslie Wilson: Sir Leslie Wilson, the Governor of Bombay, left Bombay by the mail steamer which sailed on Saturday last. Lady Wilson has been seriously ill for some days past and it was his intention to accompany her as far as Aden which is within the jurisdiction of the Bombay Government and to return to Bombay. But the condition of Lady Wilson's health did not allow him to return from Aden and he decided to go with her to England. A year ago this would have meant the relinquishment of his office, as there was no provision in the Government of India Act for the Viceroy and the Governors of Presidencies to leave India during their five years' term of office. On the contrary, it was provided that a Governor or Viceroy who left India automatically vacated his office. Early last year, however, an amendment was introduced in the law providing for the grant of leave up to a maximum of four months to these officials and Lord Reading was the first to avail himself of this provision. Lord Lytton, the Governor of Bengal, is also shortly proceeding to England on leave. Sir Leslie Wilson's decision was too sudden to permit of the formalities prescribed for the grant of leave and there was for a day or two some doubt as to the exact legal consequences of his Excellency's departure from Aden. We are glad, however, that it has been since announced that the technical difficulties have been surmounted and that Sir Leslie Wilson has been granted leave for four months. Sir Henry Lawrence, the Senior Member of the Executive Council, is to act as Governor. During the two years that he has been at the head of the administration in this Presidency, Sir Leslie Wilson, in the face of very great difficulties, had won the public confidence by his high personal qualities. It is, therefore, well that he will come back to carry on the administration which, owing to the failure of the Bombay Reclamation Scheme, is just now in need of the guidance of a wise and far-seeing statesman who enjoys the confidence of the people.

The League Council: The failure of the Powers to reach an agreement on the question of the admission of Germany to a permanent seat in the League Council, though it will not cause much regret to us in India,—for the accession of Germany to the League will only add one more first-class Power to the league of Western imperialistic exploitation—affords one more striking illustration of how far Europe is from the much-vaunted Locarno spirit. The entire blame for this tragedy, as Sir Austen Chamberlain called it, should be laid at the doors of France, for it was she who, in order to counteract German influence in the League Council, put up the simultaneous candidature of some smaller Powers. So far as Germany is concerned, she was perfectly within her right to oppose the enlargement of the permanent seats in the Council, for when the Locarno Pact was made, it was one of the conditions of her entering the League Council that its composition should be left unaltered. The conduct of England also in this transaction is not above reproach, for it was the vacillating policy of Sir Austen

Chamberlain that gave a handle to French designs and ambitions and, if only England had exerted proper pressure upon the other Powers, the admission of Germany to the League would have by this time been secured.

The Marwari Conference: Along with the Hindu Mahasabha which recently held its session at Delhi, there was also held the All-India Marwari Conference under the presidentship of Seth Jamanlal Bajaj. Seth Jamanlal, in his presidential address, extracts from which we print to-day, gave some sound advice to the members of his community. The Marwari community is intensely orthodox and conservative in its outlook. In this as in other communities, owing to the influence of modern education, a small party of reformers has grown up which chafes at narrow meaningless social distinctions. Jamanlal is one of those who belong to this new reform party and he condemned as a veritable engine of oppression the growing practice now-a-days on the part of the orthodox section to punish with ostracism sincere young men who deserved to be honoured for their courage, for no other reason than their desire to get rid of narrow social distinctions. On the contrary, he warned the young reformers not to rush matters and advised them to try to convert the orthodox by gentle persuasion, suffering and by force of personal example. Seth Jamanlal also unflinchingly denounced the multiplication of sub-castes, the restrictions on inter-dining and intermarriage between them, the system of child marriages, the wasteful extravagance on the occasion of wedding, the craze for ornaments, the purda system, the interdiction on visits to foreign countries and such like absurd customs which the Marwaris share in common with other communities. In the end, Seth Jamanlal pleaded for a broad-minded and tolerant outlook on their part. Though Seth Jamanlal holds strong views on widow re-marriage, it is a pity that he was compelled not to speak anything on the subject. We are glad to see that some ladies spoke on the evils of child marriage and the ideals of Grihasthashram, and resolutions were passed urging reform in age, expenses and ceremonies connected with marriage and condemning polygamy and the evil practice of selling away young girls to old men in marriage. The Vaishya or the commercial classes are the most conservative custodians of orthodox Hinduism and not the Brahmins as is generally supposed by writers who are either ignorant of the real conditions of the Hindu society or are interested in running down the Brahmins for political reasons. A Hindu widow re-marriage was celebrated last Wednesday under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association and a meeting consisting of a large number of Bhatia ladies and gentlemen was held in the evening to congratulate the couple on their moral courage. It is, therefore, a very hopeful sign that the two great commercial castes, the Marwaris and Bhatias, are beginning to realise the importance of social reform.

Self-Government for Tamil Districts: The resolution which Sir Sankaran Nair moved the other day in the Council of State demanding self-goverment for the Tamil districts alone and which was lost without a division, would almost be considered as highly fantastical but for the fact that the author intended it as an experiment in provincial autonomy which, on its satisfactory working, might be extended to other provinces also. According to Sir Sankaran, the government is to consist of the King, a Senate and a House of Commons. The Parliament would be given full power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the province in respect of all subjects including taxation, expenditure, loans, postal and telegraphic services, railways, aeroplanes, and naval, military and air forces. Undoubtedly, the Tamil districts possess certain special qualifications as compared with other provinces for standing the test which Sir Sankaran wants to impose on them. But our point is that Sir Sankaran's resolution strikes at the root of nationalism to which all the best brains in India are striving. The basic defect of Sir Sankaran's scheme is that it divides India into a congeries of States each independent of the other with no correlation between them, which will only land us back into the old state of things which made India a prey to successive invasions.

Sir Abdur Rahim's New Role: It is much to be regretted that Sir Abdur Rahim's recent utterances, instead of assuaging, should only aggravate his already provocative presidential address at the Muslim League. He is reported to have said that the Swarajists walked out of the Legislative Assembly just to extricate themselves from the miserable predicament in which they had placed themselves in regard to the resolution on the extension of the Reforms to the North West Frontier Province. For our part, we are strongly opposed to the Swarajist policy of walk-out, but it will be rather ungracious on the part of any one to attribute it to the cause which Sir Abdur Rahim alleges. We well know that it was only in obedience to the mandate of the Cawnpore Congress and their walk-out during the period when the N.W.F.P. resolution comes up for discussion is only purely accidental. Again, a few days back, Sir Abdur Rahim proposed that Mahomedan education should be taken out of the hands of the Calcutta University because it proposed to allow Bengali as the medium of instruction at the Matriculation stage, while he wanted Bengali Mahomedans to adopt Urdu as their vernacular. Strange to say, however, the Ulemas of Bengal and Assam have adopted a strong resolution condemning his proposal and declaring that Bengali which is the mother-tongue of Bengal Mahomedans should continue to be so. Sir Abdur Rahim has thus been disowned by his own co-religionists.

Infant Welfare in Bombay: We are glad to see that under the inspiration of Lady Wilson, his Excellency the Governor's wife,—who, we hope, will soon recover from her present illness—a scheme called the "Village Baby Scheme" has been set on foot and the Poona District Board has already put it in practice. The scheme, shortly is to give free instruction and practical training to the village dais in the care of new-born babies. It is found that, in villages, most of the babies die within the first month of their birth owing to the bad instruments which the dais use in attending delivery cases and owing to the non-observance of some elementary rules of sanitation and hygiene. It is rather costly to supply villages with trained midwives who have received regular medical education and so it was found that it would be better to utilise the existing agencies, viz., the dais. The scheme was long in contemplation, but it was Lady Wilson who found it eminently practical and gave every support to it, herself contributing Rs. 4,000 towards the cost of hygienic boxes to be placed in the charge of village officials for use by the nurses and mid-wives in their work in the villages. The Poona District Board was the first to embrace the scheme. The Presidency owes a deep debt of gratitude to Lady Wilson for the sympathy she has always evinced in the cause of the poor and the needy.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MARCH 20, 1926.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

The ninth session of the Hindu Mahasabha was held at Delhi on Saturday last under the presidentship of Raja Narendranath. We have more than once pointed out in these columns that the existence of the Hindu Mahasabha can be justified only in so far as it is able in a great measure to consolidate and reconstruct Hindu society by removing all the evils that are now eating into its vitals. We have, therefore, to regret the political orientation that is being given more and more to the activities of the Mahasabha to the neglect of its social side. The proceedings of the Sabha bear ample testimony to this. More time was taken up with the discussion of the running of Hindu Mahasabha candidates at the ensuing elections and the extension of the Reforms to the North-West Frontier Province than with the discussion of urgent social reforms that ought to be effected in Hindu society. It was only in regard to the removal of untouchability that the Sabha adopted a resolution and that too a halting one and, as regards the other important reforms such as the abolition of the purda, the prohibition of polygamy, the raising of the marriageable age of both sexes and the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, liquors and drugs, it has not yet sufficiently realised their importance. The attitude of the Sabha in regard to widow re-marriage is most deplorable and it is stated that Swami Shraddhanand was compelled not to move the resolution on widow re-marriage owing to the vigorous opposition of the orthodox die-hards.

We print elsewhere extracts from the presidential address of Raja Narendranath. The only noteworthy portions of it from the point of view of the social reformer are those relating to the removal of untouchability, the elevation of women and the necessity of military training for all castes and classes of people in the country. As Raja Narendranath said, the sanction given by Hindu society to untouchability and to the treatment meted out to the depressed classes is a negation of democracy and of democratic principles. Not only on grounds of political expediency but on humanitarian considerations, it is high time for us to remove this blot on Hinduism. Likewise, we have to change our social code in regard to the treatment of our women more in accordance with modern which are also our ancient conceptions. In order that the future India may equip itself for self-defence, Raja Narendranath emphasised that the work of national defence should not be confined to the Kshatriya caste alone as of old, but that the Brahmin and the Vaishya should be as ready to wield the sword as the Rajput or the Jat. It is rather strange that the President who so eloquently pleaded for the physical regeneration of Hindu society should have failed to say anything about the system of child marriages which is at the root of all physical degeneracy. We are glad to see that Mr. Kedarnath, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, emphasised this point. The only way of putting an end to this evil is by recourse to legislation raising the marriageable age.

The resolution on the removal of untouchability is so mildly worded that we do not understand the mentality of a certain section of people who opposed it and even indulged in the theatrical gesture of a walk-out. The resolution is as follows: "This session of the Hindu Mahasabha appeals to Hindus in general to remove all restraints which are at present imposed on the so-called depressed classes called untouchables in the way of their use of public schools, public wells and public roads and in their attendance at public meetings. This Conference appeals to the authorities of Hindu temples to provide facilities for Devadarshan." As Lala Lajpat Rai pointed out, the new resolution, while it cannot prevent the use of public roads and public schools by the untouchables, does not allow them the use of private institutions and temple admission The resolution is thus only of a permissive and not mandatory character in respect of private institutions and temples. Eventually, we are glad Pandit Malaviya's appeal prevailed over the dissentients. As a matter of fact, however, we hope owners of private schools and wells and temple authorities will not stick to the letter of the resolution but will give more facilities to the untouchables. The resolution which the Sabha adopted opposing the extension of the Reforms to the North West Frontier Province is only calculated to strain further the already over-strained relations between Hindus and Muslims. As we have said on another occasion, the Hindu minority there as elsewhere will have to accommodate itself to the Muslim majority and only a policy of trust can beget trust in turn. We frankly do not understand the contention of the Sabha that the re-marriage of widows is opposed to Shastraic principles. We quoted last week a passage from the Manu Smriti enjoining re-marriage of widows under certain conditions. Enforced widowhood, no more than untouchability, is sanctioned by the Shastras. The attitude of the Sabha in regard to this question will only estrange the reforming section of the society from it as it has already done in the case of Swami Shraddhanandji, and if only this desirable reform were incorporated in the programme of the Sabha, there would have been no necessity for the Widow Remarriage Conference held subsequently in the same place under the presidentship of Swami Saraddhanand. And lastly we have to regret the unnecessary excursion into the political arena which the Sabha has made. Though the compromise resolution adopted by the Sabha says that the Hindu Sabha should not put forward candidates for the ensuing elections, it subsequently declares that, in case of apprehension that Hindu interests would be in danger, Hindu voters should oppose such candidates and, in some provinces, it authorises the Hindu Sabhas to run their own candidates for safeguarding their interests. Holding as we do that the Sabha should leave politics alone to politicians of whom we have only too many, we cannot but think that the Sabha would have done

well to pay heed to Pandit Motilal's advice and steered clear of politics altogether.

Along with the Mahasabha, there were also held at Delhi the Sanadhana Dharmists' Conference under the presidentship of Pandit Malaviya, the Shuddhi Conference with Dr. Moonje as President, and the Widow Remarriage Conference under the inspiring guidance of Swami Shraddhanand. Thus, the very multiplication of Hindu conferences is a distinct sign of the working of the ferment of progress in the stagnant pools of Hindu society.

INDIAN SOCIAL LIFE AND MODERN URDU POETRY.

(By Mr. Mohan Singh, M.A.)

I

But by the time youth slips a stage or two
While reading prose in that tough book he wrote, (Collating and emendating the same
And settling on the sense most to our mind)
We shut the clasps and find life's summer past.
Then who helps more, pray, to repair our loss—
Another Boehme with a tougher book
And subtler meanings of what roses say,—
Or some stout Mage like him of Halberstadt,
John, who made things Boehme wrote thoughts about?
He with a 'look you!' vents a brace of rhymes,
And in there breaks the sudden rose herself,
Over us, under, round us every side,
Nay, in and out the tables and the chairs
And musty volumes, Boehme's book and all—
Buries us with a glory, young once more,
Pouring Heaven into this shut house of life.

—(Transcendentalism).

We merely kept a Governor for form,
While this man walked about and took account
Of all thought, said and acted, then went home,
And wrote it fully to our Lord the King
Who has an itch to know things, He knows why,
And reads them in His bed-room of a night.

—(How It Strikes A Contemporary)

All art is social in its beginning and in its purpose, poetry specially so, carrying, as it does, its appeal to a vaster and more democratic circle. The poet like every other fellow human being is subject to the social contract. After having received through heredity, through books and teachers, through places and circumstances, beauty, love and life from the race and from the lower and higher creation, he starts fulfilling his own part of the contract. He gives back beauty, love and life, in the measure of his reach and growth and in the colour and form of his feeling and imagination. Yes, he gives back but gives back more than does an ordinary member of the social organism. At least, he ought to give back more. That, I trow, provides the right basis for building up the definition of a Genius. A Genius gives the world more than he receives under the social contract. Whatever he gives is for the use, for the enlightenment or for the beautification of society. His good and true and beautiful is for the moral, spiritual and aesthetic advance of the community. That is the purpose of his poetry. Does he keep it ever in view? Yes, then verily he poureth Heaven into this shut House of Life. Then verily he is the true and just Governor and "Town's true Master if the town but knew" and "recording chief-Inquisitor." No, then verily he is one of those hundreds of the 16th, 17th, 18th or 19th century Urdu Poets whose imaginary formal wooings of the pretty wine-serving boy,—wooings indulged in, in response more to the demands of the Court dancing girl, or the court itself, and a little less to the exigencies of a personal hideous romance, than to the demands either of Art itself or of society—which have advanced society indeed, but advanced on the downward path of mental lassitude and moral slipperiness.

Early Urdu Poetry.

Early Urdu Poetry falls into four clear-cut divisions, the Ghazal for being sung by the courtesan before drunk and debauched nobility or before sophisticated intellectuals and extravagant Sufis, the Qasida to be presented, off and on, to the King, the Subedar or the local Rais for fresh patronage or for increased support, tuned in the most flunkey-ish key, the Masnawi meant for the consumption of the love-tale-or-adventure-tale-thirsty masses, full of a certain ease, grace and colloquial charm, the Mussaddas or Vasokht, including the Sárapá, for the edification of the poet's friends who are in the know about the poet's "Affair" with a courtesan or with a pretty lad whose body from the Mang to the sole has perforce to be described as superlatively and superbly as possible. To bring myself closer to the time I have chosen to characterise, I will add a fifth class of poetry, thriving just previous to the period—that of the Marsia. That is for Shiahs alone. During the Muharrum they are to sing these mournful ditties in memory of the blessed Martyrs of Karbala.

Social Life under Mohammadan Rule.

Now you cannot blame the poet seriously. Poor man, he has to study the market solicitously and supply only those wares that are in demand. Flushed with the glories of the conquests, his brain teeming with thoughts of beautiful traditions of luxurious times agone and ahead, at peace with himself, "his" subjects and his God, sharing boisterously and bumperously in the concern called the Muslim Government (to analogise on the British Government), for the "advancement" of God's peace and God-given personal purses, surely the average affluent well-read influential Mohammadan had no worries or distractions, and the patronage-seeking poet could not smoothe by his soft langourous verses. Love, wine, Laila, Majnu, Jin and Dev, Farun and Shumun, Praise of the King, and the praise of the Prophet (on whom be peace,) all in their own proper Persian or Arabic setting, vocabulary and form, were asked for and were consequently copiously supplied. Few and far between were the apostles of real Sufism or true love. There was produced one Mir and one Dard, by over six centuries of continued poetic tradition. Men, here and there, whom temperament or poverty or genuine disgust of a pampered sophisticated society or the buffets of a precarious court favour had made solitaires of, did sing of other things and in other tunes. But their number is almost nil, while they who all the while wooed the young curly-haired wine-server, but who insisted on their love for him being interpreted as love for the Divine Boy,—well, their number is legion.

Post-Mutiny Poetry.

Mutiny or rebellion, whatever you call it, changed things wholesale. The Muslim part of the Indian society had received tremendous shocks and staggering blows. Life's crosses! What are they? Ask Bahadur Shah, the last Mughal Emperor. He will say: "Yes I know them. I know them a great deal to my cost—And I have sung of them to the best of my ability in the traditional all-hedging-in all-cramping Ghazal-metre. Why not, refer to my compiled Dewan for an answer to your query?" Ghalib could answer it capitally well. And a host of others. The demand has changed, the demand by the society and the demand by the heart. Whosoever has poetry as his all-absorbing vocation now finds it impossible to place things about the Saqi on the market. The underling if comfortably placed about the matter of his stomach, may continue to do so But not he, the true poet. He will, in obedience to the outer as well as the inner call and urge, not sing light-headedly and light-heartedly, but he will think in song. For the whole society is engaged in thinking furiously. The slap of Father time has set it thinking so. Think! yes: but what about these dashed black-holic limits of the Ghazal? No you cannot break away with the tradition to find fuller utterance for yourself. Continue pouring as much of serious thoughts or trite emotions about Man, God and Nature, as you can, in these very bottles. Very well, says the poet. But do not as yet widen the bounds of subject matter. Society is in the melting pot. The individuality of the Society. When society the bigger organism has no individuality, how can the poor part—the puny poet have? What was it that Indian society from 1857 to 1900 was thinking clearly and sanely and fearlessly, that could be enshrined by the poet safely within the 20-word-chambers of the Ghazal? Not much indeed. But whatever there was in the matter of education or social reform or religious contemplation, was a distinct advance on the old love-lornness. We find in it the germs of that which in such abundant bloom and with such enthralling charm is manifest in Modern Urdu Poetry—roughly from 1900 A. D. onwards.

GOKHALE AND GANDHI.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In the course of a note under the caption "Gokhale and Gandhi" you have recently written that Mahatma Gandhi regards the English-educated community in India as a "devitalised body incapable of achieving any solid good," and that as a first step towards national service he insists that it should divest itself of 'all its acquired characters." You also go on to add: "In fact the Gandhi scheme involved the skipping of a century of modern education and plunging right into the middle of the eighteenth century."

The name for those who have misunderstood Gandhiji's attitude towards English-education is really 'Legion'. In one way it was inevitable. Gandhiji's views on Education are so radical and his condemnation of the system that obtains in India so frank that it was natural that those who could not see the perfect poise of his mind should have honoured him with all kinds of extra extreme views. But it is certainly surprising that you too did not understand more precisely Gandhiji's position. And if radical differences with the present system of Education in India means wanting to swing back into the eighteenth century, then certainly even those like Rabindranath Tagore should be classed among those that desire such a change.

Is it true that Gandhiji looks upon the English-educated community as a "devitalised body incapable of achieving any solid good"? What is true is that Gandhiji when he was face to face with the slave mentality which was a national delusion, that salvation was impossible for India unless every man and woman got armed with degrees offered by the Universities in India, stood up with the courage of his conviction against this delusion and this slave mentality. And these Universities!—will you deny, Sir, that they are but copies, and imperfect at that, of Western Universities? And it has to be remembered that even here Gandhiji was not speaking against English culture as such but of the educational system that is in vogue.

As regards the English-educated communities Gandhiji does and has always regarded that they are certainly not the best products that could be had. For the system that produces them does not nurture them in all that is best and noblest in Indian culture. If only you will know that in numberless High Schools and even Colleges to-day Clive is held up as a hero and Warren Hastings as another and that a B Sc. student of the Calcutta University confessed to the writer himself the other day that he did not know what and where Kerala is (!), then certainly you will understand how essential it was that some one should have stood up and proclaimed how harmful this system was and is. What Gandhiji has fought against is the exaggerated emphasis that has been increasingly laid on the necessity of obtaining the hall marks offered by the Indian Universities and also the delusion that, without English culture, nothing was possible. In his own Ashram every boy and girl gets ample opportunity to learn English and to imbibe the best that is in English culture. But English is not given any exaggerated predominance nor is it nurtured over the graves of vernaculars.

But the unkindest cut of all seems to be your attribution to Gandhiji of the 'insistence' that the English-educated community should get rid of "all acquired characters." You seem to be so sure of this 'insistence' that you gaily go forward to characterise this as an attempt to go back to the eighteenth century. Many of those closest and nearest to Gandhiji have drunk deep of English culture, but this 'insistence' has never been in the experience of any one of them. One can only wonder how you have made this strange discovery

And what do you signify by the eighteenth century? Do you mean ignorance, primitivity or what? The truth is that Gandhiji's call is not to go back to the eighteenth century, but a call to go forward as quick as men can go to the thrice-blessed century yet ahead when Education would minister unto all and when instead of widening every moment the gulf between the classes and the masses it would bring them closer together in good-will and amity and in a united effort to uplift humanity. But if that century has anything in common with the poor eighteenth, it will be none of Gandhiji's fault.

You mention Raja Ram Mohan Roy. But he stood in a different category. He stood between the old world and the new. What faced him was national stagnation. And so with the wisdom of a prophet he created the mighty impetus that swung India from the night of the past to the dawn of the future. His purpose has been served. But we are face to face to-day with a mad rush. If Ram Mohan were alive to-day and saw how alien in spirit and body our modern Indian Universities are his heart would have cried out in agony. He would have been the first to realise that to persist in the impetus previously created would now mean death and not life. He would have also seen that this persistence would mean the loss of all the priceless treasures of our great past.

In this hour of our trial what is needed is to stand fast and not be swept away. This does not mean that we should refuse light from without at all—only our light should not be blown out in the storm.

Yours etc.,

Santiniketan. G. RAMACHANDRAN.

POSITION OF ANCIENT INDIAN WOMANHOOD.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In the interests of straight thinking and an even moderate respect for the exact historical truth, permit me to register a protest against your publishing such articles as that on 'National Life and Harmony' and others of its ilk. With all the respect in the world for Indian womanhood, and having dedicated my life to the spread of the doctrine that every man and woman is a child of God, intrinsically capable of sainthood, and furthermore believing in India and in the peoples of India, permit me to say that the article quoted above gives a wholly false impression of the position and status of ancient Indian womanhood. In ancient days the position of woman was nowhere enviable, nowhere ideal, nowhere as good as it is today. India is no exception to the rule. It is not good historical technique to read the flattering things and leave out the damaging evidence, to draw a conclusion from Ruth and to leave out the wife of Uriah the Hittite, to draw a conclusion from Sita and overlook the evidence that Raja Nala could gamble away his wife, (his property). In glorifying the past let us not forget that immortal Greece rested on the labour of human slaves (I need not point what this means for the female slave), that the ancient and splendid civilizations of Babylon had fertilization ceremonies most degrading to their womanhood, that Manu has some rather explicit statements about the place of womanhood, that in ancient India—as in practically all other ancient countries—there was no provision whatever for the education of women in the learning of the day. No historian doubts, Sir, that in all periods of the world's history and in all climes, women of dominant personality and outstanding ability have broken through every bond that held them down, but, why deny the bonds? No one doubts, Sir, that even when the wife is a slave, a chattel, a very genuine love and affection can and often does spring up between man and wife and many instances can be cited to prove the fact, but, why deny the servanthood and chatteldom? No one doubts that there were a few gifted and privileged daughters of wealthy, powerful or learned men who became educated, but, why forget the vast majority for whom there was no education and no learning, from whom the secrets of learning were for ever locked, who were inherently inferior and everlastingly dependent.

In short, Sir, I regret to see you among the list of narrow nationalist jingoes. The past of no nation was morally enviable, no people ever had the ideals which we have today, no people ever had the knowledge we have today, no people were ever so educated as we are today, no people were ever so near self-government as the countries of the world are to-day. Women were never so free and well as they are to-day. Let us leave the dead past. It stinks. Without lying about it, or to speak more kindly, without idealizing it, it has not very much to teach us.

True, to get an ideal today, to read it into some old myth of the nation, and then triumphantly drag it forth and wave it in the air, is a good way to make people willing to follow the said ideal. Pragmatically it is alright—it works. But I am not at all sure that the by-products are good. The by-products of a lie generally are not. Let us think straight, follow the truth, look forward for guidance not backward, and grow into internationalists. I get lots of "kick" out of your magazine. Keep it up.

Harda, C. P. D. A. McGAVRAN.

[When the position of women in Ancient India is referred to in terms of praise, the Vedic period is generally meant. Then the women enjoyed an equal position with men as is shown by the fact that there were women seers and sages, adult marriage was the rule and there were no hampering restrictions on women's freedom such as were introduced later. The explanation seems to be that the Vedic community consisted exclusively of Aryans, and women's disabilities increased progressively with the practice of Aryans taking wives from non-Aryan tribes. It is no doubt wrong to trace the past indiscriminately, but it is equally wrong to entertain the view that our ancestors were all fools or knaves and that we are the only wise and honest people.—ED., I.S.R.]

BIRTH CONTROL BY SELF-CONTROL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In reply to Prof. Karve I would say, to begin with that to speak of body in the strain of vile exigencies, even in retort, is a vile suggestion.

Prof. Karve accuses me of not descending to face the realities of life and of turning back from them. To descend to the realities of life is not to face them; these realities grow stronger the more they are faced. To invent means for the gratification of passions is to provide the child with fire for toy. Bishop Berkeley says: "Man is an animal, formidable both from his passions and his

reasons, his passions often urging him to great evils, and his reason furnishing means to achieve them." The right course towards such realities of life lies not in descending but in transcending them.

Why artificial Birth-Control is a pernicious and insidious method can be shown easily, but the reasons are too many to be tabulated here. I give some below:—

It facilitated the systematic immoral practice. Reform workers report that due to this facility reform work among the fallen women of the West is growing more and more difficult.

This method deadens the delicate sensitive feelings which is the possession and evidence of human beings alone. Mr. Zacharias says: "To prevent the conception of children creates a mental attitude, which again and again has led to artificial miscarriages, when the "contraceptive" has failed, and connivance at abortion to connivance at infanticide."

It undermines that noble aspect of mankind that looks upon this body as an organ for the growth of superman or soul, and also the faith that believes in a divine ordinance and that everything is planned and ordained by an all-wise Providence, so long as we do our part conscientiously.

Generally, the reason given for this artificial Birth-Control is poverty. Dr. L. I. Dublin of New York says: "It is among those whose favourable economic and social status makes them need it least that contraceptive information is most widely disseminated and most intensively used."

When organic function, apart from its high purpose of utility and duty, is indulged for self-gratification only, then the only line between man and beast is removed and man's name will be enlisted in the category of beast not long hence.

When men and women are so addicted to the love of self-gratification that exceeds their love to strive after something purer, higher and nobler, then the sanctity of home and married life is at stake as the spiritual binding is the only reliable bondage and true foundation of all relationship. The reason why "birth-control by self-control" is the right method, is not far to seek. When man is successful in his endeavour, it elevates his moral stature and where he fails, even there his failure serves to strengthen his will and power of self-control and leaves his moral fibre more enriched than before. Self-control is the vital motive power and the greatest dynamic force in the moral and mental world. Anything that tends to slacken its hold on man is injurious to home, happiness and society, beyond conception.

As regards the scientific advance of the West which Prof. Karve advocates to improve the economic condition of India, these contraceptives were invented not by a poor nation like India, but by the ruling nation of the world, rolling in wealth and luxury and seething in love of pleasure and enjoyment. Besides, these are invented more for pleasure than to relieve poverty. Heaven forbid that India should take to it. It will not only deprive her of her last means but will sap her of her past strength and honour. If it is for poverty, it is ridiculous. That the West with its great scientific advance, countless channels of trade and commerce, vast organization of industries and enormous resources of dependent colonies, should take to such puny artificial method of economy! Then the West with all its great advance of science and strenuous endeavour of intellect and human labour has not only failed to achieve any material gain or prosperity, but has brought on such inflamed poverty that has given rise to such petty artificialities of undecorous subsistence of livelihood! Then the West stands as a reproof against the advance of science and materialism which has so sadly failed to cope with the moral need of the people.

Prof. Karve while explaining his gland theory admits that carnal desire has much to do with the mind, heredity and environment. It is the same versification of mine when I say: "The elevation of man or woman is inter-dependent on the high standard of life as well as the general atmosphere that pervades." This may go to prove that the Science of Physiology is subservient to the Science of Mind or Spiritual Science. Now the heredity he speaks of must be a mental heritage that goes to influence the mind. This mental wealth can be acquired by moral strength alone. Therefore, the children of self-controlled parents alone can expect to inherit a moral heritage which not only equips them against immoderate carnal desire but places them in a better world of less sin and temptation in their struggle for existence.

As regards Prof. Karve's gland theory the instances are too numerous to be quoted here to prove that this theory holds no water at all. Mr. Zacharias says: "It has been notorious, ever since man has known his history, that individuals of either sex can and do practise complete chastity, often life-long, not only without any damage to their health but greatly to their physical and mental benefit. The physiological reason for this latter, somewhat surprising, effect has been rather obscure until our own days, when our new knowledge of the function of endocrine glands and the hormones they secrete into the blood-stream has thrown a wealth of new light on a subject which hitherto had to depend merely on the ipse dixit of ascetics and the subjective experience of mystics. This is not the place to enter into these investigations etc."

As lotus blooms in the swampy water, the sewage and filth make the universal manure of the luxuriant vegetation, poverty works as the greatest levelling factor of human arrogance, scavenger of immoral corruptions and corroding artificiality, the renovator of fresh life, creator of strong nerve tissues and the cradle of all greatness of the world, as necessity is the mother of all inventions. God's omnipotent hand protects one and all alike. His omnipresence embraces evil and good equally framing, fructifying, unfolding every evil in a glorious future of showering nectar to humanity. Human arrogance will only go to deter his own interest.

Yours etc.,

(Mrs.) Kumidini Ganti.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS TO THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

The following are extracts from the presidential address delivered by Raja Narendranath to the Hindu Mahasabha held at Delhi on the 13th March. After referring to the apparent conflict of social institutions actually prevailing in the country and the ideals which the people of that country put before themselves, he said:

realpatidar.com

realpatidar.com

The proposition with which I am now directly concerned is that those who aim at higher principle and profess them may find it impossible to give them practical shape, owing to circumstances which are not of their creation. Temporary recession or falling back may be necessitated by circumstances beyond their control. We aim at nationalisation, but assume for the present a communal attitude because that attitude has been forced upon us by circumstances. One of the objects of the Mahasabha is to promote good feelings between the Hindus and other communities in India and to act in a friendly way with them with a view to evolve a united and self-governing Indian nation. We are prepared to throw up the lower for the higher ideal, the moment the necessity for it ceases. I do not wish to describe at any length the circumstances which have forced communalism upon us and I do not wish to assign proportions to the various contributory causes. I take notice of the fact that communalism exists, that discrimination between caste and creed for the acquisition of civic rights, which is a general way of describing communalism, is enforced in every part of Hindustan, that in most places it prejudicially affects the civic rights of Hindus, whilst in some places and in certain spheres it divides them hopelessly. The united voice of 220 millions of Hindus should be raised against this discriminative policy, which, however, is only one of the reasons why the Mahasabha has come into existence.

Defence of the Country.

But the Sabha has a wider scope and a larger field of work which the present social and political circumstances have brought into existence. Those who accuse us of an outlook narrower than that of nationalism cannot find fault with our desire to obliterate such subdivisions as exist among us. We cannot become a nation, if we allow our own divisions and subdivisions to stand. Let me explain more fully what I mean by the obliteration of distinctions and divisions. Our political advancement will impose upon us the duty of self-defence and for the discharge of that duty all Hindus must be equally eligible and should be equally prepared. We have at present relegated this duty of defence to certain castes. It must be performed by all alike. A Brahmin and Vaisya should be as ready to wield the sword as a Rajput or a Jat. Economic conditions in India have undergone a great change and the occupations which at one time were assigned to certain castes cannot be allowed to remain their monopoly. The social and religious sanctions restricting certain castes to certain occupations, have ceased to operate. The division of labour to which the caste system of yore gave effect, disappeared with Mahommedan rule. The Mahommedan Government, followed by the British, maintained to a great extent the distinction between martial and non-martial classes, which it is now time to obliterate.

Untouchability.

By a natural course of evolution our system of Government is becoming democratic. In course of time we will find a democratic system of government fully established amongst us, a change in bringing about which the Hindus have played the most prominent part. Social and political institutions are closely allied to each other. The sanction given by Hindu society to untouchability and to the treatment meted out to the depressed classes is a negation of democracy and of democratic principles. It is difficult to trace the historical origin of the attitude of the higer class Hindus towards depressed classes. But there is no doubt that untouchability is a creation of latter day Hinduism. The duty of removing this stigma falls more heavily on the shoulders of the Hindus than on those of any other class; and an organised body of Hindus can best remove that stigma. It is very strange that one belonging to depressed classes has only to embrace Christianity or Islam and his untouchability in relation to Hindus disappears at once. A more illogical position it is difficult to conceive.

Equal Opportunities to All.

We live in an age in which we are unable to inculcate the principle that every one should think solely of his duties, the maintenance and enjoyment of privileges, which unequal natural gifts must create, being the natural consequence of the observance of duties by individual components of society. In the present age, every individual has to assert his own right and the equal assertion of rights by all, as also equal opportunities for the assertion of such rights (which is meant by natural freedom), tends in the long run to the enjoyment of legitimate rights by all. The Hindus attempted by what may be called a negative process what the modern European is trying to achieve by a positive process. Rights should be commensurate with natural gifts and society should be so constituted as to give equal opportunities to all for the exercise of natural powers and gifts. This being the principle on which the relations of individuals towards others or of a group of individuals towards other groups should be regulated, how are we in our treatment towards our sisters and daughters to give a practical shape to the noble doctrine embodied in the following verse of Manu: "Where the women are adored there the gods abide. Where they are not there is no peace." I do not wish to enter the arena of controversy, but if you have any respect for your ancient law-givers I ask you how you can reconcile enforced widowhood, enforced illiteracy and ignorance, and enforced seclusion of your sisters and daughters? If you concede to them the right to exercise their natural powers, there should be a negation of force in the spheres of life described above.

The Shuddhi Movement.

I wish to offer now some remarks as to the Shuddhi movement, which has needlessly given offence in certain quarters. Here again some sinister designs have been attributed to us. There is not the slightest foundation for the suspicion. Proselytism is not a modern conception in the land of Aryavarta. Buddhism was the first reform movement amongst the Hindus. The religion which Buddha preached was for the whole of the human race. In the history of mankind Gautama Buddha was the first to promulgate a religion within the folds of which every human being to whichever race or country he belonged could come. Kabir and Guru Nanak followed him, preached in the same strain, and Guru Govind Singh gave an organised shape to a religion which sprung from Hinduism and which is based on the same cardinal principles as Hinduism. Swami Dayanand Saraswati in recent times gave a strong impetus to the idea, though the external form which he gave to Hindu religion was different from that of Guru Govind Singh. The idea of Shuddhi has therefore no connection

SUPPLEMENT TO The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 13 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1926. Price One Anna.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN SITUATION.

Since we wrote last, nothing untoward has happened in the South African situation. The Select Committee on the Anti-Asiatic Bill is taking evidence and it is likely to submit its report on the 1st April. Mr. C. F. Andrews in his cables to the daily press says that the evidence so far tendered has undoubtedly convinced the people that the Bill is a bad one, but he cannot see any substantial improvement in the situation unless the Select Committee itself recommends the postponement of the Bill, pending further conversations, or a change in the moral atmosphere supervenes, either of which is extremely unlikely. As things stand, pledges made to the electors to hound out the Indians from South Africa rather than moral considerations, seem to be the determining factor in the situation. Mr. Andrews calls attention to the fact that social insults to Indians are an every-day occurrence and the outburst of Mr. Strachan, Chairman, Parliamentary Labour Party, that he "would wish to make the Indians' position so unpleasant that they would be obliged to leave in large numbers", is only typical of them. In the circumstances, it is hopeless to expect the Whites to turn away from the nefarious purpose to which they have set their hands. On the contrary, they are trying by hook or crook to get the Indian away from South Africa, by means of propaganda in the Cape press and other despicable devices. One such is the mischievous attempt to divide the Indian community by offering inducements to the Colonial-born Indians to claim the rights of coloured people, thus separating them from Indian-born Indians, but Mr. Andrews assures us that no success has so far attended the efforts of the Whites in this direction, that all evidence given on behalf of the Indian community is uncompromising on this point, and that it has only served to amalgamate the Indians there. The policy of compulsory repatriation which the South African Whites attempted by raising a query in the South African Union Parliament whether India is legally bound to admit all the South African Indians whom the Union Government may expel from its territory, has also apparently not met with success. We have since received the welcome news from Mr. Andrews that the Natal coastal belt is likely to be exempted from the operation of the Asiatic Bill, but even then, as he says, the remainder of the Bill is equally objectionable both in principle and details. The rejection for the second time by the South African Senate of the Colour Bar Bill, is evidence of the presence of a strong body of opinion against the colour legislation, but there is no cause for congratulation since the Government are sure of a majority in the joint sitting of the Houses to which the Bill will now be referred.

The only other notable event during the period was the debate that took place in the House of Lords on February 24th on the motion of Lord Olivier, ex-Secretary of State for India in the Labour Cabinet, viewing with concern the proposed anti-Asiatic legislation in South Africa, as it amounted to an infraction and infringement of the legitimate rights of Indians settled there, and calling upon the Imperial Government to put a stop to such colour legislation and thus honour the pledges given by it of colour equality in the British Empire. Lord Birkenhead, the Secretary of State for India, replying to the motion, advised Lord Olivier to follow the Legislative Assembly in postponing the question, as any opening of it would only do far more harm than good. In doing so, his lordship did not even say one word expressing his sympathy with the cause of the Indians in South Africa, but only repeated what the Viceroy had said, that delicate negotiations were going on between the Government of India and the Union Government. Far from embarrassing the negotiations, an unequivocal and clear statement by the Secretary of State for India regarding the rights of Indians in South Africa would have immeasurably helped the Indians in their struggle and a gesture from the Imperial Government would have warned the S. African Dominion of the consequences of its policy. Lord Lamington, ex-Governor of Bombay, also spoke on the debate sympathising with Lord Olivier's motion. Even more than in the House of Lords, in an article contributed to the New Statesman, under the caption "Firing the Haystacks", Lord Olivier uncompromisingly condemned the proposed colour legislation in S. Africa. Of the Colour Bar Bill he wrote: "No enactment so abominable and so insane could be discovered among the records of legislation in British communities since salve-owners ceased to struggle against the tide of the human will to freedom". Lord Olivier dismissed the argument that it is not a violation of the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement as an idle quibble, and made out a good case for the exercise of the Royal veto. While Lord Olivier is thus convinced of the exercise of the Royal veto as the last resort, it is a pity that our distinguished countryman, Lord Sinha, should pin his faith to education of the British public opinion alone. In an article contributed to the Statesman, Calcutta, Lord Sinha writes vigorously about the uncompromising attitude of the South African Whites and the failure of the Imperial Government to stand by India's rights as when it gave way to a handful of Whites in Kenya. But he doubts whether it is an easy matter to secure the Royal veto and contents himself with education of British public opinion. No doubt, education of British opinion is an important thing—and the Congress has recognised its importance by organising the Overseas Department—, but that by itself is not enough, for, after all, blood is thicker than water. The only alternatives that remain for us in case the South African legislation is put on the Statute Book are the Royal veto and, failing that, Satyagraha.

KUNWAR MAHARAJ SINGH'S REPORT ON BRITISH GUIANA COLONISATION.

The report has been published of Kunwar Maharaj Singh on his deputation to British Guiana in 1925. He was asked to enquire into the progress made by that Government in providing suitable land for prospective settlers and existing immigrants, facilities for repatriation of resident Indians willing to return to India, and improvements in the political and economic status of the resident Indian community. Kunwar Maharaj Singh observes that the future progress of Indians would be even more marked than up to present, because of the termination of the indentured system and the introduction of sanitary measures. He opined that, subject to certain conditions, the colonisation scheme as elaborated by Sir Joseph Nunan in his report dated 20th November 1924, should be accepted as both generous and practicable. Indeed in some respects it was more liberal than any scheme he had seen for European land settlement in Canada, Australia, New Zealand or South Africa where, for instance, free or assisted repatriation was not provided. Kunwar Maharaj Singh states that in the place of a large number of families, namely 7,500 as originally proposed to work at the outset as labourers as well as to take up land, a smaller number should be recruited for immediate land settlement only. He suggests five hundred families or 1,500 should be sufficient for settlement and both Colonial and Indian Governments stood to gain by this proposal because the expenses of the former in the case of repatriation would not be much, and if the scheme should succeed the way would be open to further immigration on a larger scale with probably less expenditure on passages. Kunwar Maharaj Singh is of opinion that the influx of labourers was not desirable because the sugar industry was passing through a period of depression.

As a condition precedent to the inauguration of the scheme of settlement Kunwar Maharaj Singh agreeing with the Pillai-Tiwary report, suggests, inter alia, but with certain modifications, the provision of areas of suitable land for settlement along with the necessary organisation of assisting settlers in their initial difficulties, improvement of sanitary conditions, passing of declaratory ordinance as to status and adoption of measures for securing fair and adequate representation of Indians in both courts of the British Guiana Legislature. Five acres of land had been promised per family, but Kunwar Maharaj Singh emphasises that Indians must also be given some freedom in the selection of land, and it was in the interests of the Colonial Government themselves to see that land was suitable so that the scheme might be a success.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA'S NOTIFICATION ON BRITISH GUIANA COLONISATION.

The British Guiana Government has cabled the acceptance of Kunwar Maharaj Singh's report, and Government of India would shortly bring before both Houses of the Central Legislature a draft notification based on the report, as approved by the Standing Emigration Committee.

The notification states: In exercise of the powers conferred by section 10 of the Indian Emigration Act (VII of 1922) hereinafter referred to as the Act, the Governor-General-in-Council is pleased to issue the following notification in the form in which it has been approved by both Chambers of the Indian Legislature:—

Emigration to British Guiana for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful with effect from such date as the Governor-General-in-Council may with the concurrence of the Governor of British Guiana notify in the Gazette of India on the following terms and conditions which shall thereupon become operative:—

(1) A family shall be the unit for the purposes of emigration. Not more than 500 families shall be permitted to emigrate and the number of persons included in the said 500 families shall not exceed 1,500.

(2) The emigrants shall either have been recruited by a person licensed for the purpose by and responsible to an officer (hereinafter called the Emigration Commissioner) appointed by the Government of British Guiana or have applied direct to the Emigration Commissioner for an assisted passage and have been accepted by him

(3) No part of the cost of his recruitment or subsistence during the transport shall be recoverable from any emigrant and all expenses in this connection shall be borne by the Government of British Guiana or met from funds at their disposal.

(4) The Government of British Guiana shall, at any time, when so desired by the Governor-General-in-Council, admit and give all facilities to an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act.

(5) If at any time there is no Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act or if the Agent is absent or unable to perform his duties the Government of British Guiana shall at the request of the Governor-General-in-Council appoint a person to perform temporarily the duties of the Agent.

(6) Prior to the arrival of the emigrants a Settlement Commission shall be appointed in British Guiana to select and prepare suitable agricultural land for the emigrants and generally to supervise their employment.

The Agent referred to in clause (4) shall, on appointment, be a member of such a Commission.

(7) The Government of British Guiana shall offer to each family for its separate enjoyment a holding comprising not less than five acres of suitable agricultural land prepared for cultivation on the terms hereinafter set out in a locality which shall be healthy and shall have an adequate supply of good drinking water. All expenses in connection with the preparation of the holdings shall be borne by the Government of British Guiana and shall in no case be recoverable from an emigrant. The annual rent of the holding shall be fixed by the Settlement Commission at a rate not exceeding the lowest rate paid in the locality. After an emigrant has been in occupation of a holding for three years he shall, provided that he had cultivated a portion of the holding either by himself or through some members of his family, be entitled to a grant of holding on payment at any time during the ensuing four years of such fees not exceeding 24 dollars as may be fixed by the Settlement Commission. On the expiry of seven years from the date of the commencement of his occupation of holding an emigrant shall acquire absolute ownership in the holding provided that he has paid the rent and fees referred to in the foregoing paragraphs of this clause and has brought under cultivation either by himself or by some member of his family half the area of his holding.

(8) Any emigrant on arrival in British Guiana shall be housed and maintained without charge by the Government of British Guiana for at least one month.

(9) If any emigrant so requires, loans shall be made to him for maintenance, house accommodation, payment of rent and for agricultural purposes generally. Free medical assistance and free skilled supervision shall be provided.

(10) Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of seven years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana. Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of more than three and not more than five years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana on payment to the Government of British Guiana of half of the cost of his passage from his residence in India to British Guiana. Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of more than five and not more than seven years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana on payment to the Government of British Guiana of a quarter of the cost of his passage from his residence in India to British Guiana.

(11) Notwithstanding anything contained in the last preceding clause, the Government of British Guiana on the request of an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act shall repatriate at its own expense and without any payment by or on behalf of the emigrant to the place of his former residence in India any emigrant at any time after his arrival in British Guiana.

(12) An emigrant shall be at liberty at any time after his arrival in British Guiana to take up work or employment other than, or in addition to, the cultivation of a holding on lease from the Settlement Commission.

(13) The ordinance enjoining compulsory education in British Guiana shall be enforced to the same extent in the case of Indian children as in the case of children belonging to other communities.

(14) Boards of arbitration in regard to wages shall be established before the arrival of the emigrants and Indians shall be adequately represented on such boards.

(15) Any Indian who has emigrated to British Guiana before the date of this notification and under any agreement in force at the date of this notification is entitled to an assisted return passage to India, and shall not be required to pay more than 25 per cent of the excess in the cost of his return passage and clothing over the cost of such passage and clothing at the time of his first arrival in the colony.

(16) Any Indian who has emigrated to British Guiana before the date of this notification and has at the date of this notification become or thereafter becomes destitute shall be entitled to be repatriated to India at the expense of the Government of British Guiana without being further required to prove that he had become incapable of labour.

(17) The Government of British Guiana shall furnish such periodical reports and returns as may be required from time to time by the Government of India in respect of the welfare of persons emigrating to the colony in accordance with this notification.

EMIGRANTS FROM FIJI.

A batch of repatriated Indian emigrants arrived in Madras recently. In all there were about 60 emigrants belonging to the districts of Malabar, Coimbatore, North and South Arcot, Trichinopoly, Tanjore and Tinnevelly.

An Interview.

A representative of the Hindu, Madras, interviewed the emigrants and was able to gather the following particulars concerning the present condition of the Indian labourers in Fiji, the wages obtaining there and the facilities afforded to them for settlement and comfortable living. Their general appearance, to begin with, betokened extreme poverty, great suffering and hardship.

Enquired about the general conditions in Fiji they all represented, without one single exception, that Fiji was no doubt a good and comparatively healthy place to settle down but they would never advise their brethren in India to leave their houses for Fiji in the fond hope of making a decent living and to return back in the end with some capital to lay by for their future. It is a very costly place and rich men alone could settle and thrive there. Those who had come back had not even saved a paltry some of Rs. 100 after having spent there more than five years amidst much suffering, inconvenience and hardship.

Low Wages and High Prices.

The chief occupation of the Indian labourers there is work in the sugar plantations. The prospects of living in plantations comfortably, are getting every day from bad to worse. The prices of articles, food-stuffs and clothes are very dear and the wages are extremely inadequate comparatively. For a small family consisting of a husband and wife with 2 or 3 children, about Rs. 30 per month is the minimum amount required to lead a somewhat comfortable life. Out of this nothing could be saved. The most skilled labourer in the farm is not paid more than as. 14 a day at the utmost. On an average the labourers do get only 10 or 12 as. As a typical instance for high prices of articles ranging there, they said, they could hardly get three match boxes for as 2. Rice is sold at 10 or 12 seers for a rupee. To buy cloth and stitch an ordinary cotton shirt or coat, one should spend nearly Rs. 3. The prices of cereals and other ordinary stuffs were also proportionately high. Further the poor labourers could work in the farms only for 6 days in a week. In addition to the difficulty of trying to make both ends meet, they had to pay a poll tax of £1 per head every year to the Fiji Government. The women labourers can get as. 5 per day for their work in the fields.

Insanitary Surroundings.

To a question regarding medical relief and sanitation, the emigrants said that the quarters in which they lived were merely an apology for houses. Their dwellings were generally small and dingy and they could find no money either to repair or improve their houses. They often fell sick due to hard work in the plantations and want of good and proper nourishment. In their anxiety to save something for the future, they would deny themselves even some of the necessaries of life. In the free medical hospitals the sick people were not at all well looked after. Therefore they did not generally seek admission in such hospitals, but they would seek the aid of paid medical men.

Facilities for the education of their young children were not at all encouraging. Most of the educational institutions were run there by Christian missionaries and there existed the constant fear of their young ones being converted to other faiths. On account of this state of affairs they did not generally attempt to impart education to their children. Further their children frequently fell ill due to many causes, which they could avoid if they had money and if their masters helped them.

Asked about facilities for acquiring lands and for settling they complained that it was impossible for poor people to entertain any such idea. Most of the labourers who had come there from Madras and other Presidencies were poor and they had no desire to settle there under the present conditions. There were no doubt some middle class Indians employed in firms and Government offices and it was easy for them to acquire lands for settlement.

On the question of voluntary repatriation, they pointed out that various difficulties were placed in their way to attain that object. They had to agitate and petition the authorities for more than a year before their request would be granted. Most of the emigrants who arrived were those who desired to reach India at the beginning of 1925 and it was only now they were given facilities to proceed to India.

INDIAN LABOUR IN CEYLON.

Mr. K. Natesa Aiyer, M.L.C., Colombo, who was in Bombay recently on his way to Delhi, interviewed by the Press, said that he was going to Delhi in connection with the question of wages of Indian labourers in Ceylon. Mr. Natesa Iyer said that an attempt is being made to smother the earning capacity of the Indian labourers by foisting on them what the Ceylon Government is pleased to call the "standard wage," under the cloak of a Committee Report and that he was going to Delhi to put the Indian labourer's point of view before the Standing Emigration Committee.

Towards the end of January, the Government of India sent a wire to the Government of Ceylon asking them to agree to a certain rate as the very minimum wage to be given to the Indian labourers working on the estates in Ceylon. The Planters and the Government of Ceylon discussed the whole question and it was decided to send the Emigration Agent to the Government of India in Ceylon to Delhi to discuss the whole question with the Government of India. Upon the Government of India's wire to Ceylon Government to meet their representatives in Delhi, Mr. Ranganathan, the Emigration Agent to the Government of India, was sent to Delhi. Mr. Iyer said that though Mr. Ranganathan is an Indian, he cannot be said to represent the Indian labour, since his associations with the Indian labour in the estates are not so intimate as to exactly know their grievances and their needs and that he was going on his own responsibility and initiative for the simple reason that the Indian labour is unrepresented and to put a strong case before the Government of India prevailing upon the Government of Ceylon to include in the Standard Wage Legislation the recognition of Trade Unions that would be formed by the labourers. Asked about the general condition and treatment of Indian labourers, Mr. Aiyer said there was not much to complain of except that they were very poorly paid and that the prevention of employing children of 6 and 10 years on the plantations required immediate attention.

LORD OLIVIER ON THE SOUTH AFRICAN LEGISLATION.

In the House of Lords on Feb. 24th, Lord Olivier drew attention to the apprehension publicly expressed by the Viceroy with reference to the legislation proposed by the King's Ministers in the South African Government affecting the rights and interests of the King's subjects of Indian origin and descent domiciled in South Africa. He asked for an assurance that these rights would be equitably guaranteed and maintained.

He quoted a Reuter telegram reporting the speech of the Viceroy published on the 20th January which they trusted would really bring the matter to a head and let them have some kind of moratorium from this great pressure which was being put upon Indians "and which is leading a great disturbance in our imperial relations."

Lord Olivier proceeded to deal with the history of the question and declared that the position had become more serious in South Africa by the reintroduction of the Colour Bar Bill. He quoted extracts from a speech of General Smuts including the passage in which he said the South Africans would gather on their heads the hatred of the whole of Asia. Lord Olivier said General Smuts was not an alarmist but a statesman who had studied history and knew from experience what the effects of the policy would be upon India.

Lord Olivier said generally in the opinion of Lord Reading and thought in the opinion of anybody who had been connected with the India Office: "These oppressive enactments, the Colour Bar Bill and the Areas Registration Bill, were a distinct infraction of the rights belonging to the Indians which the King's Government was bound to maintain and safeguard."

In conclusion Lord Olivier asked whether they were going to maintain the principle of colour equality or not because that principle had repeatedly been declared on behalf of the Government by previous Governments as the Empire's bedrock.

Lord Lamington said there was no analogy between Indians in Kenya and Indians in Natal and South Africa. Generally he was in entire sympathy with Lord Olivier with regard to the general statement of the case.—Reuter.

Dr. Abdur Rahman Sails to South Africa: Dr. Abdur Rahman, leader of the South African Indian Deputation, sailed for South Africa on the 3rd instant. Mr. Sorabji Rustomji, the remaining member of the Deputation, stays behind till the date of the Assembly debate on the South African question. Expressing thankfulness to the country, and particularly to the press, for the ungrudging support and publicity given to the cause he represented, Dr. Abdur Rahman said to an Associated Press representative: "We are convinced that the Government of India is doing everything possible to prevent the anti-Asiatic bills passing into law, but if, in spite of it the Union Government persists in its policy, the Imperial Government will have to intervene in order to save the Empire, for from what I have seen in India I am convinced if the bills go through, as they stand, it will be regarded in Asia, and particularly in India, as a direct challenge to the East. My own personal opinion is that no people should be compelled to belong to the Empire of which one member is persecuted by another, while the rest of the members and the Imperial Government are impotently looking on. England is responsible for the Empire to the extent that she brought it about, and though it was brought about by force it can only be held together by mutual understanding and goodwill. It is England's duty to see that the Empire does not break up."

Education in Fiji: In the House of Commons replying to a question whether women will be included in the forthcoming Fiji Educational Commission, Colonel Amery mentioned that facilities for the education of Indian boys and girls did not exist in Fiji. The Commission, he said, would investigate the matter generally, being appointed by the Governor of the Colony, and enquiry would be made of him regarding the point raised.

with recent political movements, and I do not see why those who strive for political advancement should call upon us to give up a movement based on an idea first conceived in the land of Aryavarta more than 25 centuries ago before Christianity or Islam came into existence and before any religious preacher in the world thought of laying open the path of salvation to every human being who sought it. Shuddhi is nothing else but proselytism and it passes my comprehension why the right of conversion enjoyed by all other religious communities in the land should be denied to Hindus who in the History of the World were the first to originate the idea. I would, however, lay stress on the fact that the idea of proselytism is pre-eminently our heritage, revived in different shapes by our religious reformers who appeared from time to time.

A word of caution is necessary as to the manner in which the organisation of the Hindu community should be carried on. Pissiparous tendency is the bane of India, and that tendency in manifested in a pre-eminent degree by the Hindus. Organization would lead to disorganization, if smaller groups begin to organise themselves with objects conflicting with those of the larger group. Such a course would weaken instead of strengthening the Hindu society. The liberal section of the Hindus so far as the programme of social reform is concerned should carry with them the conservatives and the conservative section should realize that the liberals of a former generation are conservatives of the present. The latter now advocate or acquiesce in all the reforms for which the liberals of the preceding generation fought. Let not the ship of the Hindu consolidation be wrecked on squabbles as to the manner in which the cause of social reform has to be advanced. So far as the protection of our political rights is concerned conservatives and liberals are united. I may therefore ask the Mahasabha to pause before taking any action which may drive our conservative friends from our political platform on which their co-operation is needed.

I would refer more specially and more fully to the political programme that the Mahasabha should lay before it. The Sabha should put in a strenuous fight against what has now become an acknowledged and admitted principle everywhere of determining civic rights on the basis of caste and creed, and should do whatever it can to make its voice heard by those to whom the duty of framing a constitution for India is assigned, whether it is a conference of Indians representing all shades of opinion or whether it is a Statutory Commission.

The Commonwealth of India Bill which is already before Parliament should be examined by a Committee to be appointed with a view to ascertain whether the rights of Hindus in every Province are adequately protected by it.

Inter-Communal Unity.

The question of conflict between Brahmans and non-Brahmans in Provinces in which the question exists should be closely studied and every effort made to remove that conflict. If it is impossible to reconcile the two sections on the political platform without introducing radical social reforms, the means of introducing such reforms should be considered by the Mahasabha and steps taken for it. Leaving aside the question of civic and political rights, the Mahasabha should consider so far as it is possible to maintain friendly relations with non-Hindu communities by promoting social intercourse between them. The question of mutual relations between Hindus and Mahommedans has become a very difficult one, and though I do not despair of an ultimate solution, its immediate settlement is well-nigh impossible. A round table conference would have been able to frame a constitution, if Hindus and Mahommedans had arrived on an agreement ragarding their respective rights under the constitution, but as matters stand, it seems to me that a Statutory Commission is the only body that will be able to propose some kind of advance towards responsible self-government. It will be a matter for your consideration whether it is possible to take any step to establish better relations between the two communities.

Hindus in N. W. F. Province.

No scheme for the protection of Hindu interests and no discourse on it will be complete without some reference to the Hindus of N. W. F. Province. They form a very small minority surrounded both in the British Districts and in the territory beyond by a fanatic and aggressive population liable to excitement on the slightest pretext. We in the Punjab know more about them than those more remotely situated. We are grateful to those Hindu gentlemen who led by Sir Sivaswamy Iyer took pains to study the moral and material conditions prevailing in that Province and on its Western border. Recent events however have given complete proof to Indians living further East and South and to the world outside, how small events can lead to a general conflagration. The proclamation of Martial Law in the Punjab in 1919 led to the Afghan War, and the publication, by way of reprisal of a pamphlet supposed to be offensive to the religious sentiments of the major part of the population, caused a terrible riot, in which Hindus lost life and property on a scale unprecedented in the history of the Province. Order has been restored and peace secured by abject submission and unconditional surrender on the part of Hindus. I am mentioning these facts, not because I want to review the terms on which the Hindus of Kohat have gone back, but because they have a bearing on the question of the extension of self-governing institutions to the Province. The problem before us is, what will be the condition of the Hindus, under such institutions and how will the defence of the Empire be effected by them? So far, communal representation through separate electorates for Muslims has been an indispensable feature of all representative institutions in the country. Originally a device for the protection of minorities, communal representation through separate electorates had been extended even to communities which are not in a minority. In the Punjab we have a Council, two-third of which consists of representatives who come through the channel of communal representation through separate electorates. A Council constituted on a communal basis naturally wishes to extend the principle to various spheres of activity, to services and educational institutions The only remedy for this state of things is to apply the rule of proportional representation through single transferable vote, and the question is whether the electorate in the N.W F. Province is sufficiently advanced to understand the rule and to work it.

THE ALL-INDIA MARWARI CONFERENCE.

The following is a summary of the presidential address delivered by Seth Jamanlal Bajaj at the eighth annual session of the All-India Marwari Conference held at Delhi on the 14th instant:—

He described at some length the keen struggle that is at present going on in the Marwari community between the orthodox section and the party of young reformers and said that while his own sympathies were wholly on the side of the reformers, he would warn the young party against the temptation to rush matters. They should not forget that there was also a conservative section in the Marwari community that was likely to view their forward policy with nervousness and alarm. Instead, therefore, of trying to stampede them into reform by dint of majority resolutions they should try to convert them to their views by gentle persuasion, suffering and force of personal example. The authority of the Mahasabha should not be used to coerce the unwilling and the sceptical, but to convert them by the exercise of moral pressure. On the other hand, it was equally the duty of the orthodox party not to go out of its way to hinder the cause of reforms, if only because it was bound to prevail in the end in spite of them, if they could not help it. The world was changing fast and the better part of wisdom on their part would be to adapt themselves to the changed conditions instead of vainly kicking against the inevitable.

Social Boycott.

Referring to the practice of social boycott, he said that it was purely a moral weapon and should be employed in a moral issue only. Society, for instance, had a perfect right to ostracise a person in order to preserve its ideals or to safeguard public morals and other social virtues. But when ostracism was used by a majority to suppress honest opinion or merely to enforce its will on a minority even when no moral issue was involved, it became a veritable engine of oppression and productive of great evil. It bred moral cowardice and encouraged hypocrisy. He had noticed with regret the growing practice now-a-days on the part of the orthodox section to punish with ostracism sincere young men who deserved to be honoured for their courage, for no other fault than their desire to get rid of narrow social restrictions. And he referred to the recent attempt on the part of the Maheshwari community to ostracise the Birla family so well-known for its enlightenment, philanthropy and patriotism as an instance in point. His heart went out to these sincere souls. He exhorted them not to be down-hearted but to continue the good fight against social evils without flinching. Were not some of the greatest reformers like Shankaracharya, Vallabhachari, Prahlada and Mira Bai similarly persecuted? He hoped that they would try to overcome hatred and prejudice by love which nothing in the world could withstand.

Charge of Money-grabbing.

The speaker then took up the charge of money-grabbing that was often levelled against the Marwari community. There was nothing wrong in accumulating wealth, he observed, provided it was done by fair and honest means. But he was afraid that the Marwaris had yet much to do to win the sympathy and esteem of the people. It was their duty to see that they did not simply help to drain away the wealth of the people just as England was doing. A substantial part of their gains ought to be employed among and for the good of the people among whom they lived.

Khaddar.

Similarly it is up to them to abjure such commercial undertakings as were likely to be detrimental to the best interests of the country. The most glaring instance of this kind was the business in foreign cloth which was draining away the very life blood of the nation. The Marwaris could best identify themselves with the masses by adopting Khadi wear in their own persons and by advancing loans without interest to finance the Khadi movement.

Cow Protection.

As regards the question of cow protection, the President said that it was no use quarrelling with those who did not believe in it; the problem had to be tackled scientifically. The only means to save the cow was to develop the existing pinjarapoles into ideal dairies and to run tanneries for utilizing the hides of dead cattle in the interests of cow protection.

The speaker then proceeded to expatiate at some length on the necessity of introducing social reforms among the Marwaris. Luxury and extravagance were rife among them. Idleness was sapping their very moral foundation. In his opinion the organization of Khaddar work offered a wholesome occupation to many a Marwari youth. They had likewise to get rid of the purdah system and the vulgar and ugly craze of ornaments, which was as wasteful as it was full of danger.

Child Marriages.

The practice of child marriage was another grave danger to Hindu society which required to be immediately stopped. It was at the root of India's widow problem and was a fruitful source of vice and moral corruption. As for the re-marriage of child widows, strongly as he felt on the subject, said Sethji, he refrained from saying anything, it having been declared to be outside the scope of the present Conference. The education of the Marwari youth was being neglected and required to be attended to. He wished that they could be sent to suitable institutions in increasing numbers where their moral and spiritual training could be attended to by worthy and capable preceptors. The multiplication of sub-castes and the restrictions about inter-dining and inter-marriage based on them he considered to be vicious in this age of progress They were an obstacle in the way of unity and, therefore, ought to be abolished. The wasteful extravagance on the occasion of weddings ought to be checked and the interdiction on visits to foreign countries removed.

Appeal for Toleration.

He concluded by making a fervent appeal for broad-mindedness and toleration and warned them against developing a narrowness of outlook. Those who were anxious for reforms should reserve all their strictness for themselves, but have only toleration for those who differed from them. They should not try to saddle their views on unwilling minds but wait and trust to the future. Likewise the conservative section should try to understand and appreciate the view-point of the younger generation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Temperance Reform in Ceylon: The following resolutions were passed at the half-yearly Convention of Temperance Societies held on the 20th ultimo at the Ananda College Hall, Colombo, and presided over by the Hon. Mr. W. A. de Silva: (a) (1) This Convention requests the Government to alter Section 8 of the Excise Rules regarding Local Option, so that if not less than 40 per cent of the voters record their votes, the percentage required for abolition shall be 60 per cent of the number who had so voted. (2) That where an estate tavern is allowed to exist, such tavern should be located only on an estate not less than 33 acres in extent and no off sales should be permitted in such a tavern. (b) (1) That no less than three-fourths of the members of an Excise Committee should be elected by persons entitled to vote at local option polls. (2) The decisions of the Excise Committee shall be final. (c) This Convention urges on the Government the necessity of raising the import duty on foreign liquor so as to bring the price per bottle of the cheapest above Rs. 4. (d) This Convention requests the Government (1) That if in an area for which an Excise Committee is constituted 60 per cent of the licenses are withdrawn as a result of local option poll or upon the recommendations of an Excise Committee, the Government shall withdraw the remaining licenses. (2) That no liquor licenses shall be issued to any hotel which does not provide at least 12 bed-rooms, 140 sq. feet each. (3) That no tapping for fermented toddy shall be permitted in any "dry" area. (4) That no liquor license shall be issued for a period of more than one year. (5) That no liquor of any description shall be removed from the place of sale without a written permit issued by the licensee and that a register of persons to whom liquor was sold should be kept.

Women in Finland: Few people understand why Finland has produced more famous women than any other country in the world in proportion to its size. There has always been a large preponderance of women in Suomi—as Finland is locally called—and since the world war this surplus has increased, writes the G. E. O. Knight in the Daily News. The Finnish woman has a wonderful 'way with her.' She is resourceful, energetic, enterprising and pushes her way to the front in everything without any apparent effort. No one who has been in Finland has failed to be impressed by the enormous force, independence and energy of its women. In every walk of life they are to the fore. During the Bolshevik invasion they fought as ardently for independence and freedom as any son of the soil and many of them, disguised as men, shouldered rifles and were engaged in a number of desperate actions. No form of work is considered derogatory in the "Land of a Thousand Lakes." Women are engaged as tramway conductors, road sweepers, brick-layers, mechanics, engineers, architects, doctors, dentists, lawyers. No profession or trade is closed to them. Men and women are absolutely equal before the law. There are many women members of the Finnish Parliament, and women monopolise the Borough Council, Boards of Guardians, etc. It is sometimes difficult to understand what the men do in Finland. Every Government office is over-run with women. In the Finnish Customs House in Helingfors the male officials seem to occupy subordinate positions, but there was always an absence of "bossing" on the part of the women. Finland is almost a terra incognita to the majority of English men and women. It is wonderful that a country a little larger than the United Kingdom should hold the most advanced views and possess no "sex question." It seems to be a characteristic of the Finns to regard man and woman as absolutely equal. Even the great national epic, Kalevala, believed to be over three thousand years old, enjoins equality of sex. Needless perhaps to say Finland is a prohibition country.

The Depressed Classes Leaders and Workers Conference: The General Secretary of the Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society has sent us the following:—In pursuance of the resolution passed on the 8th instant a public meeting of the Poona Adi-Hindus (Depressed Classes) and their sympathisers was held on Friday the 12th inst at 6 p. m. at the D. C. M Ahalyashram Hall, Rao Saheb M. Lingayya Naidu of Belgaum presiding. Messrs. K. G. Patade, R. S. Ghatge Subedar, M. K. Jadhav, B. A. (Hons.) B. D. Wayadande, G. R. Hignekar, Jamedar J. V. Jadhav, S. J. Kamble and others spoke. The meeting unanimously passed three resolutions: (1) supporting the proposed 1st session of the above Conference to be held at Nagpur C. P., on 26th and 27th of April of 1926; (2) appointing delegates from Maharashtra and a Committee to arrange for collecting funds; (3) requesting Government to nominate only such D. C. gentlemen as are of progressive social views on all local bodies. After the President s concluding remarks in which he insisted upon the much-needed unity among all the Depressed Classes sub-castes, the proceedings terminated with the usual vote of thanks. The Hon. Treasurer of the Depressed Classes Mission Society, Poona, acknowledges with thanks the various contributions for the Society's funds. The total amount received for the current year is Rs. 1,288-2-0.

Infant Welfare Centres in Bombay: Under the auspices of the Khatau Makanji and Kanji Mulji Trusts three Infant Welfare Centres besides a Maternity and Nursing Home situated at Bazar Gate Street, Fort, are conducted by the Poona Seva Sadan Society under the direction of Mr. G. K. Devadhar at Cavel Street, Mandvi and Fort for women and children of the Bhatia community. During the month of February 1926 in all 1,373 patients were attended to at these centres and the hospital, out of these 864 were women, 330 children and 179 infants. 15 cases were admitted into the hospital, the daily average attendance being 62.4. The total noumber of deliveries done up-to-date was 212. The District Visiting Nurses paid 296 visits and 12 expectant mothers were under observation.

The Punjab Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha: The Honorary Secretary writes: Reports of 237 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, (Punjab) throughout India in the month of February 1926. The total number of marriages held in the current year i. e., from 1st January 1926 to the end of February 1926 has reached 450 as detailed below: According to Caste: Brahmin 78, Khatri 45, Arora 25, Aggarwal 82, Kaisth 15, Rajput 43, Sikh 61, Miscellaneous 101, Total 450. According to Provinces: Punjab and N. W. F. P. 285, Sind 36, Delhi 9, U. P. 101, C. P. 6, Bengal 9, Madras 1, Bombay 1, Assam 2, Total 450. Voluntary donation received during the month is Rs. 88 and total amount during the year Rs. 127-10-0.

The Jamiat-Ul-Ulema Hind: At the recent sitting of the Jamiat-ul-Ulema Hind, held at Halliday Park, Calcutta, under the presidency of Syed Suleman Nadir, resolutions touching social reform were passed, expressing strong disapproval of the extravagant expenditure in marriages and other social functions of Mahommedans, which were against the laws of the Sharriat, and calling upon Mussalmans of every locality to elect "Kazis" from amongst the "Ulemas" and to invest them with power to deal according to the laws of the Sharriat with cases of negligent treatment to wives, accorded by irresponsible and improvident husbands.

Crime in U. S. A.:—A cable from London to the Englishman says: The Governor of New York State has sent a memorial to the Legislature requesting the appointment of a commission to investigate the appalling wave of crime which is sweeping over the State. He quotes figures showing that 9,500 persons were murdered in America in 1921, 10,000 in 1923, and 11,000 in 1924, compared with 150 in the whole of Britain. In the same period there were 274 murders in New York alone, compared with 43 in London.

NOTES

The Rev. R. A. Hume's Farewell Message: The Rev. R. A. Hume after a long and gracious service in this country is retiring to America, in conformity, he says, with a rule, recently made, of the American Marathi Mission. If we may venture to do so, we would suggest that the rule seems to be less calculated to secure the guidance of experience and understanding of Indian conditions to mission work on the spot than to supply the want of it at American headquarters. The practice of men who have gained experience and knowledge of the country retiring to their distant mother-land, works a great deal of harm in the administrative field, and it is likely to do more harm in mission work where executive efficiency is of far less consequence than an understanding mind and sympathetic insight. That these qualities are not acquired except by long years of service, Mr. Hume's message clearly shows. Mr. Hume refers to the remark of a Governor to him about the difficulty felt by him in understanding Indians. The Governor is a bird of passage, remains here for five years, and has no concern with it ever after, and naturally he has neither a desire nor the opportunity to understand India and the Indians. By the way, do Englishmen really understand Americans, and do Americans understand Englishmen, notwithstanding their common vernacular? As between them, a Roman Catholic or a High Church man can more easily enter into the Indian mind than the American Missionary whose religion like his politics sets little store by tradition. Mr. Hume's comment on the tea-party incident in Mr. Ranade's social reform career, misses its real significance, as Mr. Ranade himself explained it. We do not remember that Mr. Ranade ever said that he underwent the penitential rite in deference to his mother's wishes. We are not sure that his mother was alive at the time, but surely the great protagonist of Protestant Hinduism on this side of India, would have known how to win his mother's acquiescence, if not active consent, to what even then was a slight deviation from orthodoxy among educated Hindus. Moreover, the Brahmin caste in Maharashtra and Madras has no caste organisation, as in Gujarat, and decrees of excommunication of the Sankaracharya cannot be enforced for lack of machinery. The agitation against Ranade was inspired and worked up by political opponents, and his own adherents were sufficiently numerous to have helped him to defy it. But, as in the memorable incident relating to the holding of the Social Conference in the Congress pandal, Ranade deliberately declined to avail himself of his advantage, in order to show that the social reformer is not a rebel against the established order and that his method was that of the constitutional reformer. Ranade claimed that by reducing the cost of the penitential ceremony to annas four—which was what he actually spent on it—he had practically abolished the fear of excommunication for thousands whose social or official or financial position did not, as in his case, make it easy for them to face social penalties to which they were peculiarly exposed.

Propaganda against Animal Sacrifices in Kerala: Sometime ago we referred to the abolition of animal sacrifices in public temples in her State by Her Highness the Maharani Regent of Travancore. There are many temples under what are termed Madhyama worship, where alone animal sacrifices and the use of liquors are allowed, which are said to appease the anger of the gods and goddesses, bestow prosperity on the people and free them from contagious diseases. Most of these places are remnants of animistic belief and superstition and no Brahmin or intelligent and true religious person resorts to such places either for witnessing the butchering of dumb animals or to hear the intoxicated harangues of the so-called gods and goddesses. Till but a decade ago none had the moral courage to stop or even dissuade the ignorant masses, who strongly resent any interference, from their traditional offerings. This practice is not confined to Kerala alone. Similar sacrifices are conducted in Bengal in Kali temples and are prevalent among the Shakti worshippers wherever they exist. Most of these temples are owned and maintained by votaries and people who have no scruple to meat-eating and drinking. During the annual and occasional celebrations in these temples and places of worship, thousands of poor and ignorant people congregate to attend the festival and offer their quota. The most offensive part of the celebrations is the singing of all sorts of immoral songs in vulgar language in the presence of women and children. Cranganore in Cochin State is one such place where about fifty thousand fowls and five to ten thousand goats are sacrificed every year. Partly through the peaceful work of the Humanitarian Societies and partly owing to the proclamation of the Travancore Government, a general awakening has come over the people of Kerala to see that no animals and birds are sacrificed at least in the name of religion. The Kerala Buddhist Association is doing splendid work this year in this connection. Mr. C. Krishnan, Editor, Mitavadi of Calicut and President of the Association, with his co-workers has gone to Cranganore to carry on a vigorous propaganda against these inhuman sacrifices and indecent songs during the annual Bharani festival there. Sri Narayana Guru, the spiritual guide of the Ezhuvas of Kerala, is also attending the festival with his disciples and other prominent workers like Satyavrata Bhikshu and Mr. Aiyappan, B. A. It is reported that some of the leaders were roughly handled for lecturing against sacrifices, issuing leaflets and appealing by singing songs of mercy and true understanding of religion near the sacrificing place. It is gratifying to find that the workers, without retaliating or lodging criminal complaints, continue their vigorous humanitarian work. We sincerely hope that the Maharaja of Cochin will follow in the footsteps of the Ruler of the sister State and put an end to such sacrifices in his State. A good deal of work remains to be done in British Malabar also where such practices are only common in many places.

The Frontier Debate: The debate on Syed Murtuza's resolution in the Legislative Assembly to extend the reforms to the N. W. F. P. which promised at one time to degenerate into a mere communal fight between Hindus and Muslims, was on the whole marked by a certain dignity and restraint. The impression that is left in one's mind after reading the debate is that the Government has tried to please the Muslims needlessly at the expense of the Hindus, without committing itself at the same time to any particular course of action. For, what, after all, is the attitude of the Government in the matter? Sir Denys Bray spoke enthusiastically upon the democratic character of the Pathans, their homogeneity and so on, and yet, Sir Alexander Muddiman declared that the Government has not yet come to any decision on the resolution. Though Sir Sivaswamy Iyer and Dewan Bahadur Rangachariar rather exaggerated the difficulties in the way of giving autonomy to the Province, the indecision of the Government is itself sufficient proof that Government too has got its own apprehensions on the matter and, indeed, Sir Alexander Muddiman himself gave expression to them when he spoke of lethal weapons being freely used and the insecurity of life in the Province. And now that the resolution has been passed, we hope Government will take early steps to give effect to it.

The Export of Opium: The one thing for which the Government of India should be given credit is with regard to its proposal to progressively reduce exports of opium except for strictly medicinal or scientific purposes so as to stop them altogether within a definite period. Pandit Malaviya rightly characterised this decision of the Government as humane and statesmanlike. But, as was pointed out by Dewan Bahadur Rangachariar, it only affords one more instance of the Government of India yielding to pressure of British and American opinion rather than taking any action on its own accord. India, however, should not rest content with mere reduction of the export of opium to foreign countries, but she should strive to put a stop to the internal consumption of opium also which does not show any substantial diminution. In the course of the debate in the Legislative Assembly, objection was made to the proposal on the ground that India alone is losing two crores of revenue without materially reducing the consumption of opium in China and other foreign countries, but Pandit Malaviya aptly replied, "let other nations steal, but India will not". From the financial point of view, Sir Basil Blackett gave the assurance that there is no fear of immediate loss of revenue as Government possesses large stocks of opium, and, as regards the poppy cultivators in U.P. who will be primarily affected by this proposal, the prospects of their betaking to wheat and sugar as alternative crops seem to be encouraging.

Infant Welfare in Bombay: The Bombay Legislative Council discussed last week a resolution asking the Government to provide two lakhs in the next year's budget for grants-in-aid to recognised infant and maternity welfare institutions so as to bear not less than one-third of their annual expenses. Mr. Abdul Latif, the mover of the resolution, quoted figures to show the appalling infant mortality in Bombay and especially in Poona and pointed out how 90 per cent. of such deaths within one year of birth could be prevented if the benefits of maternity welfare were extended. The speaker then instanced the case of England where infant welfare work has always been considered as the backbone of welfare work and where, as a result of the policy of Government giving grants-in-aid to maternity institutions to the extent of about fifty per cent of their expenses, the infant mortality there has fallen to a very low figure. Other speakers also testified to the inadequate grants to the Baby Week celebrations in the mofussil and eventually, in spite of the assurance of the Education Minister that he would favourably consider every case for help, the resolution was passed.

Bookmakers in the Race-courses: Not content with taxing an immoral source of revenue, the Bombay Government is busy devising further measures to legalise the evil of betting at races. Mr. Addyman, on behalf of Government, brought in a Bill recently before the Legislative Council for the purpose of allowing book-makers in the race-course to be present in the first enclosure. We quite understand that the object of Government is to suppress the bucket shops, but it is not difficult to see that its proposal will only increase the opportunities for gambling. The argument that it will affect only the pockets of those who can afford, is utterly indefensible. As Dr. Paranjpye remarked, to say, as Mr. Addyman did, that because the evil exists, it should be controlled by licensing, is as good as saying that, because thefts take place in the city which we cannot stop, we should license thieves. The right way, of course, is to take more severe measures against illegal betting and not to license it.

Social Evil in Bombay: In spite of the operation of the Prostitution Act and the efforts of the Bombay Vigilance Association, the prostitution evil seems to be on the increase. Two cases were recently brought to the notice of the Courts, one in which a girl was sold by her own mother for the purpose of prostitution without any compunction on her part and the other in which a girl was abducted and used unwillingly for purposes of prostitution, and all those who took part in the unholy transactions were punished with various terms of imprisonment. We are inclined to think, however, that the punishments awarded are not sufficiently deterrent, the highest being only four months' rigorous imprisonment, and we hope the Courts will deal more severely with such cases in future.

The Late Pandit A. Mahadeva Shastry: Pandit A. Mahadeva Shastry, the well-known Vedic scholar, reformer and Director of the Adyar Library, after a short illness, passed away on the 21st instant. He was the author of some booklets on social reform and his translation of the Bhagavad Gita with Shankara's commentary is still regarded as a high authority even by oriental scholars. He was a quiet and unostentatious man and, in his own private life, he set a noble example to others by discarding all narrow social distinctions and caste rigidities. In his death the Theosophical Society loses one of its staunch supporters.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, MARCH 27, 1926.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

"When the fight begins within himself", says the poet, "a man is worth something." This is true of communities and nations. No doubt, a "united front" greatly helps them in competition or conflict with other communities and nations. But it does not conduce to their own progress, and it rather weakens the forces of progress within the community or nation. The common phenomenon of the demoralisation of nations which have emerged from a War, those which were victorious no less than those which were defeated, is due to this cause. The cry for unity does not, therefore, always and under all circumstances represent a nation's gravest need. Artificial unity may indeed be as harmful to national growth as chronic dissension. In India to-day we see a number of parties, political, communal, and industrial. There are the Non-Co-operators who will have nothing to do with a satanic Government and its institutions. There are the Swarajists who would touch the Government only with a pair of obstructive tongs. The "Responsive Co-operationists" have adopted a modified programme of obstruction: they would not obstruct on all occasions, but only on those when obstruction is demanded in the interests of the country. On other occasions, and in measures calculated to advance the moral and material progress of the country, they would support and help Government. The Independents' creed is not very different from this. In fact, they have no creed to speak of except that of keeping themselves ready to support Government or the Opposition as opportunity may require. "Opportunists" will, perhaps, be a more appropriate name for them than Independents. The Liberals start with co-operation as their general principle qualified by opposition or obstruction on particular occasions. The distinction between them and "Responsive Co-operationists" is more psychological than practical. It is a question of the one calling the chessboard white, of the other calling it black. Very close to these two parties are the Besantites. Dr. Besant and her friends have drafted a Bill known as the Commonwealth of India Bill which has gone through the formality of being introduced in the House of Commons. It has been sponsored by some Labour leaders. There is, however, no prospect of its advancing beyond the stage of introduction in the present Parliament. The Cawnpore Congress adopted a resolution making the Swaraj Party its agent in political matters. The Non-Co-operators opposed to Council entry were conciliated by requiring Swarajist members of the Legislative Councils to withdraw from them if the Government's response to the demand for a Round Table Conference to decide upon a form of self-government, was not found satisfactory. Under this arrangement, the Swarajist members in the Legislative Assembly and the Provincial Legislative Councils withdrew and have kept out of these bodies since the 8th of this month. Attempts are being made from different directions to bring together on a common platform all the other parties. Dr. Besant has issued an invitation to a joint Conference on behalf of her party; the "Responsive Co-operationists" have done the same, and the Liberals have also called a Conference in Bombay early next month with the same object in view. As there is substantially no difference between these parties so far as their immediate objective is concerned, it is to be hoped that they will find a formula to unite upon. This formula, however, should be one which looks beyond the next General Elections which are due in September or October next. An alliance for the purpose only of winning the elections has slight prospects of success. Even if the Coalition succeeds in getting into the Councils in larger numbers than the Swarajists, its difficulties would manifest themselves as soon as the new Councils meet. We think, therefore, Coalitionists should not think so exclusively of the next Elections as to neglect the more important duty of framing a programme which will appeal to the country and not only to the electors, by its comprehensiveness, its sound judgment and its grasp of the essential needs of the times. If they produce a programme which will impress thoughtful men as being better than any framed by Government or Swarajists, they may lose this election, but they will have laid the foundations of their sure success in the next. The country is beginning to realise the futility of obstructive methods, but it has not done so yet completely. Another term in the Councils of Swarajist tactics will entirely disillusion it about the efficacy of their methods. Then will come the chance of the constructive minds. The position of the Constitutional party will be immensely strengthened if it can get forth an acceptable plan for solving the Hindu-Mahomedan and Brahmin-Non-Brahmin differences.

MARY DOBSON.*

The monograph by Miss Una Saunders will carry a special appeal to the small circle of University women of Bombay with whom Miss Dobson was in intimate and constant association for nearly twenty-five years. From 1898 onwards there was hardly a woman student attending college in Bombay who did not possess more than a passing acquaintance with this talented and energetic lady, whose weekly visits to the various colleges were only discontinued when she left for England in 1920. Pre-eminently a missionary and endowed with musical and literary talents, Mary Dobson came out to India in 1897 as a member of the Settlement Committee. After some weeks' nursing of plague cases in the Arthur Road Hospital, the Committee began its work of Christian Evangelism among the wealthy Parsi residents of Kamballa Hill. The house to house visitations, the musical "At Homes" and other social functions where spiritual questions were discussed, the misgivings of would-be converts and the solicitude of the Settlement ladies lest these should withdraw at the last moment, are all described very vividly. "Many were the ups and downs as the new Christian Parsis learned what it is to lead a life obedient to Christ's teaching; there were some who failed, but the miracle of God's power in transforming lives was constantly seen, and who can say how much of it was due to the faithful friendship of one who so longed to see apostles to the Parsi nation raised up from among their own people?"

Here is the description of the admission as a catechumen of a young Parsi: "You will be glad to hear that last Sunday the young Parsi lad with whom, off and on, Mr. McNeile and I have had to do the last two years, publicly renounced the Parsi, or rather Zoroastrian, religion, and gave up his sacred cord and shirt. The service for the admission of catechumens is very beautiful and impressive, though an ordeal for all of us, for we feared that J. would withdraw, but he went through it bravely enough. J. told his people as soon as he got back that he was no longer a Zoroastrian, and they promptly requested him to leave". This was in 1904. After 1913, the year of Gulbai Vakil's baptism, we read of no further conversions. Judging from results, the missionary work of Miss Dobson and her colleagues seems to have taken a directly educational and social turn. For though, as late as 1920, Miss Dobson claimed for the University Settlement for women students a distinctly Christian basis, this institution is now for all practical purposes a hostel for University girls of all castes and creeds. In 1915 the Women Graduates' Union was started and Miss Dobson represented the English graduates. During the last three years of her life, expeditions to Badrinath, Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, in search of Biblical manuscripts, opened a new field of interest.

The book is full of the commiseration with which Miss Dobson regarded those without a Christian inheritance. Of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu she said: "If only she were a Christian, what a tremendous influence she would have." Happily for the Parsi, Hindu and Mussalman alike, it is no longer considered necessary to change one's religion in order to attain the ideal in progress and development and, no doubt, Miss Dobson also came to feel something like this. As one closes the book one cannot help feeling that such an ardent missionary " was better fitted to be the centre of a group of ardent disciples, an itinerant band of Franciscans, than to be the head of a Settlement."

A FAREWELL MESSAGE FROM A CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY.

I was born in Bombay seventy-nine years ago, and am a pucca Indian. On account of the death of my father my revered mother took her fatherless children to America for their education. After there finishing primary and university studies, I returned to my native land. For over fifty-one years I have been a Christian worker among Indian brothers and sisters. On account of a new rule of my Missionary Society I am now returning to America to serve there. Before going I am glad to give a final message to my brothers. This can be expressed in a short sentence: "One is your Father, and all ye are brethren."

This fraternal message has three parts. One is that I more and more appreciate many good characteristics in my Indian fellow-countrymen. Once a worthy English Governor said to me: 'I have been in India only a few years. When I talk with Indians I do not feel that I really understand them or that they understand me. You have lived a life-time here. Do you feel that you understand Indians?' I replied that Indians do not wear their hearts on their sleeves. Several influences make Indians reticent. One influence is that in general the Hindu religion gives men liberty to think as they wish, but strictly requires them outwardly to act within caste and religious rules. Therefore repressions in the utterance of convictions are common. So, though I have lived long among Indians, I only partially understand them. Yet I more and more understand, because I appreciate them better, and know what causes their reticence of expression. Also they naturally refrain from revealing themselves to those who do not understand them.

The most intellectual Indian whom it has been my privilege to know a little, who was also a religious man, was Mr. Mahadev Govind Ranade, a very discriminating, strong man, a Judge of the Bombay High Court. A good many years ago before prevalent social changes had come into vogue, at a public tea party where people of various religions were gathered, Judge Ranade took a cup of tea. According to strict Hindu rules he thereby lost caste and was required to undergo prayaschit or expiation. That eminent man underwent the humiliating expiation of taking pancha-gavya, the five products of a cow, in order to atone for his religious lapse. Many considered him weak in thus outwardly acknowledging that he had sinned. The real reason for enduring this humiliation was that his orthodox and revered mother urged him to undergo this outward humiliation. In the alternative of deference to a revered mother, or refusal to admit that drinking tea at a promiscuous gathering was sinful, he accepted the former part of the alternative. Nowadays a changed assumption allows thousands of Brahmans to drink tea with persons of any class. At that time few understood Ranade.

A second part of the present parting message is appreciation of the courage of some Hindu brothers in publicly advocating and practising important social and religious changes. Nowadays many Hindus speak against polytheism, idolatry and caste, and other gross elements of strict Hinduism as untrue and injurious, so that rarely is there occasion for a Christian missionary to speak about these evils. Now a missionary can leave it to courageous Non-Christians to arraign and deplore those mistakes.

A third part of the writer's appreciation of many devout Hindus is their sincere and public reverence for the Lord Jesus. Seventeen years ago when a company of missionaries were rowing up the Ganges and were passing a group of Hindu ascetics who were engaged in religious ablutions in their sacred river,

these Hindus called out to the passing missionaries 'Jesus be accursed.' It is inconceivable that now anywhere in India such a feeling and expression could occur. Among all classes of Hindus there is widespread reverence for Jesus and much outward expression of such reverence.

There is also widespread criticism of and dissatisfaction with what is called Christendom and the Christian Church and what is supposed to be the Christian religion. There is dissatisfaction with both what is called the Hindu religion and the Christian religion. Devout men ask whether the aim and effort of Jesus was not to purify and elevate not only the Jewish religion of His time, but also whether it is not His aim and effort now to spiritualize current religion everywhere, rather than to found a new religion. He plainly said, 'I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. He that is not against me is for me.' Nowhere in the New Testament is found the term 'The Christian Religion.' The term by which Jesus constantly expressed His aim was 'the kingdom of God.' He foresaw that the world would be drawn to Him personally, and through Him to the Father. So He foretold, 'I, if be lifted up, will draw all men to myself' (not to my religion). That is what He is now doing in our India.

How plain is the trend of spiritual thinking and expectation of our country towards Jesus now, of whom the Apostle Paul taught that in Him (not His religion or His religious community) men of all lands and times would become one. So as the present Christian missionary leaves the land of his birth and of his adult service he rejoices at the drawing power of the Lord over religious Indian brothers.

One is the Father of us all. All we are brethren.

R. A. HUME.

TWO EMINENT REFORMERS OF KANARA.

(BY MR. K. VENUGOPAL RAO, B.A.).

A social reformer's lot is a bed of thorns, if he means business. That wordy stuff, variously known as appreciation, recognition, etc., he will not have till late in life. So far as his own social surroundings are concerned, he has to stand between the Scylla of communal derision and the Charybdis of general suspicion.

There is another side to the Reformer. If he persists long in his work, in the face of curses, and achieves something, he develops into an egotist. This quality, when stretched further, is what is called political projection. Instances of this type are not wanting in South Kanara where social weeds and fungi are found in abundance and any little work or pretence of work passes off for social reform.

Among us there were many in the past who dabbled in the reform of their own particular communities by means of expedients or make-shifts. Nearly all of them gave up their job, either because they got enamoured of orthodoxy after a change or feared that the reformed were like driftwood, victims of all passing waves. By way of contrast, however, we have nowadays a few perverted editions of reformers, those who rush at the strongholds of conservatism and storm them. But social reform worth the name was not done. It was left for two persons to do that and they alone have stood the test of time and merciless criticism.

Rao Saheb Kudmul Ranga Rao is one of them. Born at a time when the baker's bread was taboo and women were cheap domestics and Adi-dravidas infectious beasts, he evolved the theory of equal opportunities for all under the Indian sun and translated it into practice. In his scheme, there were to be no such distinctions as superior and inferior, not to think of the depressed. Brahmoism, the religion for an age of democracy, was after his heart and he adopted it in the teeth of opposition and ridicule, for it was under the shelter of the Brahmo Samaj that he wanted to secure for the Adi-dravidas and women the necessary social amenities. The direction of the latter, he was privileged to leave in the hands of his daughter, now the esteemed Mrs. N. Subba Rao, a lady now nobly engaged in raising the status of the women of Kanara. For himself, discarding the path of prosperity, he early in life laid the foundations of an institution, which has become immortal and immortalised him, with the result that we have a few Adi-dravidas brushing shoulders with the born elite, according to whom their position is on the lowest rung of the social ladder.

It was all uphill work for Mr. Ranga Rao, for he had to encounter at every step superstitious sentiments on all sides: to the Adi-dravidas, education and refinement was anathema; and according to the upper classes, the elevation of the untouchables only ushered the heterdox, anti-Shastric chaos. He slowly but surely exploded these false notions with the result that to-day a large number of people have found their conscience. The concrete side of his work now grown to such "fearful" dimensions stares us in the face—a living institution, the Depressed Classes Mission, the oldest in South India, ministering to the primary needs of the Adi-dravidas. Behind the structure stands Mr. Ranga Rao, now in spirit, actual control having passed to the Servants of India Society, honoured by the Government not to the extent he deserved to be.

Mr. Padmanaur Ramachandra Rao is the other person referred to and a social reformer par excellence. Some well-meaning people imagine that his zeal outruns his discretion while others firmly hold that he is one of those rare persons who stop at nothing to reduce their best convictions into practice. A born social rebel, it was in the Brahmo Samaj—the patron of the outcastes—that he found his refuge, both spiritual and conscientious. Like all reformers he early in life set about educating and uplifting the Adi-dravidas, widows and all and also set to make the best of a bad domestic bargain. Almost a boy, he had a girl wife by whom he had to do his duty. He taught her to share his humanitarian burdens but death prevented her from doing her work for long. He then came under the influence of that arch-rebel of Andhradesa, Mr. Veeresalingam Pantulu and became more than usually energetic. On his own initiative, he started and put on strong foundations a dozen colonies, Schools and Co-operative Societies for the Adi-dravidas, round and about Rajahmundry. At that time he had found for himself a worthy comrade in life, his second wife, the foster-daughter of Mr. Veeresalingam Pantulu, to whom he owed the birth of his gifted daughter, Padmavati of poetic memory, and all the work that he had since been able to do. In our own district, he established a few Adi-dravida Schools, a fairly long-lived widows' home and orphanage, some colonies for the Adi-dravidas, one of which was there long before any one of us spoke of Adi-dravida in terms of a human being, and another got miscarried in its effect and became a Moplah colony instead. When Gandhi's movement became the fashion, Mr Ramachandra Rao joined it in all sincerity, but he kept himself scrupulously in the background occupied with his own pet dreams. Now in his old age he is the very picture of latter-day hopes shattered by some of his incompetent colleagues—and his benefactions and services as educationist and the servant of the untouchables forgotten in toto—only the Adi-dravida children calling him Grandpa by way of saving grace.

WANTED INDIVIDUAL ACTION.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have read carefully in your issue of March the 6th a letter written by "A Reader" purporting to be a critical observation of the contents of my letter published in your issue of February the 27th under the above caption. Your correspondent does not seem to have taken pains to understand the spirit of what I had written, before launching himself in troublesome waters. I never asked "the National leaders to abdicate their leadership," but what I wanted to emphasise was that those who held views not consistent with but antagonistic to those of our leaders and were obliged to assume a disinterested attitude, should give up their yoke of loyalty to the so-called leaders and resort to their own cherished line of action with a view to create a healthy atmosphere in the place of their present lethargic indifference. I hope it is sufficiently plain now that there is a world of difference between the expressions "leaders abdicating" and "giving up the yoke of loyalty to leaders."

I never advised anybody to take to individual "actions according to his or her fancy." When a definite programme is chalked out, there is no question of fancy creeping in and little possibility for a chaotic muddle also What I have asked the people to do is only to follow the constructive programme of the Indian National Congress side by side with the boycott of British goods, which is mainly directed for bringing pressure upon our rulers to concede to our request.

Also, I never disputed the utility and resourcefulness of able leadership for a national cause. My grievance is that many of our leaders are displaying what skill they have on personal vanities and fruitless ambitions, thus wasting their precious time in mutual quarrels that lead to splits and cleavages in our common rank and file. In fact there is nothing in my letter which would lead to an implication that leadership is not at all required for attaining the desired goal. Here I may draw the attention of the "Reader" to the conditional phrases I have used, namely, "In the absence of" and "In the present circumstances." These phrases would clearly show to an unbiassed mind that I never held the view the "Reader" had attributed to me. In fact I respect and love every one irrespective of caste, creed, colour or community, who is working for the uplift of our Motherland, and I assure the "Reader" that I am not a whit behind him in this respect.

Mahatma Gandhi, perhaps the only competent and qualified man to lead us to our goal, is keeping aloof from all political activities, and will remain so for some time at least. The Swarajists are wasting their time and energy in knocking their heads against an impenetrable wall. The No-Changers are following a non-interference policy. Hence the people are left without a real leader. The people are becoming desperate and some are losing heart. As "an idle man's brain is the workshop of the devil," people are directing their energy in the aggravation of communal feelings. Every one will admit that communal tension, engendered by interested parties, now stands at a higher level than it was in 1921.

The "Reader" goes further in his observation and asks me to quote some instances in the history of humanity where "success of a far-reaching consequence was attained by individual action without leadership and collective will of the people". This question the critic himself has to answer if he wants to satisfy himself and those of his way of thinking. The whole tenor of what I had written in my letter is nothing but the absolute necessity for the collective will of the people guided by organized and efficient leadership. But wherever this latter is wanting the organized and united strength of the collective will of the people will not have to suffer seriously thereby. Such a will more or less automatically creates leaders of its own choice, who will guide them through thick and thin to the final goal. Herein lies the greatness of Mahatmaji, who is anxiously awaiting for that heyday of triumph in our keen fight for Swaraj.

I may also add a few lines more with regard to the value of individual actions. It is the organized individual actions that go to make up what is called a united effort for a common cause. The critic has necessarily to eliminate "his or her fancy" and substitute a common line of action. Here is the clear perspective which makes everything quite alright.

Mahim, Bombay, Yours etc.,
16th March 1926. N. N. MENON.

WOMEN IN ANCIENT INDIA.

The Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri presided and the Hon'ble Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, Law Member, Madras, gave an address on "Women in the Vedic and the Post-Vedic Literature" at the anniversary meeting of the Presidency College Sanskrit Association held on the 14th instant. Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, in the course of his address, said :

I may tell you at once that I was attracted to this particular subject by a series of articles in an American Magazine in which it was maintained that until very recent times the women of India enjoyed both in law and in society a very inferior and degrading position. As a lawyer I happened to know that so far as the subject of Indian jurisprudence was concerned—I am not for the moment referring to the system prevailing in Malabar which is unique—the rights originally enjoyed and even to-day possessed by women could compare not unfavourably with the rights of women until very recent times in other countries which boast of a higher and more evolved material civilization. I was therefore prepared to contradict the writer of that series of articles in the matter of the law. But when he began to analyse the social position and the position occupied in literature and the things of the intellect by the women of India, it appeared to me that it may be useful to draw attention to what may be called the other side of the picture, not by mere assertion but by definite example and quotation, if possible. In the task that I have placed before myself and which I am now essaying with your leave, I am not acting in the spirit of a man who praises the past.

The Vedic Women.

Even careful students of our institutions have fallen into serious error in regard to this topic by concentrating attention on accidentals. When Panini wrote his wonderful book which is not only a grammar but an encyclopædia and implicitly a history of current thougt and chronicle of pristine society, the existence of such words as "Kathi" and "Bahvrichi" testified to the fact that women studied the katha branch of the Vedas and that there were some who had studied many hymns of the Vedas. The definition in Panini of the word "Pathni" indicates the common rights and duties of husband and wife in what was undoubtedly one of the most important of the daily acts of ancient India, the Vedic sacrifice.

During the course of Vedic sacrifice; it is also provided that mistakes in recital should be rectified by the wife of the sacrificer–mistakes either in expression or pronunciation. Obviously this involves not only the careful watching by the wife of the sacrifice but previous study of the hymn. Notwithstanding such passages large generalisations have been made by later Indian law-makers and writers which have been further amplified by European scholars and lawyers and prejudiced deductions made from stray expressions. Such scholars forget, for instance, that in Rama's famous statement to Vibhishana he states that neither houses nor vestments nor enclosing walls are screens of a woman but her own virtue. It is not remembered how natural it was considered that Sakuntala should appear in the public Court of King Dushyanta, how Damayanti travelled about by herself and how, in the Uttararama Charitha, descriptions are given of royal ladies visiting the hermitage of Valmiki. Students of our literature know that it is taken as an accepted fact that women were present during the enactment of dramas, that they freely visited temples of Gods and indeed, in the Mahabharatha, when apparently the beginnings of restraint were discernible, it is stated that they went about uncovered at their free will and enjoyed complete liberty. A shrewd student of Indian literature though an unflattering critic of our social systems, Sir Monier Williams, referring to the descriptions of Kaikeyi, Kousalya and Mandodari in the Ramayana and of Droupathi and Damayanti, admits that these engage our affections and intellect far more than Helen or Penelope and he specifically adverts to the touching instance of wifely devotion exemplified by Gandhari who, out of sympathy for her blind husband, never appeared in public without a veil over her face.

In the Vedic days not only did women proudly proclaim that they were the daughters of the Aryas and take part freely in the social life of their time, but they indeed assisted in the composition of some of the hymns. In the beginning of many of the Rig Veda hymns the name of the muse and the name of the composer are generally mentioned. Thus, in the fifth chapter of the Rig Veda, one of the hymns is stated to have been composed by a woman called Viswavara born of the race of Athri. Another composer was the famous Lopamudra, the wife of Agastya. The story of Lopamudra has been narrated as an example for all women in the Ramayana and evidently she was both a great scholar and a pattern of connubial conduct. Lopamudra composed the 179th Rathi. Another hymn owed its origin to a song of the Rig Veda whose muse was Ambhri's daughter, Vak, and it has been asserted that this hymn contained the nucleus of the later Vedanta philosophy. Not only did women take part in the composition and chanting of songs but in later days when the comparatively simple though loftily conceived invocation of the Gods were succeeded by subtle philosophical speculation and dialectical dexterity, Indian women played a prominent part in the intellectual up-heavals of the age.

Buddhist Women.

The Buddhist system of life and philosophy from the beginning gave a great impetus to women's education and general progress. Buddhist women were entitled to enter monastic life. Many of them were well educated and a number of them performed pilgrimages to distant lands for the purposes of spreading their faith. A cousin of the great King Asoka, Sangamitra, went to Ceylon and founded a school of philosophy there and it is stated that many women of Ceylon were thus made proficient in the arts. Sangamitra's life and work are fairly well-known, but what is not equally known is the story of Bharathi, wife of Mandanamisra. Mandanamisra and the great Sankaracharya were contemporaries and were both profound scholars. Sankara, it is narrated, took a vow that if in Sastraic discussion he should be defeated by Mandanámisra he would become Mandanamisra's pupil. Mandanamisra similarly declared that if he was defeated by Sankara he would give up family life and learn at the feet of Sankara. In the great intellectual struggle that followed, both of them without hesitation chose as their arbitrator and referee Mandanamisra's wife—a choice which demonstrated at once her marvellous attainments and the respect that every one had for her impartiality. After the argument rose to its supreme heights and closed, Bharati adjudged her husband to have lost his case and according to his vow the husband gave up family life and became the disciple of Sankara and so did Bharati. The story of Bhaskara Chari's daughter, Lilavati, is very familiar

realpatidar.com

realpatidar.com

to Indian students. She became a widow early in life and the father thereafter educated her in philosophy and mathematics and the book "Lilavathi" bears witness to her accomplishments and to the deep respect in which she was held,

POETS AND SCIENTISTS.

Varahamihira, the great astronomer, was the student of a woman named Khana who appears to have learnt the rudiments of astronomy from the autochtonous races in Ceylon and subsequently developed the science. Finally after both of them had completed their researches, they married each other and lived in the house of Varaha—one of the nine gems of Vikrama's court. There are many stories told of Khana's knowledge of astronomy. During the time of Bhoja of whom it is sung two women attained great fame as poets, one of them being the wife of a potter and the other the wife of a forester—this fact proving that learning and culture were not the properties of any particular caste or community. In the Mahabharata we hear of one Sulabha, the daughter of King Predhana, who not being able to find one equal to her in learning remained single. In the Skanda Purana there is the story of a woman called Malayavati who studied as a pupil of Durvasa and became proficient in many branches of learning. It is also conceded that another Malayavati, the wife of the great Emperor Salivahana, was one of the greatest exponents of the science of grammar. In the Kathasaritsagara we hear the many accomplishments of the Suryavati, the wife of King Anantadeva. In the Bakthivijaya we read of women being not only poets but being versed in chemistry, astronomy and the science of metals.

WOMEN IN MEDIEVAL TIMES.

In the medieval times two women distinguished themselves in the field of literature and learning. As late as the 14th century Lakshmi Devi, the grand daughter-in-law of the King Narasimha, wrote a law book named Vividachandra which is now treated as authoritative in the Mithila country. It is perhaps not difficult to perceive why the women of the Mithila country have higher rights under the law than the other women in India.

After the 18th century we do not read many accounts of the work of Hindu women in fields of literature and of philosophy but of course we have had many instances of great queens like Ahalya Bai who have administered States with conspicuous success and have made for themselves an imperishable name. In the Moghal court where notwithstanding the custom of seclusion purdanashins were able to perfect themselves in many sciences and arts, we hear of one princess in the Moghal court as a most accomplished rider and horse-woman. The daughter of Aurangazib was a scholar and poet and indeed the tradition of poesy has been continuous in the courts of the Mussalman and Moghal nobles.

That the education of women was not merely in ornamental but also in the practical aspects of life is indicated in the dialogue occurring in the Bharata between Droupadi and Satyabhama where it is emphasized that the housewife must look after the expenditure of the family, draw up the budget of the household and must keep in mind extraordinary items of expenditure and be prepared to meet them.

THE POSITION SUMMARISED.

Summarising the results of these observations do we not find that Aryan women had the entric into all the branches of learning, that they were scholars, Vedic teachers, exponents of Sastras, participants in Yoga and the sacred duties? Not only so, but they were honoured in royal courts, there were text books on the law written by them, they were charioteers and warriors, were poetesses and councillors. The Indian ideal has not been very different from the one adumbrated in the words of Tennyson in his great poem of feminine-revolt against dependence. "A woman's cause is man's. If she be small, slight natured, miserable, how shall men grow?"

It is well established that in the Dravida country, women enjoyed even greater freedom in recent times than in the north and not the least notable contribution made by the intensely religious and yet practical-minded Dravidian genius to the sum total of the world culture, is that made by a woman.

The Rt. Hon'ble V. S. Srinivasa Sastry, in concluding the meeting, observed:—

We have been taught to believe for ages in India that woman has occupied an exceedingly humble station. Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer's remarks would give food for thought and give us also some reason to feel that we have not treated women in the past at all events as badly as we are sometimes suspected to have done. It is really impossible to believe that we could have treated women shabbily for ages and still maintain a really stable and creditable civilization. Somehow Western critics and historians and following them several of our scholars have thought fit time after time to repeat this story that in India woman has never received her due. I am very pleased indeed to have been here to-day and listen to a long list of the names and achievements of Indian women which would go to correct the wrong impression and which would enable me to look the world in the face and say that in India too woman has perhaps received always what is due to her. Whether at the present moment the statement would be true is more than I can say. Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer's suggestion that so far as the law is concerned woman is well-established, seems to be so well borne out that the charge would not be repeated against us. On the other hand I have read in some books of law that long before woman came to her own in the West in respect of her rights of property, we in India seem to have accorded them to her in abundance.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE STUART PERIOD.

The following excerpts are taken from an interesting article contributed by B. H. G. to the Illustrated London News and written in appreciation of the book, "Home Life Under the Stuarts", by Elizabeth Godfrey. They throw considerable light on the upbringing of children, education of girls and the practices prevalent with regard to marriage in England at that time:—

In "Home Life Under the Stuarts" three phases are accented: "the nearness of the cradle to the coffin"; the prevalence of the parent-ridden, mercenary, boy-and-girl marriage; and the almost unswerving obedience to authority. The well-arranged weddings and the bowings of the head were, no doubt, consequent upon the shortness of the mortal span. Forcing was the custom : everything had to be early ; as we should say now, before season. Else there were no time for the tender plant to blossom and bear fruit before it died.

" Severity had always been the rule in Tudor nurseries, and was only beginning to relax a little, thanks chiefly to the example in royal households. King James was a very affectionate father—almost too much so, since he carried on his petting and fondling and little foolish names till ' Baby Charles ' was a man grown and about to seek a wife. Charles himself, dignified and reserved as he was, was very tender to his children, and too grave to romp and play with them. Discipline was certainly less harsh as time went on than in the beginning of the century, when little Elizabeth Tanfield, the heiress, who at fifteen years old was married to the first Lord Falkland, was kept in strict order by her mother, and always spoke to her upon her knees."

Meanwhile, there was scholarship on the distaff side. " It is a popular delusion that giving women a sound classical education is an invention of our own day. . . . Amongst the Puritans, it is true, an idea that learning was a waste of time for a woman was just beginning to suggest itself. Ralph Verney strongly deprecated too learned an education for his god-daughter, Dr. Denton's little Nancy.

But he was in the minority. Mrs. Lucy Apsley has recalled her proficiency in memorising sermons when she was four, and the fact that at seven she had eight tutors ; while the Elizabeth Tanfield, already mentioned, " became passionately fond of reading, and being forbidden candles in her room by her mother, she bribed the servants to supply her with some, which they did at so high a rate that by the time she was married which was when she was fifteen, they had run her into debt to the extent of a hundred pounds."

So the marriage of convenience in times when the debut was made at twelve.

" It was exceptional for marriage to take place absolutely in the nursery, as in the case of little Lady Mary Villiers, not only wife, but widow, before she was nine years old ; but it was quite a common thing for a child to be married at thirteen. In that case she was usually given a year or two of education before she lived with her husband, and he, if only about fifteen or sixteen, often went to Oxford after his marriage, or travelled abroad. . . . The large family of the Earl of Cork afforded many instances of these very early marriages. . . . His eldest daughter, Alice, was married to Lord Barrymore when she was thirteen ; the second, Sarah, was only twelve when she was contracted to Sir Thomas Moore—indeed, the negotiations were begun when she was but eight. Being left a widow at fourteen, she was quickly remarried to one of the Digby family." While, of the boys, Francis was wed at sixteen, his father commending him to his future mother-in-law, Lady Stafford, " as a silken thread to be wrought into what sample you please, either flower or weed, and to be knotted or untied as God shall be pleased to put it into your noble heart."

Doubtless, the able " working " of parents accounts for the " arranged " marriages being at least as successful as those in which the contracting parties had freedom. For that the greater number of the weddings turned out well is evident. There were love and respect on both sides and desire for duty. The man was the master of the family, but by no means necessarily a martinet ; the woman was mistress of the home, and ruled it with a firm hand directed by a practical brain. To the housewife, indeed, fell most of the domestic detail, and right well she handled it from the care of her children to that of her servants, even to the imperious cook of the type given a "character" by Mr. James Howell.

Well she had to handle it in those days of "evil communications," those days innocent of preservatives and canning and bottling ! Even were she a Puritan wearing text upon her clothes and embroidering " religious petticoats," she had to have much worldly knowledge. How else could she sew and supervise, see that the " fripperies " were filled with suitable garments, watch over the kitchen and the garden, contrive " sallets " and cordials, doctor her household, and be sure that the five gallons of honey and forty gallons of small ale of Sir Thomas Gower's Metheglin, were "perfectly incorporated " by stirring with " a clean arm " ? Early training has its merits.

THE ALL-INDIA MARWARI CONFERENCE.

Resolutions.

To-day's (16th March) sitting of the Marwari Agrawal Mahasabha commenced at 1 o'clock in the spacious pandal of theHindu Mahasabha under the presidentship of Seth Jamnalal Bajaj. About 3,000 men and 1000 women attended. Prominent among those present were, besides Marwari Agrawal leaders, L. Ghanishyamdass Birla, L. Shrikrishna Das, the Dewan of Khetri, Pt. Jhabarmal Sharma, Editor, Hindu Sansar, Pandit Motilal Nehru, R.B. Ambaprasad, Pt. Haribhan Upadhai, L.C.V. Vaidya, L. Kedarnath, L. Arjunlal Sethi, Swami Jagdishwaranand and others.

After prayers and mangalacharan by the boys of the Marwari Vidyalaya of Delhi, Gayatri Devi and Manorama Devi spoke on the evil of child marriage and the ideals of grihasthashram.

Messages of sympathy were then read including one from the Jaora Agrawal Panchayat condemning Seth Jamnalal Bajaj for having performed his daughter's marriage in a manner different from the prevailing custom. It was announced by the General Secretary that telegrams expressing admiration for setting up an ideal of simplicity, thrift and freedom from pomp and show and superstition and irreligious atmosphere in the marriage were not read out at the express desire of the President.

The first two resolutions were moved from the chair. One of them expressed condolence at the death of some prominent leaders. The other resolution expressed admiration for Kapoor Cand Jain who rather than live to see his younger sister married to an old man gave up his life, unable to dissuade his parents from effecting the alliance.

The next resolution was about fixing the minimum age limit for betrothal and marriage. After a heated discussion and lengthy speeches, 14 was fixed as the minimum age limit for a boy to be betrothed.

Much discussion took place over the minimum age limit at the time of marriage. A motion for fixing the limit at 18 was lost. Finally, 16 for boys and 12 for girls was fixed.

The resolution forbids too much expenditure on marriage celebrations, urges stoppage of filthy abuses by women and fixes the limit of marriage party to 100 members.

The resolution against the evil practice of selling away girls to old men in marriage was moved by Kedarnath of Lahore. The resolution called upon the Marwari Agrawal socially to boycott such persons. L. Madanlal Jalan, moving an amendment substituting "communal abhorrence of girl-sellers" for "social boycott," said he feared the social boycott would be either misused or prove futile. The resolution was passed nem con.

Another resolution which prohibited polygamy was passed.

The last resolution of to-day, expressing sympathy with the undertaking of Lala Girdharilal, of Allahabad, to construct a Hindu Ashram in London, was eventually withdrawn.—The Hindustan Times, Delhi.

Pt. Malaviya on the Duties of Marwaris.

A very impressive address was given by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya yesterday (17th March,) before the Marwari Sammelan. "The foremost duty that I think before you is to make adequate arrangements for the religious and moral education of your children, who are in fact the masters of a new generation," with these words he began his address. If there was no Dharma, he said, all wealth and worldly honour was useless. Referring to the caste system, Panditji said, the Rishis had very wisely divided Hindus into four classes, which was in fact a division of duties. A standard of sacrifice had also been laid down for all the Varnas.

All the present confusion in the Hindu society was because of their negligence in performing their duties. If all realised their sense of duty and worked accordingly, Hindu society could once again rise to its old glory.

Referring to the education of children the learned speaker said that boys and girls both should be given proper education in Gurukulas. He said that unless girls were also properly educated one half of the society would remain lame and the cart could not go ahead with one wheel. He further said that girls should be sufficiently enlightened and well versed in religion. "Greed is the root of all sins," said Panditji.

Talking of the extravagance at marriage occasions, he said it was ruinous. Many a poor family had been ruined, because of the high expense on useless customs. He suggested to the Marwaris to fix a certain limit for marriage expenses. In his opinion one hundred rupees marriage was the best. Rs 250 for second class and Rs. 500 for third class marriage were sufficient in his opinion. The greater the expenses on marriage, the lower would be its grade.—The Tribune, Lahore.

WIDOW MARRIAGE CONFERENCE.

The Widow Marriage Conference held its session last night (15th March,) in the Shuddhi Sabha Pandal, which was packed. Lala Lajpat Rai presided. In his opening remarks he said that though as President his duty was simply to hear both sides, yet he could not refrain from saying that untouchability and widows were the two dark stains on the Hindu Samaj and unless the Hindus washed off those stains they could not stand up before the world. These blots were strong obstacles in the way of progress.

Swami Shraddhanand in a learned speech quoted verses from Smritis and Shastras to show that child widows till the age of sixteen were in fact not widows and should be remarried. He gave the following list of widows under twenty years:

| Year | Number. |
|---|---|
| Under one year ... ... ... | 597 |
| 1 to 2 years of age ... ... ... | 494 |
| 2 to 3 " " ... ... ... | 1,297 |
| 3 to 4 " " ... ... ... | 2,837 |
| 4 to 5 " " ... ... ... | 6,707 |
| 5 to 10 " " ... ... ... | 95,037 |
| 10 to 15 " " ... ... ... | 2,53,347 |
| 15 to 20 " " ... ... ... | 3,96,172 |

Total approximately 7 lakhs.

Swamiji painted the miserable picture of Hindu widows and young married girls and moved the audience to tears. He then moved a resolution that all child widows should be married.

Lalaji invited opposition. Dr. B. K. Mitra, who came forward to oppose the resolution, said that he wanted to go further and say that all widows should be married. Dr. Raghunandan Parshad objected to the word "widow marriage." He said that child widows were in fact not widows, hence the nomenclature should be changed. At this stage Lalaji vacated the chair and Rai Sahib Kedarnath occupied it. Before leaving the house Lalaji said that personally he was in favour of giving the fullest rights to women, who, he said, were equal partners in life. He said it was nothing but tyranny that men should be allowed to marry as many girls as they liked and women should be made to observe celebacy. He would allow a widow of fifty years to remarry if she so desired.

Shrimati Dropadidevi agreed that child widows should be re-married, but she strongly opposed the principle of re-marriage of women as well as men. She said men did not observe Brahmacharya and had fallen a prey to evil desires and now they wanted women also to follow suit. If that were allowed, whence would come the satis of whom the Hindus boasted so much? She asked them to destroy the root cause, i.e., child marriages, instead of corrupting ladies. She urged religious education among widows in order to keep them pure and celebate. Rai Bahadur Sevak Ram, M.L.C, related in brief the work done by the Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha of Lahore and suggested the opening of widow homes for widows who did not like to marry.

After a few more speeches the resolution was carried nem con.—The Tribune, Lahore.

CLOSURE OF LIQUOR SHOPS ON FESTIVALS.

The Prohibition Secretary writes under date March 19th to say that the Amritsar Temperance Society has wired to the Hon'ble Sardar Jogendra Singh, Minister of Excise, Punjab Government, Mr. C. M. King, Financial Commissioner, Punjab, and Commissioner, Lahore, emphatically protesting against the Deputy Commissioner, Amritsar's illegal and ultra vires reply to Municipal Committee's resolution under section 4, Local Option Act, that "according to section 4 (3) this resolution will be given effect to on 1st April 1927, "unless before that time the Collector should think fit to take action under section 6." The following is the wire:—

The Amritsar Temperance Society places on record its strong protest that the Deputy Commissioner, Amritsar, has refused to comply with the unanimous resolution of the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, that the licensed liquor shops be kept closed on eight additional days during the year, on the ground "that the proposed closures are not necessary." The days included in the Municipal Committee's resolution were the birth-day of Sri Rama (Ram Naumi), the birth-day of Sri Krishna (Janma Ashtami), the birthday of Prophet Mohammad, the birthday of Christ, the birthday of Guru Ramdas, the founder of Amritsar, Lohri, Bhadarkali and Holi, days whose sanctity it is, in the opinion of this society, in the highest degree desirable and necessary to observe and on which days huge crowds of men pour into the town from outside, resulting in disgraceful scenes and sights inside the town, when it becomes well-nigh impossible for women and children to pass certain streets and it it is a source of great pain and regret that the head of the district does not think it necessary to permit closure of liquor shops on these sacred days.

The Society, therefore, respectfully approaches the Hon'ble Minister of Agriculture and Excise, C. M. King Esquire, Financial Commissioner, Punjab, and Commissioner, Lahore Division, with the earnest hope and prayer that immediate effect may be given to the unanimous and repeated expression of opinion of the Municipal Committee as representing the insistent public demand.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Andhra Desa Kalavantulu (Devadasi) Reform Conference, Gudivada: In the Andhra as perhaps also in other parts of our helpless motherland, there is a community living by prostitution and unfortunately sanctified by 'Caste.' That its origin might have been 'Dedication of Girls' to service of temples of worship can in no sense justify the life of immorality to which they are condemned by themselves, the society and the usage. The younger generations have for some time realised the folly of this age-long custom and are striving their level best to reform themselves. Conferences, Educational funds, Newspapers, Leaflets, reclamation of girls and encouragement of marriages are some of the methods adopted for working out the reform. A Conference of the kind for the whole of the Andhra is to be held on 3rd and 4th of April at Gudivada, the seat of pioneer work for the amelioration of the suppressed classes, and we wish every success to it.

Puri Widows' Home: Puri is one of the important places of pilgrimage for Hindus in Northern India. At the request of the Hindu Mahasabha, Babu Gopa Bandhu Das, the Orissa Hindu leader, has now opened a Widows' Home at Puri for giving shelter to widows and other women who get stranded there. The Hindu Mahasabha has promised a monthly contribution of Rs. 50 towards its expenses, and we hope all charitably-inclined and philanthropic Hindus will liberally respond to the appeal made by Babu Gopa Bandhu Das for funds owards the Widows' Home.

A Brahmo Marriage in Bangalore: The Secretary, Bangalore Cantonment Brahmo Samaj, writes to say that in that Brahmo Samaj, Sriman Narayan Kasinath Dewal (Sculptor) was married to Srimati Parvati Bai (Head Mistress, Government Girls Training School, Bellary) on Sunday the 14th March 1926, amidst a distinguished gathering of Indians and Europeans, when Mr. V. Brahmananda Raj officiated as Minister. The function was a brilliant success.

Das Memorial: We understand that the memorial for the late Mr. C. R. Das has taken the shape of a hospital for women. The hospital which was to have been opened on Monday last at the residence of the late Mr. C. R. Das by Dr. Tagore has been postponed owing to his illness. Dr. E. Pateman has been appointed the Resident Surgeon and arrangements have been made to have a course of lectures delivered to pupil nurses. The hospital will provide accommodation for 20 patients, but a new building as an extension is in contemplation.

Education of Depressed Classes: The Education Department of the Lahore Municipality has been evincing great interest in the education of the depressed classes and in the current year's budget the Municipality has provided Rs. 5,000 for the teaching of the depressed classes in the indigenous schools, conducted by the Maulvis and Pandits of the city. The Labour Board of the Punjab Congress is also co-operating with the Municipality in the matter.

Excommunicated on Grounds of Marriage: As a sequel to Mr. Kanyalal Munshi, the well-known Bombay Advocate, belonging to the Bhargava Brahmin community, marrying Mrs. Lilavati Sheth, a Jain lady of Ahmedabad, the Bhargava Brahmins of Broach have excommunicated the parties.

Sir J. C. Bose's New Discovery: The Englishman understands that an interesting discovery has been made by Sir Jagadish Chandra Bose on the action of cobra venom on the heart beat of plants which casts a flood of light on the action of the venom on an animal heart.

A Bigamous Marriage in Sind: A correspondent writing in the Times of India, Bombay, reports that a bigamous marriage, which has created a sensation in Hindu social circles of Hyderabad and Karachi, is likely to lend strong support to the Bill which is now before the Bombay Legislative Council under which Mr. Durgdas B. Adwani, member for the city of Karachi, seeks to make it legally void for a Sindhi Hindu to marry a second wife while the first is alive without the latter's consent before a Magistrate. Asandas, son of Mr. Kishenchand, a philanthropist and public-spirited citizen of Hyderabad, and a Sind merchant, had his second marriage celebrated not at Hyderabad which is his place of residence, but at Karachi in a secret way at midnight a few days ago. Public indignation is being expressed that it should be permissible for a Hindu to re-marry and yet be within the law, and in this case the pretext is understood to be of the flimsiest kind. Vernacular papers are giving great publicity to the marriage and demanding that a social offence of this nature be made impossible under the law.

Bhopal Succession: A press communique states: The Government of India have for some time past had under consideration the representations from her Highness the Begum of Bhopal in regard to her Highness's desire that her only surviving son should be recognized as her heir to the exclusion of the sons of her elder deceased sons. Those representations have necessitated prolonged and exhaustive researches into history and precedents, as the result of which her Highness has now been informed by his Excellency the Viceroy through the Secretary of State for India, who is in full concurrence with the decision, that the Government of India are prepared to recognise her only surviving son, Nawabazada Haji Muhammad Hamidullah Khan, c. s. I., c. v. o., as heir-apparent to the masnad of Bhopal. In making this communication to her Highness it has been explained that the decision is based on certain rulings of the Government of India in a number of analogous cases of succession in Mahomedan States which occurred during the last century and on the view that, in the absence of any local custom to the contrary, the rule they then followed is applicable to the succession in Bhopal in the present circumstances.

Workmen's Compensation Act: It is announced that the Workmen's Compensation Act and the rules thereunder have been translated into all the principal vernaculars of the Presidency (Marathi, Gujarati, Kanarese and Urdu) and copies are sold at the Government Book Depot, Town Hall, Bombay at annas eleven.

No LL. D. for Gandhiji: At the meeting of the Senate of the University of Madras on the 19th instant, the Vice-Chancellor (Sir Venkataratnam Naidu) ruled out of order the proposition to confer an honorary degree of LL.D. on Mahatma Gandhi. In doing so the Vice-Chancellor said that according to the Act the Syndicate had to describe the form in which such degrees could be conferred. That pre-requisite had not been satisfied in the case of this proposition.

NOTES

Rendition of the Berars: Lord Reading has written to His Exalted Highness the Nizam, in reply to his request for the rendition of the Berars which was given to the Government of India in perpetual lease by his late Highness, finally rejecting the proposal. Incidentally, the Viceroy repudiates the claim of Indian rulers to negotiate with the British Government on an equal footing. "Its supremacy," he observes, "is not based only upon treaties and engagements, but exists independently of them and are quite apart from its prerogative in matters relating to foreign powers and policies. It is the right and duty of the British Government, while scrupulously respecting all treaties and engagements with Indian States, to preserve peace and good order throughout India." The Viceroy's letter, which no doubt was submitted to and approved beforehand by the Secretary of State and His Majesty's Government, is an authoritative pronouncement on the constitutional position of Indian States. It is not strictly relevant to the question of the Berars, but Lord Reading would seem to have felt it incumbent on him to make a general declaration covering his policy in respect of the States before laying down his office.

Salaries to Privy Council Judges: His Majesty's Government have acted wisely in ignoring the wishes of the Council of State and respecting that of the Legislative Assembly in regard to the salaries of the two Privy Council Judges. It will be remembered that Government originally proposed that two members with Indian experience to be appointed in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should receive a salary of £4,000 each of which £2,000 should be from Indian revenues, but the Legislative Assembly threw out the proposal. The Council of State, however, true to its traditions, endorsed the Government proposal. Government have now decided, owing to the opposition of the Legislative Assembly, to introduce legislation in Parliament providing that a sum of £2,000 each shall be paid to the two new members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with Indian experience from British revenues. India thus will not have to pay for them. The decision of the Government is at once a recognition on their part of the representative character of the Legislative Assembly as well as of the justice of themselves defraying the charges of the Judicial Committee, as it forms more or less a part of the British administrative machinery. We hope Government will also give effect to the wishes expressed in the Legislature that the two new Indian members should be as a rule Indians in reality.

An Incident in the U. P. Council: Now and then we come across in India certain types of the Lloyd Georgean "Steel-frame". A recent instance is that of one Mr. Acton, a District Magistrate in the United Provinces. This worthy Magistrate, in the course of a judgment on a case that came up before him, damned a whole district in the following terms: "The case is distinguished even in this dishonest district by the net work of perjury, forgery and corruption which it disclosed". In the course of the budget debate in the U.P. Council, a nationalist member moved a token reduction in the grants as a protest against the unwarranted and sweeping statement made by the District Magistrate in the judgment referred to. This is not the first occasion in which this Magistrate's action has been called in question, for, on two previous occasions, he was warned by the Council for disrespect to some of its members and, apparently, he has not profited by it. How on earth can people expect to have justice from a man who holds such prejudiced views! The Finance Member, who, of course, is expected to sympathise with the lapse of a Government officer, not only made light of the matter, but sought to induce the President to rule the motion out of order, as it had reference to the proceedings before a court of law. The President, however, ruled it in order on the ground that it related only to the obiter dictum of the Magistrate. Even granting that it did not relate to the obiter dictum of the Magistrate, we do not see why his conduct should not be called in question, because the case was not sub judice. It was only after the Finance Member gave the assurance that he would look into the matter and take proper action that the motion was withdrawn. The remark of the Magistrate is the best argument in favour of a total separation of executive from judicial functions. So long as they are combined in one man, it is inevitable that general impressions of a district or class should be imported into judicial proceedings, although another Magistrate may be more careful not to give expression to his prejudice.

The Currency Commission and U. S. A.: It is now definitely ascertained that the Currency Commission is shortly to visit America also. Writing in the People, Lahore, Prof. P. A. Wadia of Bombay rightly deprecates this costly trip which the Currency Commission is to make in America at the expense of the Indian tax-payer. As the Professor remarks, if it is for the purpose of obtaining information about the possibilities of future gold production, such information can be easily obtained without incurring such unnecessary expenditure as an official visit to the United States will involve. While, on the other hand, if it is suggested that the visit is necessary in order to enable the Commission to come to an understanding with those responsible for high finance and banking in the United States on the question of securing for India such increased quantities of gold as may be required under a gold standard, the fact that India has always a favourable balance of trade from year to year, except once in a decade or so, is enough to expose the fallacy underlying this contention. Normally, therefore, India is a creditor country and not a debtor country and it is for her to say whether she will be paid in commodities or in gold or otherwise. Unlike Great Britain, India does not owe any payments to the United States and if Britain is faced with difficulties in the event of India adopting a gold standard, it is for her to make proper arrangements with America and not for the members of the Royal Commission to spend Indian money on providing financial accommodation for Great Britain.

A Reformatory Institution in Bombay: The David Sassoon Industrial and Reformatory School, Matunga, Bombay, the annual prize distribution of which took place last Saturday under the presidentship of Sir Henry Lawrence, the Acting Governor of Bombay, affords a striking example of what such institutions can do towards reclaiming many young boys who, otherwise, would become a danger to society. Seventy per cent of the boys detained here are for begging and the rest are for theft and petty offences. The institution is thus not intended for criminals. The boys generally serve their apprenticeship from three to four years and during this period they are taught various handicrafts and industries such as weaving, gardening etc., which may serve them in good stead in after life on their release. The fact that nearly forty per cent. of the boys discharged are able to get themselves employed speaks much for the training imparted there. The institution has been made not only self-supporting, but a surplus has also been realised during last year. While there is much to be said in favour of Sir Henry Lawrence's plea that boys at a reformatory should at least help towards their maintenance, the temptation of making it a profiteering concern should be resisted.

Perversion or Conversion?: Under this heading the Hindu Organ, Jaffna, Ceylon, in a recent issue, comments in scathing terms on the misuse of the ministry of healing and education for purposes of proselytisation by Christian Missionaries. In support of this charge, two passages among others are cited by our contemporary. On page 15 of the Wesleyan Mission Report for 1922, the following appears: "First and foremost we are seeking to win the boys and youths for Christ and any other object is subordinate to that." Again, on page 29 of the Report of the American Mission for 1908 occurs the following passage: "Mrs. . . who has worked as Bible woman during the larger part of the year reports several instances of blessing in the hospital. She says that there are many confessions among the patients about their sins and idol-worship and that many have promised that they would no longer worship idols after hearing the gospel and have asked her to pay for them, several professing to accept Christ as their only Saviour." Our contemporary regrets that such things should have happened even after the American delegates have definitely promised in public not to do any proselytising work in their hospitals and says that it will be content with nothing short of an assurance from them in writing to that effect. Our attitude towards Christian Missionaries is, of course, quite clear. While we have always appreciated and even admired the splendid service that is being done by them in the field of education and medical relief, we have also taken every opportunity of exhorting them to give up their proselytisation propaganda. To speak of hells and repentance to patients in hospitals, is nothing but exploitation of their weaknesses at a time when they are not in a position to judge for themselves.

Excise Advisory Committees: The Government of Bombay have recently issued new rules for the improvement of the constitution and the enlargement of the functions of the Excise Advisory Committees. Government accept the recommendation of the Excise Committee that the majority of the members of Advisory Committees should be non-officials. So far good. But certain other conditions deprive the concession of much of its value. The provision that at least one member should be selected from those classes of the community which do not regard drinking per se as a vice and that the liquor trade also should have the right of electing one of their number, is calculated to introduce a discordant factor into the composition of the Committees. We may next hear of the Vigilance Committee having on it representatives of the trade which it has to combat. Add to this the scant regard which Government pays to the advice tendered by the Advisory Committee and its assertion that it must remain what it is in name, an Advisory Committee, the decision on all matters, of course, resting with the Collector subject to the orders of the Commissioner and Government, and the limited sphere in which it has to function becomes clear.

A Poor House in Baroda: Shortly before H. H. the Maharaja of Baroda left for England, His Highness did an act of public beneficence by opening a Poor House in the city of Baroda. The Poor House now opened at Baroda is meant only for the City and on its success depends an extension of it to other places in the State. The immediate object is to support only those extreme cases of destitution among the aged and the infirm who have no relatives or friends to look after them and who cannot earn their living. The Maharaja has thus taken care to provide against indiscriminate charity which often defeats itself by rearing a set of idlers feeding at the expense of the State. This beneficent act of the Maharaja would have been more appreciated by his subjects, but for the disappointed response they have met with in their demand for constitutional reforms and the increased municipal taxes and school fees which have aroused a storm of opposition in the State.

Village Welfare: It is a hopeful sign of the times that the problem of village welfare is attracting increasing attention. We have received an annual from the Tivimnenses Union entitled "Village Welfare" devoted to the economic and social welfare of the villages. Tivim is a village in Goa and, for the last fifteen years, the Tivimnenses Union, the first of its kind in Goa, has been striving in no small measure to foster the communal sentiment among the villagers and ameliorate their condition by teaching them the benefits of co-operation, the latest improvements in agriculture, and such other methods as are calculated to promote their economic and social well-being. The annual contains some interesting articles on agriculture and other kindred topics and we wish the Union every success in its venture.

THE CHANGE OF VICEROYS.

Lord Reading hands over charge of the Viceroyalty to Lord Irwin to-day. The political situation to-day is quite calm whereas, when Lord Reading arrived in the country, it was highly charged with disturbance. The Non-Co-operation movement was moving rapidly towards its zenith. Lord Reading for several months after assuming charge of his high office, tried to come to an understanding with Mahatma Gandhi, but the latter was in an uncompromising mood. The prosecution of the Ali brothers made conciliation impossible. The Prince of Wales was due to visit the country in a few months and the Viceroy strained every nerve to reach at least a temporary settlement in order to allow His Royal Highness' visit to pass off quietly. He offered a Round Table Conference to discuss the next step in political advance and, although the late Mr. C. R. Das, who was undergoing imprisonment for breach of the notification declaring the Congress volunteers to be an unlawful body, counselled acceptance of the offer, Mr. Gandhi refused and a great opportunity was lost. This seems to have convinced Lord Reading that the method of conciliation was not likely to succeed and, soon after the Prince left these shores, the Mahatma himself was prosecuted and sent to jail.

Lord Reading's subsequent career in India was devoid of incidents. He did not think himself involved in the issue which led to the resignation of Mr. Montagu from the India Office. He regularly used his emergency power of certification to reinstate grants which were rejected by the Assembly. He issued the Bengal Ordinance under which a number of Bengalee politicians and others were arrested and are being kept in confinement without any judicial proceedings. In fact, Lord Reading pursued a course which estranged from Government even the most moderate Liberals, without conciliating the Swarajists who entered the second reformed Legislative Councils in considerable strength. The rout at the General Election of the Liberals who, in spite of the opposition of the Non-Co-operators, undertook to work the Reforms, was mainly due to the policy of Government in turning a deaf ear to Liberal suggestions and thus utterly discrediting them in the public eye. As an administrator, Lord Reading must be pronounced a failure. The failure of the Non-Co-operation movement is in no wise due to his policy but to the inherent weakness of the movement. Assisted by good monsoons and by adopting an exchange policy which benefited the Central Government at the expense of Provincial Governments and of the commerce and industry of the country, his Finance Minister has been able to show large surpluses in place of the deficits of previous years. In only two questions, and that at the fag-end of his term, has Lord Reading shown himself alive to the need of meeting public opinion. One is the abolition of the Excise duty and the other, the position of Indians in South Africa. With considerable hesitation he found himself almost within a few weeks of the close of his Viceroyalty able to identify himself with the Indian people on these two questions.

His successor, Lord Irwin, comes with a hereditary claim on the respect of the Indian people. His grandfather, the famous Sir Charles Wood, gave India what has been termed her educational charter. The educated classes of India owe a debt of gratitude to him which cannot be better repaid than by a helpful attitude towards his grandson who has been called to the Viceroyalty. Lord Irwin has not occupied prominent positions in the Public Service, nor has he become famous as a traveller or writer as some of his predecessors had when they were appointed to the Indian Viceroyalty. But all reports agree in describing him as a man of great depth of character and convictions, and his speeches since his nomination to the office, few and short as they have been, have been characterised by sincerity, modesty and a spirit of genuine goodwill to the people of India. He concluded his reply to the address presented to him by the Bombay Municipal Corporation at the Gateway of India, with the remark that whatever the record of the next five years, one thing he could unreservedly declare, that they had welcomed that day an earnest and sincere well-wisher of India. Lord Irwin is known to be a devout member of his Church, which in this country will be deemed a special qualification for dealing with great affairs of State. We wish Lord Irwin a very prosperous career at the head of the Indian administration.

The Royal Agricultural Commission: The names of the members of the Royal Commission on Indian Agriculture have been published. They are: Chairman: The Marquis of Linlithgow; Members: Mr. Hubert Calvert, I.C.S., Registrar of Co-operative Societies, the Punjab; Professor Nogendranath Gangulee, Professor of Agriculture and Rural Economy, Calcutta University; Dr. Lodi Karim Hyder, M.L.A., Professor of Economics, Aligarh University; Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat, Member of the Bombay Agricultural Board; His Excellency Sir Henry Staveley Lawrence, Acting Governor of Bombay; Sir James Mackenna, I.C.S, late Development Commissioner, Burma; Sir Thomas Middleton, Commissioner under the Development and Road Improvement Funding Act; Raja Sir Krishna Chandra Gajapati Narayan Deo Garu, Raja of Parlakimedi, Zamindar, Madras Presidency; and Rai Bahadur Sir Ganga Ram, late of the P. W. D.

A Useful Publication: The Social Service League has brought out recently the third volume in the series of the Directories of Social Work. It is entitled "Directories of Social Work in the City and Island of Bombay" and, as its name implies, contains an enumeration of all the existing civil and social institutions in Bombay with available information on each head. The book is intended as a hand-book to those engaged in social work and as a reference book to those interested in the philanthropic institutions of Bombay. The need for a book of this kind has long been felt. In spite of a few inaccuracies and omissions of which its editor says in the Preface that he is only too conscious, the compilation, got up in the approved directory style, is a good one and should find a place in all libraries and offices.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.*

Prof. T. N. Carver of Harvard University has, in a book entitled The Present Economic Revolution in the United States, treated of the problems of modern economic life and the way in which they are solved in America. Prof. Carver needs no introduction to students of political economy as he has already written many books on the various sections of it. This book which he has now published is one in which he has set forward his point of view in a clear and lucid manner. Though we may not all of us subscribe to the opinions he has expressed in his book, yet there can be no doubt that Dr. Carver has treated his subject in an interesting and thorough style.

Contrasting the labour movement in America with the one in Europe, Prof. Carver says that while labour organisations in Europe are aiming at political control and are not successful in increasing the economic prosperity of any labourer, in America, the working classes are recognising the power of capital and using it for their own improvement; and to some extent labourers are becoming their own capitalists. In the United States organised labour has been divided into three periods. The first was the period during which the labouring classes awakened to the realisation of the need for collective action on questions of wages and working conditions. Next was the period of actual warfare when they had to fight for their interests. And last is the period of construction and co-operation on which they are now launched and which is the real test of ability. Prof. Carver regards the wide diffusion of prosperity under liberty as America's greatest contribution to civilization, and one of which America can be justly proud. He quotes Mr. William Feather's words: "This, I believe, to be the great contribution of America: a universal education through public schools, universal access to all literature through public libraries, universal opportunity for communication through cheap postal rates, and, finally, universal enjoyment of comforts and conveniences through a factory system which supplies goods at a price so low that many millions to-day live in comparative luxury." He considers that the American ideal—that of equality under liberty—is the noblest one in the world and strongly denies the charge that the American ideals are usually materialistic.

Writing of labour leaders, Dr. Carver makes a distinction between those who stir up the labourers, by talking to them of their rights and grievances against the capitalists, and others who remind the workers of their duty to themselves, to the State and to society. While both types of leaders create discontent, the discontent stirred up by the former is based on self-contented egotism while that aroused by the latter is based on self-criticism and modesty. In the first case the labourer is discontented with society and things as they are, and in the second he is discontented with himself, his industry, his thrift, his ability, and his knowledge. Class distinctions, so often referred to by labour leaders, are due chiefly to lack of common interests, and not to the mere fact that one person is an employer and the other an employee. "A common interest in a common work," says Dr. Carver, "unites and does not divide people."

Dr. Carver has taken throughout the book an essentially American view of the situation and he admits it when in the end he says with De Tocqueville: "I trust I have written this work without prejudice; but I do not claim to have written dispassionately." He believes that the Immigration Laws are essential to the prosperity of the country and that the foreign peoples in America were responsible to a large extent for the widening of the gap between employers and employees. Moreover, he is in favour of the laws being extended even in Mexico which is now doing nothing to aid its own labourers and where there is a large proportion of immigrant wage-workers.

Prof. Carver prophesies a brilliant future for America and believes that America will now show the world the only great demonstration of the working of the twin ideals of Equality and Liberty.

In spite of the fact that a few of the opinions expressed in it are unconvincing, the book as a whole makes interesting reading and will be of great use to all students of political economy and especially to those who are interested in the problems of modern industrial life.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF CITIZENS.

(Contributed.)

The Calcutta and Madras Universities had the honour of inviting our distinguished countryman, the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastry, to deliver the Kamala lectures this year. Mr. Sastry took "The Rights and Duties of the Indian Citizen" as the subject of his lectures. Of Mr. Sastry's ability to speak on this subject, there can be no two opinions, and the lectures themselves bear the impress of his prodigious knowledge, experience and scholarship. And what is more, Mr. Sastry, by his clear presentation of the case, has made the average reader understand abstract conceptions and theories which, as a rule, are unintelligible to him. In the first three lectures, Mr. Sastry examined the rights of Indian citizens and compared them with those possessed by citizens in civilized countries. The one thing that emerges from his survey is the all-embracing power of the Indian Executive. As Mr. Sastry remarked, the Executive in this country are pampered with too many powers. Not only have they too many arbitrary powers, but they also exercise them without a due sense of responsibility and bring them into play upon comparatively light occasions. While, in England, owing to the constant vigilance of the courts and also the power of resistance of the individual citizen, the Executive are kept well in check, here the weakness of public opinion and the comparatively restricted sphere in which even the courts function render the Executive practically free of control. Take first the liberty of person. The law of sedition in India is said to be practically the same as in England. But there is an important difference. While in England the law of sedition is brought into operation with the greatest caution and the Executive bear a lot of provocation before they will really use it, in India, on the other hand, there is almost nothing by way of comparatively free criticism which the Executive do not resent and, if possible, do not also bring up before the courts. The frequent tampering by Government of people's communications without their knowledge is only a matter of common knowledge. Then, again, the judiciary in India has not maintained the same high level of vigilance in protecting the individual citizen, as the recent stiffening of the law in regard to contempt of courts amply bears out. On the contrary, as Mr. Sastry rightly said, the judiciary is more anxious to sympathise with the Executive than with the oppressed citizen. There are then the various ordinances of the Viceroy which vest an extraordinary prerogative in him and place undue and arbitrary restrictions upon the liberties of citizens. The Regulation III of 1818 and the Bengal Ordinance are only a few instances in point. In regard to freedom of movement which every constitution guarantees to its citizens, in India, as if the miserable lot of Indians in the colonies and other parts of the world were not enough, the Executive have given their consent to the iniquitous Burma Expulsion Act which creates a South Africa within India itself. Freedom of expression of opinion which is counted as one of the cherished and inviolable rights of a citizen was for long denied to the Indian citizen and it was only after the repeal of the Press Act that the law in regard to this matter in this country was brought into line with that of the civilized countries. Even now, certain provisions incorporated in the Criminal Procedure Code giving powers to Government to forfeit seditious books and newspapers and to search press offices have often been misused, though Mr. Sastry apparently puts much faith in the appeal to the Special Bench of the High Courts provided in such cases. Mr. Sastry dismissed the notorious Princes' Protection Act with the curt remark that there is "nothing much in it," but he forgets that it is this sort of suppression of legitimate criticism that fosters in the Indian Princes the false notion that they are above law of which Mr. Sastry complained in a subsequent portion of his lecture. As regards the rights of public meeting and association, it is unnecessary for us to refer to the part played by Sec. 144 Cr. P. C. and the Criminal Law Amendment Act in recent Indian political history. The wonder is that the Executive in India, not content with the extraordinary powers they already possess, ask for more and more of them from the Legislature. It is one of the fundamental axioms of English Law that it is the function of law to punish and not to prevent the commission of crime, but the Executive in India do not even scruple to convert a preventive into a punitive action as when they recently restored the discretion to the courts for awarding rigorous imprisonment for those failing to furnish security under Sec. 109 Cr. P. C. which has attained no small notoriety by its abuse in regard to the Nagpur Satyagrahis. No wonder that Mr. Sastry, in the face of this persistent and deliberate trampling of the rights of the citizens by the Executive, has become an ardent advocate of a Declaration of Rights for India on the model of Germany, an idea which he was the first to taboo some years ago.

realpatidar.com

Mr. Sastry's last lecture on the duties of citizens is the most valuable, as it is full of lessons for us. Apart from certain legal duties which the law imposes upon every citizen, there are certain moral duties which every right-minded citizen is expected to discharge. Of these the first place should be given to the exercise of franchise. The franchise is coming to be looked upon more and more as a duty rather than as a right pertaining to the citizen. It is the only medium through which governments can guage public opinion and he who neglects to understand or exercise his vote not only declares himself unfit to be a member of a democratic government, but causes detriment to our public institutions also. The importance which modern governments attach to the franchise may be judged from the fact that some Governments like Australia even go to the length of prescribing a penalty for those who fail to exercise their franchise in the absence of sufficient excuse. A very onerous duty lies, therefore, on our leaders to educate the masses to the value and influence of the vote which is bound to grow in importance with every fresh transference of power to popular control. Another point which Mr. Sastry emphasised and which we do not tire of repeating is the moral duty of every citizen to think in terms of the nation at large and not in terms of a particular community or section, an advice that is more than needed at the present moment when the relations between the various communities are far from being cordial. Mr. Sastry rightly said that the true meaning of democracy is that the citizen stands related to the whole and not to any section and that the citizen who says "my loyalty is not to the collectivity but only to a fraction thereof" is not a citizen of the type that will benefit the State. On the contrary, he is a force for disruption, for discord and for disharmony. Mr. Sastry did not wish that no one should owe allegiance to the section or community to which he belongs, but he only warned that the spirit embodied in the communal G. O. should not be allowed to flow over until it consumes the entire body of our rights and duties. So ruthless is the communal spirit in its operation that it has infected even such a veteran publicist as Sir Abdur Rahim whose communal activities in recent months are only well-known. "Whatever you divide, do not divide education", said Mr. Sastry referring to the recent attempt of Sir Abdur Rahim to deprive the Calcutta University of Muslim Education on the score that it did not adopt Urdu as the vernacular for Muslims. We can only hope that Mr. Sastry's earnest pleading will not be lost upon Sir Abdur Rahim and others of his way of thinking.

INDIAN SOCIAL LIFE AND MODERN URDU POETRY.

(By Mr. Mohan Singh, M.A.)

II

Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
And not on paper leaves nor leaves of stone.
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it,
Texts of despair or hope, of joy or moan,
While swings the sea, while mists the mountain shroud,
While thunder's surges burst on cliffs of cloud,
Still at the prophet's feet the nations sit. (Biblio-latres.)
And I honour the man who is willing to sink
Half his present repute for the freedom to think,
And, when he has thought, be his cause strong or weak,
Will risk th' other half for the freedom to speak,
Caring not for what vengeance the mob has in store,
Let that mob be the upper ten thousand or lower.
(A Fable for Critics.)

If the President of the last Bombay Provincial Social Reform Conference were to commission me, I would make him the very finest anthologies of verse—appealing, moving, enthralling from Urdu Poetry 1900-1925) on the following subjects:

(1) The Plight of the Widow. (2) The Evils of Drink. (3) The Miseries of the Orphan. (4) The Haplessness of the Indian Labourer. (5) The Finale of an Orgy. (6) The Curse of Hindu-Muslim Disunity. (7) The Blessedness of the Ganges. (8) The Magic of Patriotism. (9) The Glory of Action. (10) Cow Protection. (11) Female Education.

That surely does not exhaust the list of subjects treated poetically with such success by the Urdu Poets of this period. In fact three-fourths of the verse of this era is Social Poetry as contrasted with the Court Poetry of the previous seven ages. It is, as a whole, of a high order. There is genuine poetic sentiment. There is also genuine poetic treatment and execution.

You feel that the subject did really touch the heart of the poet, made it glow and scintillate piercing wails. There is no artificiality writ large on each line: there is no forced elevation of subject though there is an attempt at achieving the sublime, the grand in the matter of diction.

All this holds good of the major poets only. The palm in this sphere of social poetry as in purely imaginative poetry, is carried away by the late Munshi Durga Sahai Sarur Jahanabadi. Do you know Urdu? Haven't you read Sarur's "The Widow's Plaint?" What? No. Oh, then, you have deprived yourself of the sight of a most thrilling picture. You have deprived yourself of most wonderful music. And his "The End of a Revel"! The Marghub Publishing Agency of Lahore has made its pile out of the profits of these two booklets.

I am sure it will be news to hundreds of the readers that Sir Mohd. Iqbal owes a good 25 per cent of his poetic fame to his poems on the miseries of the Muslim Orphan, on the Indian National and the Muslim Anthem, on Islam's Plaint to God and His reply,—all couched in high-browed language having the standardised diction and metre. A majority of his poems have their genesis in the claims of the "Society for the Support of Islam" on his poetic powers. He is your true social poet. The Muslim society found in him, ever since the early nineties of the last century, the first (mark you!) and the foremost (as it has turned out) protagonist, highly educated, cultured, versatile, ready to use his poetic fire for the lighting of the hearts of his co-religionists in the interest of Islam revived and glorified.

Of course, the social and historical verse of Hali and Shibli has a great deal of pioneering credit reserved for itself. Azad and Suraj Narain Mehr Delhvi merit equal credit with the first pair. The latter's Durbar of Lakshmi read in 1887 A. D., at the Kaisth Sabha, Lahore, and the congratulatory poem read in Dec. 1896 A. D. at the annual gathering of the Kaisth Self Improvement Society, Delhi, are among the finest things produced in those early days. By-the-way the latter is perhaps the first poem in Urdu literature that contains the English words Society, Moral, Courage, and Member.

What does it show? That Indian Society being for the past 25 or 30 years deeply stirred over general questions of social reform, as a result, among others particularly of English Education and of contact with Western ideals, has created a very inspiring branch of literature (of a sufficiently long interest), and has, through its accredited mouthpieces, the poets, declared itself for organised advance. How deep and wide is the influence of topical verse, you all know. Shall I remind you of the slavery-verse of Longfellow and Lowell, of the labour-verse of Hood, of the society-verse of Tennyson and Kipling? Urdu poetry like its mother, Persian poetry, is essentially Music: every piece of poetry can be sung exactly as it stands. No sooner the court poet composes, than the court dancer memorises it and sings it in the august assembly. It has its most annoying and cramping limitations. But for those early days and even to-day for the average citizen, it is enough. Its fire and fury is enough to sweep him off his legs.

That brings me to Non-co-operation-verse. Remember it is not ephemeral, seasonal-verse I am discussing. Take the poems of Khaliq of Delhi. I pick up his booklet jazbat-i-khaliq published in the hey-day of the movement. Here are some of the titles: "Wear khadder and ply the spinning-wheel;" "Cow protection," "The Imprisonment of the Ali Brothers," "In memory of the Martyrs," "The Punjab Martyrs," "The story of the Nation," "Welcome to Pussy-Foot Johnson," "A Prayer to the Tenth Guru of the Sikhs," "The Exiled Indians." Now every one of them is such as the stump-orator may most profitably quote or as the balanced contemplative politician may shed profuse tears over in his seclusion. They please you by a fine excess of sentiment; they chasten you by an appeal to your imagination: they awaken the social servant in you: they put you at peace with your neighbour, Muslim or Christian. What more

do you want? I believe they have a fair portion of Moore's and Yeats' patriotism in them.

In the same group as Khaliq go Lalchand Falak, Tilok Chand Mahrum, Mela Ram Wafa Gauri Shankar Lal Akhtar and Maharaj Bahadur Barq. How I wish I had Wafa's solitary poem on "The Indian Labourer" and "Why the villager did not report a theft" to translate for your benefit.

A greater indirect condemnation of corruption among certain subordinate officers of the Police Force and of the inhumanity which the Indian labourer so stoically tolerates, was never read by me. Mr. Akhtar who is now managing and editing Man Sarovar, a monthly magazine from Lahore, stands alone as the woman's poet. He has again and again pleaded the cause of the Pardah-condemned woman, now humorously, now seriously, now philosophically, now historically. Mr. Mahrum's share lies in his having drawn two very pathetic pictures of the tombs of Nur Jehan and Jehangir. I can never forget his four lines on the former:

Where even during the day reigns darkness supreme,
Alas! that niche they name the Resting place of the Light of the World:
Such is not even the hermitage of a Nun;
And even if it be such, it shall not thus stand alone midst a desert.

The demand has changed. Outside the Nautch parties and occasional youthful congregations the old love-lyric is not wanted. Love there is. The world and the human heart were a veritable hell without it. But it is not the love of the curly-haired wine-server, of his blandishments and banquets of beauty: no, it is the love of the country, of its rivers and monuments, of its leaders and exiles, of its glorious past and promising future, of its Gandhis and Shaukat Alis. The Poet's supply has therefore changed in its nature. How copiously, how wonderfully!

BRAHMIN WIDOWS IN THE KARNATAK.

(By Mr. V. B. Mokashi.)

Some decades ago, a reputed scholar of the Karnatak announced a prize for a writing which should prove that tonsure of widows was based on unquestionable authority. It seems none competed for it, and the prize, I think, still remains unawarded. That is but natural, since sound authority for such a strange sacramental toilette cannot be found. So far as I know, none o the authoritative Smritis mention it; there is not a word about it either in Manu or in Yajnavalkya. Mitakshara indeed mentions two alternatives as being open to widows, Brahmacharya or Anvarohana. Anvarohana, widows burning themselves along with the dead bodies of their husbands, has fortunately for civilized society become obsolete. Such savage customs cannot be endured in the 20th century; but Brahmacharya as applied to widows in a perverted form still persists. It is to be doubted whether this Brahmacharya includes or implies the ruthless shaving of widows' heads; even if it does, it is a custom which ought to have died out long ago. It is pitiable to see this relic of barbarism yet prevailing among the orthodox Deshasthas and some other sects, while it is rapidly disappearing in Maharashtra. The times indeed have changed when chastity on the part of widows was sought to be enforced by destroying their beauty. A virtue that requires to be constantly guarded is not worth the sentinel, nor does life become meaningless on the death of husbands. An otherworldliness is sedulously fostered in the mind of the young widow who by no means takes to it as easily as the priest and the parents pretend to do. Does the barber's razor plying on the head cut off the root of evil desires in the human heart? Is a shaven head proof against temptation, as is fondly believed? The signs of sex still remain even in a shaved widow, and such beauty as still lingers in her can at all times be a sufficient stimulus to the lustful rake. What purpose, then, is the tonsure to serve?

Parents dare not face the communal obloquy, and their selfishness falls so sharply on the devoted heads of their widowed daughters! Husbands fortunately or unfortunately do not live to see the heads they adored foaming with soap under the barber's dirty hands; and the communal custom is inexorable in its demand for the widow's hair. How then are widows to escape this mutilation? They must refuse to bow to the barber and must bear the responsibility of uncut hair on their own heads, or devise some means to look beautiful even with eye-offending bare heads.

STEPPING STONES TO CONTINENCE.

(By Mrs. K. Halliday).

Those who sweepingly condemn the present trend of teaching the public means to regulate births, do not realise that it is the present time which demands some immediate step to teach the masses some kind of control and prevision. To advance the plea that this knowledge will lead to greater immorality is very weak. If people's control depends on lack of opportunity and fear of consequences, then it is of no value in character-building.

Those who have read Prof. McDougall's "Ethics and some Modern Problems" must realise that he paints no exaggerated picture of the ruin to which the world is hastening. His suggestions in regard to meeting these difficulties can only be realised by sets of leaders in every country, who are free from bribery, corruption, favouritism and prejudice, and past the stage of seeking power for selfish ends. Meanwhile, we should help the women, whose lot is continual and enforced motherhood and whose offsprings have no chance. One opines that they often attempt secretly to destroy the oncoming life. As life is so persistent this often does not avail. One believes that this often accounts for the terribly bad aspects to the Moon from many planets. Either this attempt to destroy the foetus, or the total disharmony between the prospective parents, may account for this handicap from the heavens at birth.

Undoubtedly these preventives may have a very deleterious effect on those who avail themselves of

this means. At least it brings temporary relief to the lot of many women at the mercy of a man who has no control or is even a normally continent man. Also it guards from, may be, her own lack of self-control. By regulating the number of children, they will have a better start in life. Moreover the very act of taking some precaution is in some measure a stepping-stone to volitional control. Wars at an end and unlimited fecundity of the masses, will lead the present civilization to such an impasse that only devastation by earth-quake and flood can be hoped for as a solution.

How is that man far-outnumbers woman in India? Surely it is the low status which woman bears in these later times. Masses of them are toiling from very early morn to late at night to meet the needs of the "Joint Family system" and the large family of their own little ones, frail and ailing, owing to the early marriages enforced on these tender little ones and the consequent violation of the body of the children, before they have had the pleasures, joys and advantages, which should be the heritage of every child, whether of high or low birth.

One great aid to self-control will be the compulsory education of the Indian child, open air schools, shaded by trees, simple and non-tedious studies, the three R's combined with instruction in land cultivation, the crafts (adapted to the individual) and above all definite teaching on set matters, and aids towards good citizenship.

LORD OXFORD ON GLADSTONE.

One of Lord Oxford's distinctions is that he is the only man now living and in active political life who sat in the same Cabinet with Mr. Gladstone. Lord Oxford reminded his audience of this "melancholy privilege" when he took the chair at King's College (London) for Mr. Ramsay Muir, who gave a lecture on the political ideas of Gladstone in mail week.

Lord Oxford, says the London correspondent of "The Manchester Guardian," did not gratify his audience by giving any personal reminiscences of Gladstone. Instead he packed an appreciation of Gladstone the statesman into a weighty summary. He agreed with Mr. Ramsay Muir in saying that Gladstone was in no sense a doctrinaire. It was true in a sense that he was from first to last an empiric but an empiric not upon hastily adopted conclusions, still less upon grounds of expediency of a calculation of the odds in the sport of politics. His was an empiricism of the best kind. It was not a series of sudden and violent conversions, it was a pilgrimage by which a great intellect and a still greater character and personality advanced stage by stage, always open to the teachings, of experience and to the ever-shifting changes of the social and political world.

The Great Chancellor.

Lord Oxford recalled that he sat in the same Cabinet with Gladstone in the closing years of his life, when his mind, his energies and enthusiasms were concentrated on, if not absorbed by, one political aim—the emancipation of Ireland. Gladstone did not live to see the attainment of that great purpose in even fuller measure than he had ever contemplated or imagined. Lord Oxford singled out as the dominant service of Gladstone to the public life of his country his service as the most faithful and efficient steward of our national resources who ever presided over the Exchequer. He was a strong believer in the doctrine that wealth is best left to fructify in the pockets of the people—he carried to its final goal the great work of abolishing oppressive duties upon commodities begun by Peel.

If there was any criticism to be made upon the long series of financial reforms of which he was the author, it was that he was too much absorbed in the remission of taxation to the exclusion of making larger and more far-seeing provision for the redemption of our capital liabilities, but his financial administration of the resources of this country remained without parallel or example.

Partnership of Nations.

The next thing which history would always remember him for was that he was—and in this he was consistent throughout the whole of his political life—a strenuous supporter of equality as between the great and the small nations of Europe and of the world. As supplement to that, he was the first to lay down with the authority of a great statesman the principle upon which the League of Nations and all the hopes and ideals which the League carried with it was really resting. Lord Oxford quoted the phrase of Gladstone's about "the enthronement of the idea of Public right," and said it was for that we and our allies entered upon, prosecuted and finished the most critical struggle in the history of Europe. The best tribute we could pay his memory was to put into the forefront of national and international affairs the ideal of the dominance of right over force and the combination of nations, not in groups and alliances to promote separate or sectional interests, but in a great partnership in which all were upon an equal footing to carry through common purposes for the benefit of the world.

Mr. Ramsay Muir, in the course of an interesting analysis of Gladstone's mind, said that he was in no mean sense of the word an opportunist—he was the pupil though never the creator of events. He had congenital unwillingness to commit himself to definite opinions till he was faced by a definite issue. He spoke of his "slow-maturing Liberalism," and described the stages by which Gladstone's mind developed through the contact with affairs. As Gladstone was not a doctrinaire, Mr. Muir remarked incidentally Gladstone never identified himself with the Manchester School. Late in life he indignantly repudiated the idea that the Liberal Party under his leadership had ever accepted the purely individualistic doctrine of laissez faire.

THE BOMBAY VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

The annual general meeting of the Bombay Vigilance Association was held at the Central Y M C.A. on Tuesday the 23rd March, the Hon. Chunilal V. Mehta presiding. In opening the proceedings, the President announced Government's renewal of the grant of Rs. 5,000 to the Association, and the appointment of Mr. Husseinbhoy Rahimtoola of the Association to a Committee which was to go through the new Bill for amending the Prostitution Act, which was before the Government.

The annual report which was read by Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas, one of the Secretaries, stated that much spade-work was done by the Association during the third year of its existence. The Committee regretted that Government had not acceded to their request to use the Foreigners' Act to stop the importation of foreign prostitutes, and to repatriate as far as possible those already in Bombay. The attention of the Committee was drawn to certain advertisements in local newspapers. Some of these appeared to be quite harmless, but it had been pointed out to the Committee that such advertisements were sometimes put in to entice young girls for an immoral life. The Committee had, therefore, decided to put the following advertisement in those papers:— "Ladies who feel any doubt as to the genuineness of offers for employment such as canvassers, companions, nurses, masseuses, etc, are advised to apply to the undersigned. On their doing so the lady workers of the Association will try to procure the necessary information for them free of charge and in strict confidence. The object is to counteract the despicable efforts of many persons to secure girls for immoral purposes. Bombay Vigilance Association, The Retreat, Bellasis Road, Byculla, Bombay."

The financial statement of the Association showed a balance of Rs. 9,173-9-0. The expenses during the coming year, however, would be considerably increased as the scope of their work was rapidly growing wider.

The annual report and audited accounts being duly adopted, Miss Davis said that she would appeal to the meeting to pass a resolution deploring the light sentences on the culprits who were recently convicted at the Mazagaon Court for selling or enticing minor girls for immoral purposes. It was surprising, she declared, that such light punishments should be accorded for so appalling a crime. It would not help the cause of the Vigilance Association. She also desired that a copy of the resolution be sent to the proper authorities.

The Chairman speaking on the point thought that Miss Davis would be satisfied if the Secretaries undertook to do the needful.

The following Committee was then elected :—

President :—The Hon. Sir Chunilal Mehta.

Vice-Presidents :—His Grace The Archbishop of Bombay, Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Dr. R. P. Masani.

Hon. Secretaries :—Messrs. Kanji Dwarkadas and W. E. D. Ward.

Hon. Treasurer :—S. E. Warden.

Committee :—Rao Bahadur B. N. Athavle, Mrs. Palmer, Miss Dickinson, Miss Davis, Messrs. N. M. Joshi, H. Rahimtoola, K. Natarajan, S. P. Kabodi, Mr. J. Aulia and Prof. McLean.

A vote of thanks to the Chair terminated the proceedings.

ON CLEANING UP.

Mrs. Maud Hume Stanford, Hon. Pres. Magistrate and Hon. Commissioner for the Madras Children's Act to the Women's Indian Association, delivered a very interesting lecture at the Purasawalkam Free Reading Room on Friday last (26th March) on the subject "Cleaning Up."

In her own forcible way Mrs. Stanford told the audience of the things that wanted to be "cleaned up" here in Madras, and she asked those present to do what they could in doing so. In the personal—home, civic and national life, "cleaning up" is very much needed.

The lecturer described how shocked she was when she realized the conditions of many of the children in Madras—the social conditions of so many of the women and children. "You have one of the best of civilizations—why don't you put it into practice ?"—she asked. "Here is one fact. 3 million women die here in India in each generation as a result of too early marriage. Is it a wonder that so many children are weak and undeveloped, when many of them are born of mothers below 14 years of age ?"

The ideal of every true Indian ought to be : Service. But is that the ideal at present ? Take the civic life. You cannot really be pleased with the Municipal life as it is. "I will tell you one thing. Find out the best man, the man who will clean up and then elect him."

Mrs. Stanford then spoke of the work that is being done to clean up especially among the children. In one "baby wash" where babies can be washed gratis 15,000 children had come there for that purpose last year. A house of detention had been started at Poonamallee Road last month. But there is very, very much to be done. "You know perfectly well or ought to know—that children are being sold here in Madras for Rs 5 or 10 for begging or other purposes. Most probably a gang is at work for this purpose and we hope to get hold of them In the Victoria Gosha Hospital 6 or 7 children were brought in at the age of 8—10 years who had been violated and one of the results is that they are suffering from syphilis."

The Madras Vigilance Association, which has the strong support of the Government, is trying to suppress the brothels. "They shall not be here." But before any real work can be done we must have homes where we can place the unfortunate young girls. "We want your help." "Here in Purasawalkam we must have a working boys' hostel and a children's wash house. We shall have to rent a room, where we shall keep an Ayah to wash the children in the mornings from 6-30 to 9-30. In the evenings the bigger children may come and wash their clothes. We shall supply them with soap and gingely oil."

"What about the Temples ? Don't they want cleaning up" ? "You have inspectors for the protection of animals ; but you have none for the protection of the children." The task before us is great, but not impossible. In America and Australia the conditions were no better but they are tackling the problem and a great deal of "cleaning up" is taking place. "You have got hearts and brains—I at times think you have got too much brains and don't work enough. You must realize that it is your duty to come and help in "cleaning up." —The Swarajya, Madras.

THE BOMBAY SAKYAMUNI VIHAR FUND.

The following appeal has been sent to us by the organisers of the above Fund for publication :—

For about one thousand years, viz., from the reign of the Emperor Asoka to that of Shri Hashra a large portion of the Indian people professed Buddhism. All classes from the prince to the peasant paid their homage to Bhagwan Buddha and the whole country was dotted over with the Buddhist Viharas, stupas and caves. His message was carried beyond the borders of India to the eastern countries by the holy monks, and, as a result, our ancient culture in general came to be venerated in

realpatidar.com

realpatidar.com

Tibet, China, Japan, Siam, Burma, and Ceylon. In the Pauranic age when Buddhism declined from the land of its birth, Bhagwan Buddha came to be included in the Hindu Pantheon as the ninth Avatar of Vishnu and even to this day, Brahmins, in their sankalpa, repeat His name showing that they are living in the age of which Buddha is the ruling Avatara. But it is a matter for reproach that only a few people among us should be credited with some knowledge about Buddha and His sublime teachings. It is highly desirable that the Sakyamuni's life, teachings and ideals should be spread broadcast among the people, for, they will serve not only to facilitate understanding of the ancient history and art of India, but also to guide our life and activities in fruitful channels. That is the spirit of Buddha's all-comprehensive wisdom and unbounded compassion. Therefore, we propose to erect a Vihar in this City of Bombay to be known as the Sakyamuni Vihar It is estimated that it will cost about fifty to sixty thousand rupees. The Vihar will be opened to all people irrespective of caste and creed. And we appeal to the public to support the project liberally so that the Vihar may be constructed at an early date. The Vihar will be furnished with a well-equipped library of books relating to the ancient culture and civilization of India. It will also have a large central hall for holding lectures and discussion on religious and philosophical subjects. We trust that the generous public will respond liberally to our appeal.

THE PUNJAB BRAHMA SAMAJ.

The Managing Committee of the Punjab Brahma Samaj has issued the following appeal:

We beg to state that in pursuance of a resolution passed at a public meeting held on the 12th Jan., 1926, under the chairmanship of Lala Harkishen Lal, Bar-at-Law, the Managing Committee of the Punjab Brahma Samaj have decided to commemorate the services of the late Bhai Kashi Ram by instituting a lectureship to be called Kashi Ram Memorial Lectures, and those of the late Babu Abinash Chandra Majumdar by making the Charitable Homeopathic Dispensary attached to the Brahma Samaj permanent and by changing its name into Abinash Chandra Majumdar Charitable Dispensary. The Kashi Ram Memorial Lectureship would involve an annual expenditure of not less than Rs. 300. This year the Committee invited Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal to deliver the first series of the lectures, which drew large audiences. The total expenditure on this account amounted to a little over Rs. 400. To have an annual income of this amount we require the capital sum of at least Rs. 7,000. To give a permanent shape to the Dispensary a sum of Rs. 500 would be necessary annually which would involve an investment of at least Rs. 10,000.

Both Bhai Kashi Ram and Babu Abinash Chandra Majumdar were held in universal esteem and they rendered very useful services to the public. We therefore expect that the money necessary for perpetuating their memories will be gladly contributed by their friends and admirers. You are one of those upon whose support we count for giving a shape to these memorials. We therefore earnestly appeal to you to subscribe generously to the Memorial Funds started by the Punjab Brahma Samaj.

All remittances will be thankfully accepted by the Secretary to the Samaj.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Sanatana Dharma Conference: The All-India Sanatana Dharma Conference which was recently held at Delhi unanimously adopted a resolution that in view of the unsatisfactory state of the management of certain "maths", temples and religious places, it was imperative to form a body which, working from a headquarter and under the control of the Working Committee of the All-India Hindu Sabha, would undertake the reform and management of religious places standing in need of such reform and take all necessary steps to achieve the end. It also resolved to elect a Committee consisting of Lala Motichand, R. B. Lala Ramsarandas, Rai Vikramajit Sing Bahadur, Malik Mathra Das, Lala Ganesh Dutt, Lala Dayali Ram, Lala Mina Mall and Pt. Mauli Ram, to examine the rules and regulations and the working of the Bharat Mahamandal, Benares, with a view to organise the Mahamandal as an All-India Institution and report before July 1st, when a meeting of the Working Committee of the Sanatana Dharma Conference will be held at Benares to examine the report and advise the necessary steps in order to put the Bharat Mahamandal on the footing of an All-India body and decide future plans to achieve this end. Another resolution was also passed regarding the management of temples in Delhi, for which the Delhi Prabandhak Committee had already started working. A priest in one of the temples had removed the images, and the Conference called upon the Prabandhak Committee to treat the temple as a test case of their activities, and called upon the Delhi public to help the Prabandhak Committee with all possible means Temperance Meeting in Trivandrum: Under the presidency of Rao Bahadur A. M. Muthanayagam Pillai Avl. B. A. B. L., retired High Court Judge, the Trivandrum Temperance Association held an extraordinary meeting on Sunday the 21st instant at Valiathuray. Nearly 500 people attended the meeting. Among the speakers were Rev. Father Godinho, Messrs. T. Muthya Pillay, Malloor Govinda Pillay, B. A. B. L., and K. J. Jacob. Resolutions requesting the Government to adopt a definite temperance policy, not to locate liquor shops, at least, within two miles of fishing villages, and authorising the President to forward the resolution to the Government, and nominating members for a deputation to wait on the Excise Commissioner to request him to give effect to the second resolution in the approaching auction sale of shops, were unanimously passed. The President in his concluding speech assured his audience that he was prepared to do everything in his power to save the poor labouring classes from the clutches of the Drink Demon. He also made some practical suggestions. The Association should hold meetings as often as possible to educate people and form public opinion against the use of drink. School children should be given lessons on Temperance. The blind imitation, he said, of Western fashion by a section of the community in using cake and wine for weddings and other feasts should be totally stopped, if not for any other consideration, at least to set a good example to the illiterate masses.

Excise Committee in Cochin: In deference to the wishes of the members of the Cochin Legislative Council who, during the Budget Session of the Council, referred to the present Excise policy of the Government and expressed a strong desire for the appointment of an Excise Committee in Cochin, the Government have ordered the formation of a Committee for going into the whole question of Excise Administration in the State. The Committee consists of Messrs V. K. Cochunni Menon B. A, B L M. L. C. (President), Marayil Krishnan Menon, B A., M. L. C., T. K. Mathew B. A., B L. M. L. C., M. K. Rama, M. A, B. L., M L.C., Rao Sahib T. V. Kasturi Ranga Iyer, B. A., M. L. C., Diwan Peishkar, V. B. Vaidyanatha Iyer, B. A., B. L., M. L C, Superintendent of Excise Revenue (Convener) and T. K. Krishna Menon B. A., M. L. C. The Committee has been asked to investigate and suggest means for improving the Excise Administration of the State examining, if necessary, witnesses (official and non-official) in connection with their work. The Superintendent of Excise Revenue has been asked to take the necessary action so that the Committee may begin its work and submit its report as early as possible

Nambudiri Family Regulation Bill: It is a hopeful sign of the times that the most conservative community in Kerala realises the need for social reform. A measure of social legislation making it permissible for the junior members of Nambudiri families to marry women of their own caste and making it obligatory in such cases for Karanavans to maintain such families was introduced recently by Mr. Kaplingat Sankaran in the Cochin Legislative Council. Under existing conditions only the senior members of Nambudiri families can marry Nambudiri girls, the juniors being thus compelled to contract marriages with Nair women. This has resulted in encouraging polygamy among the seniors and enforcing celibacy on a large number of Nambudiri women. The Nambudiri Kudumba Bill also restricts the powers and privileges of Karanavans. The Bill which is likely to evoke considerable opposition from the orthodox party, has been referred to a Select Committee. Although the women of the community have been suffering long with no voice of protest, none of the community seems to have taken any interest in their cause till recently. The alienation of their property to other communities under legal pressure on account of the legislation of non-Nambudiri castes seems to be the main cause of the immediate awakening, as the lady member pointed out during the discussion in the Council.

Reclamation of Slaves: We are glad to see that arrangements made for the emancipation of slaves in the Hukawang valley, Burma, have been very successful and practically all slaves have now been released. Agricultural advances are now being given to those who left the valley while those who are remaining in the valley are being given a free gift of their cost of emancipation. The expedition is expected to return to make its way across the unadministered territory lying between this valley and Assam and return to Burma via Calcutta. It is hoped the success achieved in the Hukawang Valley may lead to similar action being taken to release slaves in other remote parts of the Province. Report has been now received that all slaves in Hukawang Valley numbering 3487 have been released. The Chief Secretary to the Government of Burma on behalf of the Governor has sent the following telegram to the Commissioner of Sagaing division: "Please convey to Barnard and members of his party His Excellency's congratulations on the completion of emancipation of slaves in Hukawang Valley."

Compulsory Military Training: At a meeting of the Madras University on the 18th instant, a resolution was moved by Mr. S. Satyamurthy recommending that the Senate is of opinion that every male student should, before being allowed to appear for any degree examination of the Madras University, produce a certificate of military training in the Indian Territorial Force unless he has been declared to be permanently incapacitated on medical grounds by some medical authority appointed by the military authorities or by the University from undergoing training. The Vice-Chancellor, presiding, said that it was beyond the power of the Senate and that, so long as the proposition was of this form, it was out of order. Mr. Satyamurthy enquired whether he could modify the resolution, but the Vice-Chancellor replied that it was too late and asked the mover to bring it at the next meeting.

Prohibition in Mysore: It is a matter for gratification that, in the matter of prohibition, the Native States are far ahead of British India. In accordance with the representation made by certain members of the Representative Assembly in the October session of 1925 requesting that Akkibhoja (Rice beer) shops in the Tirthahalli Taluk may be abolished, Government have passed orders directing that the shops for vending Akkibhoja in the Tirthahalli Taluk be abolished with effect from 1926-27, and that no shops for the sale of this liquor be permitted to be opened anywhere in the State in future.

More Lady Municipal Councillors: The Kolhapur correspondent of the Indian Daily Mail gives the following information: The nomination of Mrs. Balkrishna and Miss Sonutai Chawan as members of the Kolhapur Municipality is a laudable step that the Durbar has taken. Mrs. Balkrishna is the talented wife of Mr. Balkrishna, the distinguished Principal of the Rajaram College, and Miss Chawan, a brilliant graduate of the Women's University, an accomplished and sociable lady, is in charge of the Ahalyabhai Girls' School. They have already made their mark in the new Municipality.

Women not to Preach: The United Free Church of Scotland is not united on the proposal to admit women to the Ministry, a proposal which is causing considerable discussion in the Ecclesiastical Courts After a keen discussion the Glasgow Presbytery rejected the suggestion by a narrow majority in mail week. In opposing the idea the Rev. Boyd Scott said there was nothing which would lead them logically or inevitably to open the office of the Ministry to women. On the other hand, the Hamilton Presbytery, near Glasgow, has approved the proposal by 36 votes to 32. Dr. Knight of Uddington, in seconding an amendment for the rejection of the resolution in favour, paid a compliment to women on their teaching capabilities, and said that if many women were ordained some male ministers would have a very thin time. He was quite willing that women should be allowed to teach, but not to preach or dictate to man. That prerogative of man, he said, had come down from the Third Chapter of Genesis.

Traffic in girls: We referred sometime back to a case in Madras where two young girls aged 8 and 10 respectively belonging to the Tamil districts were sold away to two Telugu Brahmins of Guntur. A writ of habeas corpus was taken out urging restoration of possession of the girls to their mother. It came up for hearing recently before the Madras High Court and the Chief Justice in passing orders restoring possession of the girls to their mother made severe strictures upon the cruel custom of selling away girls. We also referred to a case at Kumbakonam in which a girl was kidnapped and married to a Telugu man without the knowledge of her parents. After protracted hearing in the lower courts, it came up recently before the Tanjore Sessions Court. The Judge convicted two accused, one, a young woman, to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and the other, her husband, to one year's simple imprisonment.

A Munificent Gift: According to an A. P. I. message, Lady Basantakumari Chatterjee, widow of the late Sir Profui Chandra Chatterjee, has made a gift of her house at Puri to the Saradeswari Ashram and Free Hindu Girls' School of Calcutta in memory of her deceased husband to enable the Ashram to establish a branch at Puri. She has also promised to pay promissory notes for Rs. 10,000 for the unkeep of the institution at Puri.

An Unequal Marriage: The Servant of Calcutta has the following in its issue of the 23rd March: "An octogenerian Brahmin of village Tilak in the Sunamganj Sub-Division has married a girl of 14." It is truly shocking to hear that such things should still take place in India.

Ramakrishna Math and Mission Convention: Three public meetings on the 3rd, 5th and 8th instants are to be held in connection with this Convention on the grounds of the Ramakrishna Math at Belur (Howrah) at which several Swamjis are expected to take part and speak on various subjects.

The Late Sir K. G. Gupta: We deeply regret to record the death of Sir K. G. Gupta which took place in Calcutta on Monday last. The deceased was 75 years old at the time of his death. Sir K. G. Gupta was one of the earliest to join the Indian Civil Service and he was one of the two Indians first appointed to the India Council. As a member of the Esher Committee, he wrote a strong minute of dissent. Though he did not take part in politics, his influence was always cast on the side of moderation.

Removal of Untouchability : An interesting and heated debate took place at a recently held general meeting of the Dhulia Municipality on the question of the untouchability conference. The Depressed Classes Conference has passed a resolution requesting all local bodies to erect sign boards at all public places under Municipal control declaring that they are free to all without distinction of caste or creed and social status. Dr. Sathe brought a proposition supporting the above resolution. It was seconded by Mr. G. K. Kudav but was opposed by some non-Brahman members who said as already there was no restriction there was no need of this resolution. After a heated debate the proposition was carried by nine votes against eight. The majority consisted of 4 Brahmans, 1 Mahomedan, 1 Non-Brahman and 1 depressed class member.

NOTES

The Indian National Party: We print to-day the proceedings of the Conference held in Bombay of representatives of different political parties, not belonging to the Congress. A new Party to be known as the Indian National Party has been formed. Liberals who called the Conference, have declared their resolve to identify themselves with the new Party. Dr. Besant and her party have also joined it. Mr. Jinnah and his Independents have done likewise. The Responsive Co-operationists have tentatively expressed themselves in its favour, but it is understood that negotiations are in progress between them and the Swaraj Party from which they recently seceded with a view to re-union, and if this takes place they may prefer to go back to their old lines. The Swaraj Party, if it accepts the views of the Responsive Co-operators, will not itself be very different from the new Party, and as Swarajists control the Congress, the reconciliation of the two sections of the Swaraj Party will pave the way to the merging of the new Party in the Congress. There is a very general desire that the Congress should include all schools of political thought in the country, and the omens on the whole are not unfavourable to such a consummation. Governments in India and Great Britain can do much to help the consolidation of responsible political opinion here by announcing shortly the appointment of the Royal Commission on further constitutional advance, which is due to be appointed in about three years. Political and communal discords in the country may afford an excuse for vested interests to urge a policy of reaction pithily summed up by Lord Morley in the phrase: "Martial law and no damned nonsense." But such a course will only make administration more difficult, more costly and less efficient and, in a few years, the situation must become, as it did in Ireland, uncontrollable. No thinking man can contemplate the possibility of such a contingency without horror.

The Calcutta Riots: Indian leaders, on their part, have a great responsibility which has been vividly brought home to them by the murderous Hindu-Mahomedan riots in Calcutta. These riots generally end as suddenly as they begin. When once the mad fury has passed, peace resumes its sway and it is seldom that thereafter any serious incidents occur. In Calcutta, on this occasion, the riots have died down and blazed up again and again in more or less serious forms during the last few days. The incidents connected with the trouble bear more the character of a civil war than that of a religious outbreak. The Hindu resistance is more determined and continued than it has usually been on similar occasions in Calcutta or elsewhere. For the first time in these riots, the bomb has appeared as a weapon of offence. Stabbing, too, has been much in evidence. The lathi is a downright weapon which may kill a man, but it does not leave sinister memories behind. The dagger as a weapon is morally even more destructive than physically. The discredit for these riots must rest in the first instance on the Government responsible for law and order in Bengal. Lord Lytton has been well-intentioned, but he has proved to be a weak ruler. His regime has been a very unsettled one. These riots are the crowning proof of his ineptitude. The Swarajists of Bengal must also share the responsibility for the unsettled state of the Province. Without any constructive work to show, they have by their indiscriminate obstruction hampered the administration and created a spirit of disorder among the populace. We hardly think that the Bengal Swarajists will survive as a political party after these riots. The leadership of the province must pass into other hands, and there are plenty of able men in Bengal to undertake it with more capacity than Mr. Sen Gupta.

Bombay Department of Industries: The Report on the progress of industries in Bombay for the year 1924—25 by the Department of Industries, clearly shows what work this Department, rightly worked, is capable of in aiding and improving our nascent industries. It may be remembered that the post of the Director of Industries was abolished as a result of a resolution passed by the Bombay Legislative Council in May 1924, but was recreated in July 1925. The Report under review almost covers the period of the activities of the Department when it was under the charge of the present Director as Superintendent of Industries. The year was one of unusual depression in trade and both the textile and oil industries fared badly. The chief activities of the Department during the period were the supply of commercial intelligence to private enterprises, professional or technical advice and assistance to minor industries, and demonstration in cottage industries, especially in weaving. Owing to want of staff, the Superintendent of Industries could not do much touring work, but in the short tour he made he managed to get information on the progress of some industries in the Presidency. Of the new industrial ventures, the match industry seems to hold out the best promise. There are now 14 match factories in the Presidency and, except three or four that use indigenous wood from our forests, all the others import match-wood logs from foreign countries. It need hardly be said that, if the industry is to progress at all, the match wood needed for our factories should be procured locally and Government would do well to accept the suggestion of the Director that our forest resources should be explored and reported upon by a match technologist. The Director also makes out a good case for the supply of cheap power to small industries. At present, the policy of Tramway Companies buying electric power at a very cheap rate from Tata Sons Ltd., and selling it out to small industrial concerns at a rate varying from 1·5 to 2 annas per unit, causes much hardship to them and the Director opines that much impetus and help could be given to them if electrical energy is supplied at from 1 to 1·5 annas per unit. The cottage industries have also received the special attention of the Deparment and efforts were taken to introduce the most modern and improved methods of producing hand woven goods by means of weaving schools and weaving demonstrations. The scope of the Department is vast and Government would be well advised to undertake the industrial survey recommended by the Director for the purpose of assessing the position of industries in the Presidency and finding out means of improving it.

The Naidu Conference: It is a welcome sign of the times that the various sub-castes into which the Non-Brahmin community in South India is divided, are realising the need for unity in their ranks. The Nadars and Devangas held their annual conferences only recently and the Naidus also held their second conference on Saturday last in Madras under the presidentship of Dr. P. Varadarajalu Naidu, the well-known worker from Salem. But unlike the two former backward communities, the Naidus have a distinguished past history and many are now occupying a good position in public life. Dr. Naidu has always been noted for his staunch nationalistic spirit but, latterly, a transformation has come over him and he too seems to have fallen a prey to the curse of communalism. Dr. Naidu said that he did not see any objection to the principle of communal representation, though he declared in the same breath that he cared for political progress first and attached only a secondary importance for communal and linguistic progress. The Doctor also paid a flattering compliment to the members of his community when he said that, instead of the Brahmins, if Naidus were put in the administration, a new tone and life would be infused into the whole administration. Some of the suggestions which he made to the Conference were not quite sound. When Mahatma Gandhi through the columns of Young India is preaching the virtues of vegetarianism, his disciple, Doctor Naidu, does not scruple to ask Naidus to prefer animal to vegetable diet. Again, while he would allow greater freedom to women, he is not in favour of their practising at the bar or entering Government service, though he has no objection to their entering journalism. Resolutions were passed at the Conference advocating fusion of sub-castes by intermarriages and the encouragement of widow re-marriages and post-puberty marriages among them. The Conference also condemned the extravagant expenditure incurred during marriage and other occasions and called upon Naidus to reduce their marriage ceremonies to one day. We are glad to see that a Ladies' Naidu Conference was also held along with the Conference at which Shrimati Alamelumangathayarammal, as Chairman of the Reception Committee, made an eloquent and impassioned appeal for the raising of the status of women in every sphere.

Sikhs and Communal Representation: Following the Indian Christians, the Sikhs also have declared themselves against communal representation. The Central Sikh League at its recent session held at Lahore, passed a resolution declaring that communal representation has proved ineffective in safeguarding the rights of the Sikh minority and that, far from easing the tension between the communities, it has only led to increased bitterness and enmity between them. Mr. Gurdit Singh, the President, went one step further and said that to communal representation should be traced the Tabligh and Shuddhi movements of to-day. But whatever that may be, there is no doubt that it is this pernicious system of communal representation that is at the root of all our present Hindu-Muslim dissensions in the country and it will not be long before the Muslims, as also some other minority communities who are clamouring for communal representation, will discover, as the Sikhs have now done, that the protection afforded by it is illusory and merge their interests in those of the nation itself.

Religious Endowments in U. P.: The U. P. Council at its recent meeting discussed a motion recommending the Government to appoint a representative committee to advise what effective steps should be taken for the better governance, administration and supervision of Hindu religious and charitable endowments. The Minister in charge readily accepted the motion on behalf of Government, himself bearing testimony from personal experience to the fact that in a number of temples the purposes for which endowments had been created were not carried out. The Madras Religious Endowments Act and the Punjab Gurudwara Reforms Act were designed to deal with such mismanagement. Dr. Gour tried to bring in an All-India measure on the model of the Mussalman Wakfs Act, but, unfortunately, the Select Committee to which it was referred threw it out. It rests upon the provinces, therefore, to take the initiative in the matter and it is in the fitness of things that U. P. should now take up this question. In the United Provinces are situated such tirthas like Hardwar, Badrinath, Brindaban, Chithrakuth, Ayodhya, Kashi and Prayag, all important for Hindus all over the country, and every effort, therefore, should be made to see that the endowments bestowed upon them are not in any way mismanaged or misapplied. Government, we hope, will bring in an effective Bill for the purpose.

Bombay Legal Aid Society: We have already referred in our columns to the excellent work the Bombay Legal Aid Society is doing on behalf of those who are too poor to pay for their legal aid. During the year ending December 1925, legal aid was given to twenty-one applicants of whom 10 were Hindus, 5 Mahomedans, 4 Parsis, one a Jew and one an Anglo-Indian. The legal aid for the most part consists of such aid as the recovery of wages from defaulting employers, of damages from Railway Companies, etc Besides this, free legal advice was given to twenty-nine persons. The Sub-Committee of the Society is carrying on publicity work by means of articles to the press and legal journals and boards are hung up in various courts, giving information about the Society. The number of members of the Society at the end of the year was only 29. Considering the useful work the Society is doing, it deserves more encouragement and we hope all lawyers at least will make it a point to join the Society and thus strengthen its finances which are far from being adequate at present. The membership of the Society costs Rs. 5 per annum.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, APRIL 10, 1926.

FREEDOM AND SWARAJ.

Babu Bepin Chandra Pal, who was on a visit to Bombay last week, delivered an illuminating address at the Prarthana Samaj on Monday. We reprint to-day the summary of it published in the Indian Daily Mail. Mr. Pal began by pointing out that India owes the idea of secular freedom to British rule and English education. The Hindu idea of mukti referred only to spiritual liberation which was interpreted by medievalists to mean freedom from samsara or the calls and obligations of social and family life. To escape from these bonds by becoming a sanyasi was to attain mukti or spiritual freedom in this life. This was not the Vedic ideal. The Vedic Hindus, like the ancient Greeks, were full-blooded men and women who "with frolic welcome took the thunder and the sunshine" and their ideal was one of struggle and conquest over nature, including human nature. The morbid, unhealthy introspection which has culminated in the senseless asceticism of sadhus and bairagis, was quite foreign to them. Thought was free, and reason and not custom sat at the social helm. It was under the influence of this expansive ideal that the whole Indian continent was Hinduised and great kingdoms were founded in distant Java, whose architectural monuments alone remain to remind us of them. The period of expansion was, as it always is, followed by a period of contraction. This lasted very nearly into the middle of the last century, when a fresh impulse was imparted to Indian life and thought by the impact of Western ideas through British rule and English education.

This impulse had for its inspiration the dynamic idea of freedom. Western civilisation has many and serious defects, but it has in its faith in freedom the one perpetual corrective to save it from collapse. Whenever it loses that faith, its collapse is in sight. Neither Hindu nor Mahomedan culture and statesmanship rose to an understanding of the value of secular freedom. It is western influence which imparted to India this fruitful idea. Raja Ram Mohan Roy's was the mighty mind which caught the first gleam of the new light upon the distant hills. His Brahmoism was the application of the ideal of freedom to spiritual, social and political life. He started by re-stating the ancient Upanishads in the light of modern history which, as Acton conceived it, is the record of the struggle of man to realise himself against all sorts of bondage—spiritual, intellectual, political and social. The Raja is, therefore, justly styled the Father of Modern India. His successor, Maharishi Devendranath Tagore, firmly established the basis of the new movement in the national culture. Keshab Chandra Sen, said Mr. Pal, organised the Brahmo Church into a model of what India should be under self-government—a spiritual brotherhood transcending differences of caste and colour and creed, governing itself on the principle of a perfect democracy. This idea had permeated to the whole of the English-educated classes, although only a small section of them belonged to the Brahmo Samaj. The Indian National Congress took it over and applied it in the political field, while the Social Conference and corresponding movements carried it into the social, industrial and educational spheres. Implicit in all was the thought that individual freedom was the end of and the means to national freedom.

Mr. Pal went on to point out that this great idea was being lost sight of in recent ideas of Swaraj. Implicit, senseless obedience to the orders of the leader, was now being proclaimed as the key to self-government. Swaraj, he said, was now a mantram or magical formula and the political education of the masses is to be compassed by methods which have more in them of superstition than a rational understanding of political ends. He concluded with a fervent appeal to his country-men not to fall into the snare of the new political cult, but to hold fast to the truth that national freedom cannot be obtained by the sacrifice of the individual's freedom to think and reflect for himself and to shape his course in the light of his own conscience. Mr. Pal's address is a very timely protest against a tendency which is sapping the foundations of rational progress.

It is an irony that this tendency should have grown under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi who himself is one of the strongest upholders of the right and the duty of each individual to think and act according to his lights. Personally, he has often said that, if his followers took a different line from that which he thought best, he would go his own way and leave them to follow theirs. To be just to him, he has never favoured the method of excommunication or expulsion, though he has felt obliged to acquiesce in it when Pandit Motilal Nehru employed it against Responsive Co-operators in the Swaraj Party. In fact, the Mahatma, whenever he saw that there was a minority honestly differing from the majority, has rather given way to the minority than sought to expel it or even to make its position invidious with the majority. This side of his personality has not been grasped by many of his followers who merely wanted to save themselves the trouble of thinking and found a ready way of doing so by erecting Mahatma Gandhi, without his knowledge and consent, to the position of an oracle on all matters. They were willing at his behest to go to jail or to spin yarn on charkha. But when he wanted them to abolish untouchability or to adopt a conciliatory attitude on the points which occasioned differences between Hindus and Mahomedans, they responded with what in effect was a form of passive resistance, thus turning the weapon which he taught them to wield against the teacher himself. A Hindu legend says that the god, Shiva, once conferred upon a devotee the "boon" that any one on whose head he laid his hand should die instantly. The "devotee" at once wished to prove the effect of the boon on Shiva himself. The god had to run for his life and seek counsel with the wise Vishnu as to the best means of getting out of the danger which he had unwittingly created for himself. The latter advised Shiva somehow to keep out of reach of his devotee till sunset, when in performing his sandhya the devotee would have to lay his hands upon his own head and then the "boon" would finish him. Many of these old legends have a practical value and were evidently intended for guidance in all the affairs of everyday life. The moral of this story seems to be that if people who have not grasped the idea of freedom are exhorted to break the law, they will inevitably break each other's heads in the exercise of their new privilege.

CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES IN BOMBAY.

The Co-operative movement in the Bombay Presidency is making great strides. The Report on the working of the Co-operative Societies for the year ending March 1925 records an appreciable progress in spite of some adverse circumstances such as the unfavourable season and the slump in trade. There was an increase of 383 in the number of Societies and nearly 35,000 in the number of members and of Rs. 92 lakhs in the working capital which mounted up from Rs. 619 lakhs to Rs. 711 lakhs. The comparatively small addition to the total number of Societies is explained as due to the fact that, during the last few years, more attention has been paid to quality rather than to quantity and the Report notes with satisfaction that people now understand co-operative principles better than they used to do in the past and that they are coming to look upon Societies as a living organization rather than as a mere agency for borrowing. The Rural Credit Societies in particular show a marked advance upon previous years. Their number went up from 3,050 to 3,377 and their membership increased from 220,000 to 243,000. The working capital also increased by Rs. 51 lakhs. The confidence which these village Societies have inspired in the public is fully evidenced by the fact that, in some districts, a large percentage of the capital of the Societies is composed of deposits from non-members. But some Societies came to trouble owing to their inability to pay back the deposits which they had attracted by offering a higher rate of interest and steps are now being taken to see that they do not offer in future such high rates of interest. In addition to the training of the members of Societies, the introduction of the system of normal credit statements and the provision of adequate finance, much attention was also paid to supervision, and the condition of the Societies has improved as a result. During the year, several Societies undertook the work of debt redemption in the case of suitable members. Undoubtedly this is the most important part of their work, as it tends to relieve the members from the clutches of the usurious money-lender. At the same time, however, every effort should be made to instil into the members habits of thrift and economy. In respect of debt redemption, Bombay is much behind other provinces, though the Provincial Co-operative Bank here is in a special position to issue long-term debentures backed up by Government guarantee of interest. The takavi grants through Co-operative Societies became more popular, though only about fifty per cent the sum placed at their disposal was utilised.

Apart from the organization of rural credit, there is another important phase of the Co-operative movement which deserves increased attention, namely, the supply of agricultural requisites. The Cotton Sale Societies and Seed Societies are doing good work in this direction. Owing to the fall in the price of ploughs, the scope of Implement Societies was much diminished and, as regards the supply of manure, the work was principally done by the shops managed by the Provincial Co-operative Bank in irrigated tracts. The Fencing Societies also did much to afford protection to the lands of their members from the ravages of pigs and other animals, which resulted in an increase in their value as well as in their produce. More than Bombay, Sind shows much advance in respect of rural non-credit activities and the Taluka Development Associations there did good work in the distribution of good seed and implements and in training particularly members of Co-operative Societies in the use of improved implements and in improved methods of cultivation. The Urban Credit movement also shows an appreciable progress. The Urban Banks in particular are doing good work. They not only finance petty trade and industry at a moderate rate of interest, but they also familiarise the people with banking methods by introducing saving and current accounts and the use of cheques. During the year one more District Bank was registered ; and the ; stability of the District Banks can be judged from the fact that they have been certified as fit to receive deposits from Municipalities and Local Boards. The Bombay Provincial Co-operative Bank continues to be efficiently managed and its chief merit is that it not only finances Central Banks and Primary Societies, but also serves as a balancing centre for Central Banks by receiving their surplus funds. The Consumers' movement has not made any headway and the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, is inclined to attribute it to want of loyalty, of good management and of proper supervision. The slump in trade seems to have adversely affected the Housing and Producers' Societies. The Bombay Central Co-operative Institute is doing useful propaganda work and branches have been started in the mofussil so as to bring it into touch with the Primary Societies, but lack of funds still handicaps it from doing more work. Bombay was the first to take advantage of the provisions of the Government of India Act for having a Co-operative law of its own in order that the movement may be guided in channels suited to the special requirements of Bombay.

INDIAN SOCIAL LIFE AND MODERN URDU POETRY.

(By Mr. Mohan Singh, M. A.)

III.

Somewhere in India, upon a time
(Read it not Injia or you spoil the verse),
There dwelt two saints whose privilege so sublime
It was to sit and watch the world grow worse.
Their only care (in that delicious clime)
At proper intervals to pray and curse;
Pracit the dialect each prudent brother
Used for himself, Damnonian for the other.
One half the time of each was spent in praying
For blessings on his own unworthy head.
The other half in fearfully portraying
Where certain folks would go when they were dead.
This system of exchanges—there's no saying

To what more solid banter 't would have led,
But that a river, vext with boils and swellings,
At rainy times, kept peace between their dwellings,
So they two played at wordy battledore
And kept a curse for ever in the air,
Flying this way or that from shore to shore;
No other labour did this holy pair,
Clothed and supported from the Lavish store
Which crowds lanigerous brought with daily care;
They toiled not, neither did they spin; their bias
Was tow'rd the harder task of being pious.
Each from his hut rushed six score times a day
Like a great canon of the Church full-rammed
With cartridge theologic (so to say),
Touched himself off, and then, recoiling, shamed
His hovel's door behind him in a way
That to his foe said plainly you'll be damned;
And so like Potts and Wainright, shrill and strong
The two D—d'd each other all day long.
One was a dancing Dervise, a Mohammedan,
The other was a Hindu, a gymnosophist:

(An Oriental Apologue.)

Pandit Brij Narain Chakbast B. A., B. L., of Lucknow is dead. What a cultured man, what a genuinely patriotic poet, what an ideal critic, what a polished essayist, what a sane liberal politician have we lost in him! He leaves us in the prime of his manhood. He leaves many a hope of ours shattered, many a dream of his own unfulfilled. People who came in closer contact with him, like Mr. Daya Narain Nigam, Editor of the Zamana, tell us of his brilliant and sweet personality. They say that the side of his he presented to society was most charming indeed.

Somebody whispers in my ear that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru is editing or at least intends to edit the deceased's poetical works. May I hope that, as a result of his labours, we shall have in Urdu at least one biography that deserves that name, and deserves that eminently, at least one sensible co-ordinated record of life and work as they grew in time and flowered in circumstance, at least one such biography as may satisfy even a Leonard Woolfe.

That we have not had in Urdu anything of that type upto now except for some real chatty matter lit up by flashes of keen humour and wonderful sympathetic insight and leavened by charming anecdotes of Azad and Ishrat, will be evident on a comparison of the much-vaunted "Hyats" by Hali and others with any one of the "English Men of Letters" Series. Material is not lacking. It is the art of understanding men, with the help of an unbiassed mind, and a sympathetic sensitive heart, that we grievously lack.

Now if there are any two things that the Urdu biographer or historian has emphatically not, they are sympathy and understanding, and any two things which he most abundantly has are prejudice and conservatism. History past and present bears me out fully when I say that the two ugliest characteristics of Indian social life are prejudice and conservatism, which intrude most banefully into every branch of thought and action. Into the Sacred Republic of Letters have they made their Satanic inroads, organised and persistent, with the result that names worthy of being written in gold have been suppressed; and fools and fakes have had their names, worthy of immediate damnation, bolstered up. Literary reputations have been freely made and marred by leanings for, or aversions to, nationality, tradition, vocabulary, system of thought, locality, and so on.

Hindu vs. Muslim, Persian vs. Sanskrit, Delhi vs. Lucknow, Punjab vs. U. P., Izafat vs. Ka, such are the contending parties. Compilers of poetic anthologies or histories have taken jolly good care to exclude all Hindu writers of Urdu. Where they have let in some names, they have done so slightingly, patronisingly, grudgingly. Ever since the birth of Urdu, the Hindu has persisted in writing in it and ever since has the Muslim historian or compiler persisted in ignoring him. See Ab-i-Hayat; Gul-i-Rahna; Shihr-ul-Hind; Ab i-Baqa. They contain no mention of Hindu contributions to the poetic stock. Mir Hasan and Mir Taqi talk of one or two writers, only to prove the rule.

It is idle to say that no Hindu poets of merit, of supreme merit to rub shoulders with their contemporaries, have appeared in the past, or exist to-day. If you want a clear contradiction of it and, at the same time, if you want what pains, what tremendous expense of labour and time and money, true love of literature combined with true catholicity of taste, liberality of outlook and precision of judgment can undergo to achieve its desires, then look to the compilations of L. Sri Ram, M.A. (Khumkhana-e-Javid) and Mr. M. A. Burni's six volumes of Modern Urdu Poetry. Both are encyclopædic in their own way. Or look at the publications list of the Naval Kishore Press.

At no time in history have the two communities joined their heads in obeisance to the same Deity or Muse. There have been always found occasions and reasons for disagreeing violently. What a tremendous fight raged between deceased Chakbast and Sharar—that fine essayist, but that apology for a novelist—over the respective merits of the Masnavies of Nasim and Mir Hasan! Both Masnavies are fantastic verse romances dealing with fairies and jins. Each advocate tried to establish that his client had been the least guilty of having used any new compounds, any new idioms, any new Hindu thoughts or Indian metaphors, any new customs or imaginative situations, any new psychological facts relating to Love and Life as they obtain among the beings of the nether world, who bye-the-bye take their models from this world. Bravo! none did acknowledge the defeat, and to-day the Hindus and the Muslims disagree over the literary merits of the works of the two as much as they did before the controversy in Urdu-e-Moalla of Moulana Hasrat Mohani years ago.

Communal prejudice penetrates literary history and literary criticism; it penetrates the anthology for the general reader and the collection for the college student. Conservatism and abnormal and perverted love for the traditional, the ancestral, taboo the new compound, the new form, the new metre, the new rhyme, the new idiom, the new metaphor, the newly-introduced tree, flower, beast, bird, in poetry ; the new subject is tabooed no less. No borrowing of a foreign word though inevitable is permissible. Hindi words and phrases that have not been used by the ancients, however sweet and necessary, are inadmissible to-day. And dialectic or local speciality with regard to idiom or use of the sign of the object or the subject or variation of stress, shall not be tolerated but promptly put down.

Now you cannot ignore facts. Literature reflects life ; it reacts on life. The moral and spiritual standards of society translate themselves straight off into literary standards of its mouthpieces, its representative men. These literary standards in turn provide guidance and instruction to the masses.

Some one talks of the Republic of Letters. Emerson talks of Literary Ethics. A scholar, says he, is the favourite of heaven and earth, the excellency of his country, the happiest of men. His duties lead him directly into the holy ground where other men's aspirations only point. Eyes is he to the blind ; feet is he to the lame. The resources of a scholar, he adds, are co-extensive with nature and truth. He cannot know them until he has beheld with awe the infinitude and impersonality of the intellectual power. A divine pilgrim in nature, all things attend his steps. Let the scholar know, Emerson concludes, that the world is his, but he must possess it by putting himself into harmony with the constitution of things. He must be a solitary, laborious, modest and charitable soul !

The Indian society substitutes the "Pleasure Preserve of Letters" for the "Republic of Letters" and "Literary touch-me-not-ism" for "Literary Ethics." It is only during the last ten years that in the columns of literary magazines Hindu poets have figured side by side with the Muslim poets ; new forms, new subjects, new metres have been sung of and sung in side by side with the old ones. Hitherto there was nothing dignified, nothing vivifying, in the social struggles. It is only when the national heart has begun to throb fully and beat in complete response to that rising note of Unity and Nationalism that social and patriotic poetry of a high order has been given birth to. Even now, however, communal ideals and communal heroes are held up to public gaze and admiration, and communal fall and communal disorganisation are bemoaned in suitable elegies.

United nationalism, harmonised literary advance, and sympathetic social relationship, have found but few lyrists. A band of intelligent workers in the Hyderabad University centred round Urdu, the quarterly of Maulvi Abdul Haq, are doing very good work. Pedant-purists are not wanting there too. But the general atmosphere prevalent seems to bespeak a liberal outlook. It is much to be wished that some Hindu literateurs were admitted into those coteries.

It is one of the most intriguing facts of literary history that the Hindu poet writing in Hindi has earlier and more effectively and extensively broken away with the old literary traditions with regard to form and subject under the influence of English education and literature than has his brother writing in Urdu working constantly under fear of Muslim opprobrium. The various social problems that have exercised many a mind in Upper India since the beginning of this century have found their Elliott and Hood, Lord de Tabley and Kingsley, Mrs. Browning and Morris on a smaller scale in Maithili Sharan Gupta, "Gulab," Ayudhia Singh Upadhya, Shrimati Parbati Devi, Nathu Ram, Shankar Sharama, Mahabir Prasad Dwevedi, Lala Bhagwan Din, Snehi, R. N. Trepathi, Misra Bandhu, Manan Devedi and Gopal Saran Singh. In fact, if I were to risk a remark with regard to Modern Hindi Poetry, I will say that it is excessively pre-occupied with religion and nationalism. It is wanting in pure poetry—creation of an imaginative insight into the beauty, romance and truth around us in the river, the sunset, the pariah child and the coy bride.

I have before me Misra Bandhu Vinod Part III (History of Hindi Literature), Kavya Kusamodyan by Karan Kavi and Hindi Final Reader, a text-book prepared by the U. P. Education Department for Vernacular Schools. A few of the verse-titles are :

Sorrows of a Poor Man, Greatness of the woman, Our Down-fall, A whip for a meat-eater, Awake O Brethern, Advice, A Woman's Tears, India, The Hero in Action, The Peasant, The Ganges and the Jamna Bharat, Indian Social Reform.

Writing in 1912 Karan Kavi, the compiler of one of the three books referred to, says : The literature of to-day should be so very beautiful as to inspire and infuse into men and women the noble feelings and emotions of courage, manliness, self-sacrifice, patriotism, dutifulness, mental expansion and religious discipline. We no longer need poetry which is brimful of love for some one else's beloved or which delineates every limb of the adored one or which contains varied poetic artifices marring its spontaneity.....The publication of this book of "Social Poetry" is an innovation.

We thus see that both Urdu and Hindi have made long strides towards this ideal. Among those who are responsible for deliberately changing the turn of affairs was Chakbast with whom go, besides those mentioned in the previous articles, Dwarka Prasad, Uffaq, Bishan Narain Dar, Hijr, Akbar, Kaifi, Ismail Meerathi and Akbar Allahabadi.

GOKHALE AND GANDHI.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Thank you very much for the courtesy of a second note on "Gokhale and Gandhi." Only let me assure you that I consider niceties as purely superfluous and as such seldom yield to their claims.

Now to the point at issue. Your second note simply takes you into deeper waters and I can only just make a few statements. Gandhiji does not, to the extent I have understood him, consider English Education as a hindrance to the regeneration of India. What he considers as a hindrance is the abject slave mentality

that considers nothing possible without it. Your talk of Gandhiji wanting to convert the educated community into "imitation peasants and "farmers" by adopting Khaddar and plying the charka,—pardon me—reveals only your astonishing ignorance of the message of the spinning wheel and what it aims at. There are thousands who have adopted both and who yet are what they were, without the startling metamorphosis you suggest having taken place. Only they have come nearer to the masses and are slowly taking a little more interest in the life of the millions from whom they draw their sustenance. I wish I could bring home to you what this means. In India unless we bring the classes and the masses together we are sure to head on for a social revolution more terrible than the Russian.

You say also that, if the Gandhian plan had succeeded, English Education would have come to an end. This is only partly true. English Education would have come to an end only to the extent that it tried to get upon the back of Indian culture and Indian ideals. This is what has exactly happened in institutions like the Behar, Kasi and Gujerat Vidyapiths and the Aligarh National Muslim College now transferred to Delhi. If more funds were available, even science laboratories would have been added. And surely in none of these institutions kept alive by the heroism of a few is the process of conversion into imitation peasants going on. But I concede ignorance is again your excuse. Pray get into touch with these institutions. I can suggest no better remedy. At the Aligarh College young men who have returned from Europe after study are working for a mere pittance.

I also feel sure that Gandhiji has never aimed at converting all into peasants, not to speak of imitation peasants. All that he is trying for is to construct living channels of co-operation between the classes and the masses. He has seen, as perhaps none else, that the problem of humanity depends for its solution on the coming together of both, the one powerful because of its very numerical magnitude, the other equally powerful because of its attainments and talents. All through history both these powerful forces have striven one against the other and in the struggle whole civilisations have disappeared. Gandhiji's philosophy, educational and social, directly aims at preventing such a cataclysm in India. Future generations will understand and bless him for it. We may not to-day see it.

Yours etc.,

Santiniketan. G. RAMACHANDRAN.

[It is obviously useless to argue with a co-respondent who tells you that you are ignorant of the A. B. C. of the subject you are talking about. Ed., I. S. R.]

THE BANE OF HINDUISM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

If you wish your children to be conspicuous for the high moral qualities of self-sacrifice, self-restraint and devotion to duties, free them from the influence of Brahminism.

The modern religion of the Brahmins, enfeebled by superstition, is a serious menace to the growth of truth in a purer, more spiritual and still nobler form in the human mind. We too often witness in it a glaring degeneracy, a sectarian spirit, and traces of petty individualities. It cannot give fresh life to a nation or create a new era for society in general. It cannot establish the great principle of equality of souls in the eyes of God. It cannot indicate a forward movement in human nature. In truth, it hinders a man whenever he aims at higher objects and seeks for immaterial and imperishable blessings.

The Brahmins are elevated above every other class of men, and exclusively acquainted with the mysteries of religion, which it is held impious for any other class to attempt to penetrate. The implicit reliance on the authority of these Brahmins, the ceremonies of their worship, fitted to impress the imagination and affect the passions, all concurred to fortify the potent superstition and to give these priests a supreme ascendancy over the minds of the people. As these ideas became established, the distinction between the people and the clergy was more strongly marked. The salvation of souls no longer depended on the moral advancement of the people, but upon the licking of the dust from the feet of a Brahmin.

The enfeebled Hinduism was thus tottering on its foundation when Islam appeared in India. The national religion, which had satisfied our forefathers, could no longer prove sufficient for their children. The gods of the Hindus have lost their oracles and their divinity vanished as they themselves have lost their liberty. A great void is occasioned in our religion. The new religious idea of the present age coming in contact with this singular system of our theology, has opened the eyes of the new generation.

Is our country, therefore, prepared for reform? Or "has it learned nothing and forgotten nothing in her adversity?" As soon as we declare all Hindus are created free and equal and throw the caste system into the sea, a fresh impulse, a new form and destiny will be communicated to the Hindu race. The abolition of the caste system and the downfall of the pagan superstition of the Hindus are the eras from which we may date the formation of the Hindus into a single people.

Calcutta, Yours etc.,

3rd April 1926. AMRITALAL MAJUMDAR.

INDIAN NATIONAL PARTY CONFERENCE.

Since the Responsive Co-operationists seceded from and created a split in the Swaraj Party, the leaders of political thought in the country felt that nothing short of a strong political organisation uniting all the different parties should be formed to meet the situation. It was decided to have a Conference of political leaders for the formation of the Indian National Party. A manifesto was issued under the signature of the leading members of the various parties setting out the object of the Conference and inviting a select number of people to attend and help establish the principles of the new Party. The response to the call was splendid and those who were not able to attend in person sent encouraging messages on the success of the Conference which was held on the 3rd and 4th instants. The session of the Conference was not open to the press and the following press communique has been issued regarding the proceedings of the Indian National Party:—

The Conference formally to bring into existence the Indian National Party as it has been named was held in China Bagh, Bombay, on April 3 and 4. There was a large attendance from the several Provinces which included prominent representatives of the Responsive Co-operationists, Independents, Nationalists, Members of the National Convention and the National Home Rule League, the National Liberal Federation and the All-Indian Muslim League and the Non-Brahmin parties of Madras and Bombay.

Among others present were Mrs. Annie Besant, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Sir Dinshaw Petit, Mr B. Chakravarti, Lala Hari Kishenlal, Mr. B. Das, Sir Moropant Joshi, Sir Venkata Reddi. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir Daya Krishna Kaul, Rao Bahadur R. R. Jayvanth, Rao Bahadur V. R. Dhobley, Rao Bahadur K. V. Brahma, Mr. M. A. Jinnah, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Mr. B. S. Kamath, Mr. Joseph Baptista, Mr. J. B. Petit, Mr. K. Natarajan, Rao Bahadur Rahmanbhai Mohanram, Mr. Surendranath Mullick, Mr. J. Chouduri, Babu Krishna Kumar Mitter, Pandit Hridayanath Kunzru, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kalai, Mr. D. V. Gokale, the Hon'ble Rattansi D. Morarji, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr D. G. Dalve, Messrs. N. M. Joshi, G. K. Devadhar, C. Y. Chintamani, etc.

A large number of members who could not be present sent letters and telegrams explaining their position and nearly all of them expressed an ardent desire that a coalition party should be formed. Among them were Sir Sankaran Nair, Sir Visweswara Iyah, Sir Sivaswami Iyer, Mr. Srinivasa Sastry, Mr. C. Vijaya Raghavachariar, Diwan Bahadur Kesava Pillai, Mr. N. Subba Rao, Diwan Bahadur Raghavendra Rao, Diwan Bahadur Rangachariar, Mr. Venkatapathi Raju, Diwan Bahadur Govinda Raghava Iyer, Mr Natesan, Diwan Bahadur Krishnan Nair, Principal Kanitkar, Sir Provesh Mitter, Messrs. M. S. Das and Raja Sundar Das of Cuttack, Sir Ali Imam, Sir Mahomed Shafi, Raja Narendra Nath, Mr. A. P. Sen and Rao Bahadur A. Vikramat Singh, Maulvi Mahomed Yakub, Sir Sankar Rao Chitnavis, Sir Bepin Krishna Bose and many others

Sir T. B. Sapru Voted to the Chair.

On the motion of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya seconded by Sir K. Venkata Reddi and supported by Sir Moropant Joshi, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was voted to the chair.

The resolution drawn up by the local committee of the conveners to serve as the basis of discussion was then formally moved and there was a prolonged discussion on the first day. Among those who took part in the discussions were Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Mr Natarajan, Mr. Chouduri, Babu Bepin Chandra Pal, Sir K. Venkata Reddi, Mr. Jinnah, Mr. Mullick, Mr. Chakravarthi, Mr. J. B. Petit, Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, Messrs. Jayakar, Baptista and Balubhai Desai, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. Paranjpye.

When the Conference resumed its sitting on Sunday Mr. Natarajan and Mr. Madan Mohan Malaviya moved amendments.

At this stage the Conference appointed a committee of 21 members representing every variety of opinion in the Conference to consider the various amendments and to reach a settlement by consent. After about an hour and a half the committee returned and the proceedings of the Conferenee were resumed. Eventually the following resolutions were carried unanimously and by acclamation ;

Resolutions adopted.

1, (a) This Conference resolves that a party to be known as the Indian National Party be and is hereby formed.

(b) The object of the Indian National Party is to prepare for and accelerate the establishment of swaraj or full self-government in India, such as obtains in self-governing dominions of the British Empire with due provision for the protection of the rights and interests of minorities and the backward and depressed classes.

(c) (1) The Indian National Party will employ all peaceful and legitimate means not including mass civil disobedience or general non-payment of taxes.

Responsive Co-operation in Councils.

(2) Amongst other parliamentary methods open to it the National Party will inside the legislatures resort to responsive co-operation or opposition or co-operation as and when necessary and it will carry on intensive propaganda work in the country in the furtherance of its objects.

(3) The National Party may promote as occasion may demand a movement of individual or group resistance to authority for definite objects on particular occasions in particular localities.

(d) In the pursuit of its object the Indian National Party will work in co-operation with any other party or political group which has the same object in view and whose methods are consistent with the policy of this party.

Support to Reforms.

(e) While the Indian National Party is of opinion that the constitution embodied in the Government of India Act of 1919 is inadequate and unsatisfactory it will utilise it to the fullest extent it can (including in it the acceptance of offices) both to accelerate the revision of the constitution as well as to ameliorate the conditions of the people and to advance their interests in every possible way.

(f) The party will to the best of its opportunities strive for the social, political and economic uplift of all classes, castes and communities alike in rural and urban areas, and will in particular work for the removal of untouchability and the amelioration of the condition of the backward and depressed classes.

(g) The party will seek by every means in its power to promote unity among the different communities.

(h) Every person who has attained the age of 21 and signifies in writing approval of the policy of the party will be eligible to be a member of the Indian National Party.

At this stage most of the members present signified in writing their consent to be members of the Indian National Party after which the Conference passed the following resolution :—

Committee Formed.

2. (a) This Conference hereby constitutes a committee consisting of the members named below with power to add to their number and with Messrs. C. Y. Chintamani and M. C. Chagla as provisional secretaries.

(b) The members of the Committee belonging to several provinces do form themselves into the provincial committees of the party with power to add to their number and to appoint their office-bearers.

(c) The Committee is to take all necessary and desirable and feasible steps in the furtherance of the objects of the Indian National Party including the constitution of the provincial and district branches, propaganda among the people, all work relating to election to Legislative bodies, the promulgation of the rules not inconsistent with the policy of a party, the collection of funds and the holding of an All-India Conference of the Party at such time and place as the Committee may decide.

The members of the Committee are :—Dr. Annie Besant, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, Mr. S. Chakravarthi, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. M. A. Jinnah, Babu Bepin Chandra Pal, Sir Moropant Joshi, Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Mr. J. Baptista, Mr. J. Chowdhuri, Babu Krishna Kumar Mitter, Rao Bahadur R. R. Jayvanth, Mr. Rattansi Morarji, Pandit Hridayanath Kunzru, Sir K. Venkata Reddi, Mr. B. S. Kamath, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale, Mr. Surendranath Mullick, Mr. Bala Narayanan, Mr. U. V. Gokhle, Rao Bahadur D. G. Padhye, Mr. M. C. Chagla, Mr. D. G. Dalve, Mr. B. K. Labri, Raja Govindlal Shivlal, Mr. Jehangir B. Petit, Mr. B. Shivrao, Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, Mr. A. N. Surve, Mr. S. G. Vaze, Mr. G. K. Nariman, Mr. N. V. Pathankar, Mr. B. Das, Mr. D. P. Khaitan, Mr. S. B. Bhose, Mr. Manu Subhedar and Mr. D. V. Gokhale.

It must be stated that Messrs. Jayakar, Baptista and D. V. Gokhale have not yet become members of the party. Mr. Jayakar explained that while he was in complete agreement with the resolutions passed that day and would have immediately joined the party if he could have acted alone, he held the position of the President of the Responsive Co-operation Party and therefore had to place the matter before his committee of which an early meeting would be called. But Mr. Jayakar agreed provisionally to serve on the committee of the Indian National Party subject to the approval of the committee.

After the first resolution was adopted and before the second resolution was taken Dr. Annie Besant with the permission of the Chairman moved the following resolution of which she had given notice:—

"This Conference of the Indian National Party urges the House of Commons to pass the second reading of the Commonwealth of India Bill thus showing sympathy with the righteous aspirations of India for self-government as declared in the resolution of the National Congress in 1914." But Messrs. M. A. Jinnah and K. Natarajan having raised a point of order whether that subject could be taken up when the members had no notice of it, neither the notice convening the Conference nor the draft agenda having made any mention of it, the Chairman ruled that technically they were right and he therefore must rule the proposition out of order.

The Conference came to a close after 5-30 p m. with the usual vote of thanks.

The first meeting of the Committee of the National Party will be held on Monday at noon at Birla House, Girgaum.

A Correction.

Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, Secretary, Indian National Party, has since sent the following:—

In the report of the proceedings of the Indian National Party Conference held at Bombay on April 3rd and 4th the word "promote" in resolution I (c) (3) is a mistake for "permit." The sub-clause adopted by the Conference was the following:

The National Party may 'permit' (not 'promote') as occasion may demand a movement of individual or group resistance to authority for definite objects on particular occasions in particular localities.

BRAHMO SAMAJ AND THE SWARAJ MOVEMENT.

Under the auspices of the Prarthana Samaj, Babu Bepin Chandra Pal delivered a lecture in the Prarthana Mandir on April 5th on "The Brahmo Samaj and the Swaraj Movement." Babu Krishna Kumar Mitra, ex-President of the Brahmo Samaj, presided. The President opened the proceedings with a prayer. He then paid tributes to the memories of Dr. Atmaram Pandurang, Messrs. Paramanand, Madgavkar and Ranade and Dr. Bhandarkar, who brought in a new era in this part of the country. They believed in a religion which they called the universal religion which meant the fatherhood of God and brother-hood of man. He hoped that the flag which was unfurled many years ago by those great men would not be lowered now. He then called upon Mr. Pal to deliver his lecture.

The lecturer said that ancient memories naturally came to him also as they stood in that house of God, which was associated with very intimate and sacred sacraments of his life. Forty six years ago, the first Brahmo marriage was celebrated in Bombay and he happened to be the happy bridegroom. His wife was neither a Gujarati nor Marathi, but a Bengali and he did not regret it. The last time he was here was 26 year ago. While he was returning from England and America he had to pass through Bombay when Mr. Ranade, who was the President of the Samaj did not let him pass through Bombay without addressing a special meeting in the same hall. Since then many things had happened. The angle of vision of the rising generations, whether for good or for evil, had more or less radically changed. Other problems had come to the front when the speaker was young and the one problem that challenged their minds and their conscience, the one problem that compelled them to come under the banner of Brahmo Samaj was the problem of freedom. When he was a young man he was drawn to the Brahmo Samaj by its message of freedom and he thought that the time had come when people talked of freedom and yet worked for bondage and acted in such a manner that freedom became impossible. It was time that the old message of freedom delivered to India by Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Dr. Rabindranath Tagore and others who worked under the Brahmo Samaj should be delivered once more with all the strength and earnestness, with all the appeal not merely to sentiment but to reason and to history that they could command. Even if he were not a Brahmo Samajist, frankly, he would stand up for the ideals of the Brahmo Samaj without which there could be absolutely no realisation of the dream of Swaraj.

An Age of Magic.

We were living in an age of magic and the word "Swaraj" had practically ceased in the hearts of many of our countrymen to be a rational concern but had become a mantra. It had become a word to create by

realpatidar.com

magic force something which was not still in existence. There were people who tried out in the name of Swaraj, but who were afraid of finding Swaraj. The word "Swaraj" occurred in the Upanishads, and there it meant the deepest and profoundest spiritual and religious life. He who realised the universal in him and in all things about him, attained Swaraj. Freedom, Liberty and Independence, all these words logically had the same meaning, that is, the absence of restraint. The absence of freedom of liberty led not to Swaraj but to "No Raj," not to Self Government but to "No Government." The essential implication of Swaraj was that it was the Raj of "Swam" or the self as against the not self. The real meaning of the word "Swam" was universal self or God seeking to realise Himself and Swaraj therefore meant that moral, political, and, above all, the supreme spiritual concept and a very high religious ideal and it was the Brahmo Samaj that led us into this ideal of freedom.

Ideals of Vedanta.

Raja Ram Mohan Roy organised the great spiritual ideals of Vedanta in social and even in accordance with the conditions of his time in political life. He was the first to deliver the message of the new freedom to the sleeping generation. Then came the Maharishi Devendranath. He went a step further and organised religious and ethical disciplines and cultures with a view to the realisation of this great ideal of spiritual freedom. After that the Raja's constructive genius at once realised that if India was to attain the ideal of freedom, it would have to utilise all the resources of modern European learning and culture. There was no desire for freedom in the community when he began his propaganda. There were four phases of things, things as they existed, doubts, criticism and Sangathi in relation to scriptural interpretation. This was the universal scheme of intellectual development and evolution. The Raja's first duty was to create doubt to emancipate the mind and conscience of his people from the thraldom of ununderstood traditions.

Mr. K. C. Sen was the strongest exponent of the modern spirit, the spirit of renaissance in India. Their first revolt for the attainment of freedom was the social and religious revolt. The message of individualism and rationalism of Mr. Sen laid the foundations of real national freedom deep and strong upon personal freedom. The individuals must be free from the fetters of bondage if the nation was to be made free. The nation was not merely a collection of individuals. Individuals and nation, each had its own ends. The end of individual existence was the highest possible development of his reason, his emotions, his artistic faculty and his conscience and what you call his soul. And if the individual becomes intellectually a bondsman, if he refuses to claim and organise his life and conduct, the fullest freedom of his own reason and conscience, then he can never contribute to the building up of a healthy, strong, beneficial and powerful nation. "If you want Swaraj," the speaker continued, "don't quarrel over conscience."

A Democratic Swaraj.

Was there no hope of our building up an honest democratic Swaraj for this country? There were many difficulties in the way but he was not prepared to say, "give up fighting". Fight on, but remember that the only enemies of Swaraj in India were not the British. They would have to fight their own people in regard to social and other questions. The Brahmo Samaj, therefore, delivered a message of freedom and tried to build up a Swaraj character in the community. The Brahmo Samaj also tried to build up within its own sphere a Swaraj constitution for the government of its own organisation. "If you want to preserve the purity of the ideal of freedom," the speaker concluded, "I would ask you to seriously consider whether the time had not come when the old message of the Brahmo Samaj must be repeated with greater emphasis and with reference to existing actualities of to-day more than others.

Hindu-muslim Riot.

The President, in concluding the proceedings, referred to the recent Hindu-Muslim feud in Calcutta and said that the only solution to these quarrels was Brahmo Dharma which said that all of us were the sons and daughters of God and only when people realised this they would see India united. Unless there was a United India they could not hope for Swaraj. "The Brahmo Samaj had shown the way, follow it and you will attain Swaraj," concluded the speaker.

Mr. K. Natarajan proposed a vote of thanks to the distinguished speaker and the venerable President which terminated the proceedings.

HAPPY HOME FOR THE BLIND, BOMBAY.

Mr. Byram N. Khambata sends us the following appeal for publication:

There are, it is true, continual demands on our purse. They say, entertain the sick, the wounded, the bereft of the Lord. True. The demand is reasonable, say I. Who feed and keep them going? Is it not the public? Is not a rational method simpler, cheaper? The Happy Home for the Blind is another beggar institution of the type. I appeal to you to loosen your purse string and help the Home. I say it is economical to teach the blind to live by the sweat of his brow. May be, he can earn only half a bread, or, perhaps a quarter. Will not Society like to be relieved of its responsibility to that extent? It may be that you know not that what you give the beggar blind goes not to him. His is the bread that he gets for the day, if not the blows and beating in the bargain of his inability to have earned enough for his keeper, who carefully empties his pocket in the evening. Why give those and multiply immorality and diseases innumerable adding to the already heavy load of human misfortune? As if the blind and the lame, the deaf and the maimed are not quite enough, we dole out money to manufacture diseases and miseries in myriads.

Brothers and sisters, join ye the help, raise the funds for the Happy Home for the Blind. Come ye to the concert of the 19th inst. at Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall at 5-30 p.m. Fail not to bring friends. Here's God's Blessing. May you and yours share it.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

President of the Public Services Commission: Mr. Wilberforce Ross Barker, late Legal Adviser to the Board of Education, has been appointed President of the Public Services Commission.

Important Archaeological Discoveries: Two important archæological discoveries are announced by Rai Bahadur Daya Ram Sahni, Archaeological Surveyor of India. Mr Sahni has discovered a valuable inscription which makes certain that the extensive remains near a village known as Kosam, District Allahabad, are the marks of the actual site of the famous city of Kausambi. Gautama Buddha spent his ninth retreat at Kausambi and it was here that the first image of the great teacher was carved in sandal wood in his own life-time. Mr. Sahni says that the remains at Kosam extend over several miles, and he estimates that a great wealth of relics is buried there. A small stone statuette (ht. 10⅛ inches) inscribed with the name Dadhikaran has been discovered by Rai Bahadur Pandit Radha Krishna, Honorary Curator, Museum of Archaeology, Muttra, and presented by him to the Archaeological Department at the suggestion of Sir John Marshall. It is in a good state of preservation except for the head which is partly broken off. To judge from the style of carving and the character of the Brahmi inscriptions on its base the image is assignable to the 2nd or 3rd century A. D.

Post of Director of Labour, Bombay, Abolished: A resolution of the Bombay Government states: "The question of the abolition of the post of Director, Labour Office, has, for some time past, engaged the attention of Government. Government have now decided that the post of the Director should be abolished from 1st March 1926, the date from which leave granted to Mr. G. Findlay Shirras (the incumbent of the post) expired. The work of the Labour Office should be entrusted to the Director of Information who should be styled "Director of Information and Labour Intelligence."." In the House of Commons Mr. Lansbury raised the question of the Government of Bombay abolishing the separate post of the Director of the Labour Office. Earl Winterton, in his reply, emphasised that it was purely a matter for the local Government.

New Weekly at Delhi: A new English weekly called Liberator has come out on 1st April at Delhi with its first number. Its editor is Swami Shraddanandji and its chief aim is to work for the removal of untouchability. Dealing with the reasons that led Swamiji to start this weekly, he says: "In my wanderings through Madras Presidency during the last two years I found that if I wanted to reach the heart and intellect of Andhras, Tamilians, Malayalese and Canarese I must utilize the English language as the vehicle of my thoughts and ideas."

Mr. S. C. Bose Awarded Damages: Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose has been awarded damages to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and costs in the case, instituted by him against the Englishman for libel. Mr. Bose alleged that a certain statement credited to Mr. Bose's father admitting Mr. Bose's connection at one time with revolutionary activities was totally false and malicious. Mr. Bose's father denied having made any such statement. The Englishman admitted liability and prayed for nominal damages. Mr. Justice Chotzner who heard the case passed judgment as above.

A Widow Marriage Home: We are glad to learn that a Widow Marriage Home has been started at Vayalpad, Chittoor District, Madras Presidency. Widows from all castes who desire to marry and men who desire to marry widows should write to the President of the Home. Marriages will be conducted by the President, Arya Samaj. Good Brahmin Purohits will conduct the whole ceremony after the Vedic fashion in public temple in the presence of Brahmins and others. Applications must contain full particulars as to caste, gotra, Sutra, Veda, age, appointment, property and a short history as to merits.

Prohibition in Baroda: We regret that the Baroda Legislative Council at its recent sitting threw out a motion demanding the appointment of a committee to go into the question of the loss of revenue that will be involved on the adoption of Total Prohibition as the goal of excise policy. Its rejection, it is stated, was mainly due to the vigorous opposition put forth by the Dewan on the ground that enforcement of prohibition will only result in illicit manufacture of wine, the stock-in-trade with anti-Prohibitionists. Baroda now is not the Baroda of a few years back which gave a lead to the whole country in many matters.

Prison Reform: Yet another Governor has spoken on prison reform. While Lord Lytton pleaded for a more humane system of punishment, Sir Henry Wheeler, the Governor of Bihar and Orissa, presiding at a meeting, urged the adoption of the recommendations of the Indian Jails Committee. The sympathies of these high personages notwithstanding, we are no nearer the goal of prison reform. It is the bureaucracy that stands in the way.

New Surgeon-General for Madras: Colonel Hutchinson from the United Provinces has been appointed Surgeon-General for Madras in place of Col. Symons. The claims of Col. Chaudhiri have been overlooked, because the colour of his skin is not white. This, coupled with the recent Government circular on the I. M. S., will only discourage Indians from joining the Service.

Bombay Baby Week Committee: The National Baby Week Committee have decided to carry on a propaganda on the lines of an exhibition throughout the year. Local social organisations, medical practitioners and nurses are expected to co-operate in this project. This policy was foreshadowed by Lady Wilson in her speech at the Baby Week Exhibition.

New President of the Bombay Corporation: This time it being the turn of a Mahomedan, Mr. R. M. Chinoy has been elected President of the Bombay Corporation for the current year.

Mr. Sen Gupta Re-elected Mayor: Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta has been re-elected Mayor of the Calcutta Corporation for the current year.

Anglo-Indian Sangathan: The Sind Observer writes: The Anglo-Indian community has first of all to set its house in order. The domiciled European has to break down the walls of separation that to-day divide him from the Anglo-Indian whose grandfather or grandmother was an Englishman or Englishwoman. The Anglo-Indian should not look with such contempt upon the Indian Christian who has managed to get into his community by the assiduous toil of a generation by changing name and label. The one hundred per cent. domiciled European, the seventy-five and fifty per cent. Anglo-Indian and the twenty-five per cent. Anglo-Indianised Indian Christian and all such as are aspiring to be honoured with the labels of the community varying in colour from white to half-white, from half-white to one-fourth white, and then from brown to black, have all to be accommodated under one roof if the mission of Anglo-India is to provide for her numerous guests very much differing from one another. In miniature, the problem of the Anglo-Indian community is like the problem of the assimilation of the Hindu castes for unity of aim, purpose and action. It is a problem of Anglo-Indian Sangathan.

NOTES

"The National Week": We do not like the name of "National Week" being given to the celebrations centring around the anniversary of the Jallianwala massacre every year. National Week should commemorate something of which the nation can be proud and not something which is a cause of humiliation to it. Jallianwala is a name of evil import in modern Indian history, and we would prefer to call the Week commemorating it the Week of Humiliation. During this week it behoves Indians to turn their mind inward and to reflect on the conditions which made and make Jallianwalas possible. The British General Dyer at Amritsar and the French General Sarrail at Damascus revealed the real attitude of the West to the East as in a lightning-flash. It is one of fear, and fear is, of course, the parent of cruelty. The West cannot live without the resources of the East, but it does not want to give anything in return. In other words, it wants to have control of those resources without legitimate reason, and is afraid that the East may resent the injustice some day. So whenever there is any sign of such resentment, the West throws to the winds her professions of peace and progress, and brings out her teeth and claws to terrify the East back into submission. The East, too, can develop these natural means of offence by the necessity of self-defence, and hence the West welcomes with effusive enthusiasm Mahatma Gandhi's gospel of non-violence, not with the intention of adopting it herself, but in the hope of inducing the East to adopt it and thus to assure her of a perpetual dominion in Asia and Africa. This is an aspect of Western ingenuity which has escaped attention in this country. The Humiliation Week should be devoted to remove those social injustices and temptations which degrade Indian manhood and womanhood and reduce them to crawl on their bellies before the world, as typified by the victims of "the crawling order" at Amritsar in 1919. It is exasperating to see the day of Jallianwala turned into an occasion of electioneering propaganda by politicians who are more anxious about the next elections than of the fate of their country and nation. Even the propaganda on behalf of hand-spun goods on the occasion, is an irritating diversion. People tired of hearing Aristides being called just and banished him from Athens to save themselves the boredom of his virtue. One gets much more easily fed up with the praises of hand-spun, its mysterious economic, political, medicinal and spiritual potencies, and this, we think, is the present state of feeling among an increasing number of people. They might think more if they heard less of it. Mr. Rajagopalachariar deplored the sparse evidence of khaddar at a Bombay meeting which he addressed. If after six years of persistent propaganda led by a powerful personality like Mahatma Gandhi, khaddar is not growing into popular favour, the average man would sit down and ask himself whether he has not under-rated the practical difficulties felt by the people in regard to the use of the material. But this is not the mentality of the great khaddar preachers. They seem to think that the people have merely to carry out their wishes however impracticable they may be.

Muslim Girls' Education: In an interview published in the Indian Daily Mail, Mrs. Fyzee Rehman, the cultured and talented Muslim lady who is a well-known figure in Bombay, pointed out some of the glaring defects inherent in the existing system of education for Muslim girls. She expressed the opinion that the education imparted in schools in general is far from satisfactory and most unsuited to the genius and tradition of the Muslim faith. Education, which is a drawing out of the faculties implicit in men, cannot be tethered to the tradition of any particular faith, though it should use as far as possible the instruments which tradition has familiarised. But the Begum was stronger in her condemnation of the Municipal schools the atmosphere of which she characterised as "poisonous". She complains bitterly of the unhealthy conditions obtaining in these schools and of the callous indifference of some of the women teachers to their sacred duty. In one school, she found the teacher "sprawling down and two girls shampooing her" and in another, the teacher was engaged in the arduous task of preparing pan "for full twenty minutes" to the neglect of her charges. The reason for this state of things in our schools is not far to seek. It is because we have tried to perpetuate the purdah in these institutions. When the question of adopting Free and Compulsory education came up for discussion before the Bombay Municipality some of our Muslim friends were loud in their protest that it should not be made applicable to Muslim girls as it would clash with their social custom. On the same ground, Muslim Girls' Schools are not subjected to the same strict inspection that is enforced in other schools. What wonder then, lack of discipline, ignorance and filth are some of their worst features. It is only when liberalising tendencies permeate the schools that we can expect sound education.

Immigration Law of U. S. A.: We print to-day in our Overseas Supplement a declaration by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of the U. S. A., regarding the Asiatic Exclusion Section of the Immigration Law of 1924, kindly sent to us by a valued friend. The declaration condemns this discriminating law as humiliating, unjust and unchristian to Asiatics and as an affront to Japan's prestige as one of the great and equal nations of the world. It also criticises in severe terms the recent interpretation of the law of naturalization whereby eligibility to citizenship has been limited to persons of the White race and to persons of African birth or descent and which debars as unfit for citizenship on the basis of colour alone persons of all other races, whatever their individual character or qualification. The case in which some Indians were recently deprived of their citizenship rights which they enjoyed for many years simply because they do not belong to any particular race, is too recent to need mention here. The Federal Council no doubt recognizes the necessity for restriction of immigration in order to conserve American standards of labour and living, but it is convinced that it is possible to do so by according to Asiatics in the United States their rights as human beings and also the rights to which they are entitled by the letter and the spirit of the treaties under which they came to the United States. It sees no better solution of the problem than the application to Japan, China and India of the quota law as it comes into force in 1927, which would result in the annual admissions of 350 immigrants from the Orient, 150 from Japan, 100 from China and 100 from India respectively, and to that end appeals to all right-thinking and peace-loving citizens of the United States in order that the right relations between the United States and the peoples of the Orient may be established. We are glad that in the United States of America, as in South Africa, there is a strong body of Christian opinion against the unjust discriminatory laws against the Asiatics and Indians in particular, and it is but fitting that the Churches in both the countries should take the lead in this agitation, for, as the declaration says, it is the most unchristian act of which the Whites are guilty.

Discrediting Prohibition: Officials in this country are taking every opportunity to discredit the policy of total prohibition which some provinces have adopted as the goal of their excise policy. In last week's issue of Young India, Mahatma Gandhi criticises in strong language the statement made by Mr. King, the Financial Commissioner in the Punjab, that the Local Option Act which was passed there over a year ago has been a perfect failure. The Commissioner has no doubt come to this conclusion on the ground that only 19 out of a total number of nearly 200 Municipalities and Local Boards have asked to be empowered under the Act, that out of this 19, only 6 took further steps and that in these the referendum had precious little support. As Mahatma Gandhi remarks, this would have been justifiable only in the case of a stranger and not in the case of one who is familiar with Indian conditions. The Financial Commissioner knows fully that both Hindus and Mahomedans who form the major part of the population in India are opposed to drinking on religious grounds and yet for him to maintain that prohibition has failed in this country is nothing but a perversion of facts. On the other hand, as Mahatma Gandhi says, the inference to be drawn from the so-called failure referred to by Mr. King is not that the Punjab is against total prohibition but that the Punjabis being themselves as a class tee-totallers do not bother their heads about those who are ruining themselves through the drink curse. Mahatma Gandhi takes to task the Municipal Commissioners and the members of the Local Boards for the criminal negligence of their duties to the voters in this matter of great social importance. But Lala Lajpat Rai's Weekly, in the latest issue, in reply to Mahatmaji's charge of apathy upon Punjab, dwells upon the unsatisfactory nature of the present Act and therein lies the real reason why the Local Option Act in the Punjab is a failure and not that alleged by the Commissioner.

The Anglo-Indians: We welcome the resolution passed by the Round Table Conference of delegates representing the Anglo-Indian community all over India and Burma which recently met in Calcutta, urging the Anglo-Indian community to join hands with moderate Indians and moderate Europeans for the advancement of India and the attainment of dominion status within the British Empire. The Anglo-Indian community has hitherto kept aloof from all political activities and hence has had no policy of its own, but thanks largely to the efforts of Col. Gidney, the community is coming to its own and is rapidly realising that it can attain salvation only by making common cause with other communities in India. The resolution passed at the Conference, however, does not go far enough, for the Anglo-Indian community is still lingering between the Indians and Europeans and has not completely identified itself with the former. While Col. Gidney is carrying on a busy propaganda against the seclusion of his community, it is unfortunate that there should still be found prominent men among the community to advocate it. Addressing the annual general meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association recently at Allahabad, Mr. Justice Daniels said that each community should preserve its own identity and that if Anglo-Indians merged with any other community, they would lose everything and be fit only to be trodden under foot. We rather think that this is a case to which the saying of a greater than Mr. Daniels pre-eminently applies. Whoso loveth his own life more than the good of the whole of which it is a part, shall lose it; and whoso does not mind losing his life for the greater good, shall find it in all its fulness.

The Light of Asia: The Great Eastern Corporation of Delhi has in conjuction with the Munich Photoplay Company produced a film of this title, describing the life of Lord Buddha. Its scenario has been written by Mr. Niranjan Pal, the talented son of our distinguished leader, Mr. B. C. Pal. The performers are exclusively Indian, the scenes have been filmed in India in the historic places, and the costumes have, to a large extent, been copied from the Ajanta frescoes and other ancient monuments. The producers have had to cope with great difficulties and it is all the more creditable to them that the film has been a success. This is largely due to the brilliant acting of the principal performers—notably the heroine, Gopa. Though the story has been adapted for the purpose of filming, the essentials have not been altered. It will be released next week at the Krishna Cinema, Grant Road, and we hope that all who are interested in Indian culture will avail themselves of this unique opportunity.

Indian Lady Photo Artist: Shrimati Yamanabai is the first Indian lady who is devoting herself to the enterprising task of taking photographs of ancient sacred places in India. The photographs illustrating the glories of Hampi Sri Virupakshaswami, "the most sacred place in the Karnatak", are well-chosen and of great historic interest and will appeal to all lovers of art and architecture. They will also form valuable illustrations, if incorporated in books dealing with the subject.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, APRIL 17, 1926.

"A SHIFTING OF FOUNDATIONS."

The most significant feature of the Conference held in Bombay recently of representatives of all but the Swarajist political parties, is the adoption by Liberal, Independent, Besantite and Non-Brahmin representatives of the clause permitting individual and group civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes on certain conditions. The Servant of India which is the organ of the Poona Liberals as well as of the Servants of India Society replies vigorously to a criticism of this clause as out of place in the programme or methods of the Indian National Party as the new Party is called. Apart from the merits of our contemporary's reasoning the mere fact that a recognised Liberal organ has come forward to claim these methods, hitherto generally identified with Non-Co-operators and Swarajists whose avowed policy is obstruction in the several Legislatures, is itself of profound significance. A public reference has been recently made to a definition by the late Mr. Gokhale of constitutional agitation. In an address delivered at Allahabad in February 1907, Pandit Motilal Nehru presiding, Mr. Gokhale speaking of the work before educated Indians, said :

The question had often been asked, what was constitutional agitation ? He would attempt to frame an answer to that question. Constitutional agitation was agitation by methods which they were entitled to adopt to bring about the changes they desired through the action of the constituted authorities. Thus defined, the field of constitutional agitation was a very wide one. But there were two essential conditions—one, that the methods adopted were such as they were entitled to employ, and, secondly, that the changes desired must be obtained only through the action of the constituted authorities by bringing to bear on them the pressure of public opinion. Now, what were the methods they were entitled to employ ? The first idea suggested, on a consideration of the question, was that physical force was excluded."

Proceeding with the consideration further, the speaker said that three things were excluded—rebellion, aiding or abetting a foreign invasion, and resort to crime. "Roughly speaking," he said, "barring these three things, all else was constitutional. No doubt everything that was constitutional was not necessarily wise or expedient. But that was a different matter. Prayers and appeals to justice lay at one end. Passive resistance, including even its extreme form of non-payment of taxes till redress was obtained—lay at the other." This it is claimed by some very orthodox Liberals sanctions non-payment of taxes as a constitutional method. So it does. But though Mr. Gokhale held that it was constitutionally admissible, dismissed non-payment of taxes as politically inexpedient in the conditions of the country. Later in the same address, answering those who advocated a general boycott as the sole, or indeed any, means of achieving self-government in the present state of India, he said : "Non-payment of taxes was the most direct and the most effective form of passive resistance and it had, moreover, the merit of bringing home to each man the responsibility of his own action. If some of those who were talking of employing passive resistance to achieve self-government at the present stage of the country's progress would adopt that form of passive resistance, they would soon find out where they stood and how far they were supported."

To quote Gokhale in the face of this explicit declaration as a supporter of non-payment of taxes even as a permissible method, is to ignore the plain meaning of words. This address was delivered early in 1907. Non-Co-operation and the triple boycott was adopted by the Congress in 1920 or 13 years later. It is astonishing how Mr. Gokhale had anticipated the trend of what he called the "new teaching" and warned his countrymen against it taking one item after another. The "new teaching" in those days was identified with Mr. Tilak who at the time of his death was said to have been opposed to Non-Co-operation. But Mr. Gokhale, at any rate, would seem to have apprehended that Mr. Tilak's teaching led directly to what came afterwards to be called Non-Co-operation. "They were being told," said Mr. Gokhale, "that they should now give up having anything to do with the Government of the country and that by the simple expedient of a universal boycott, they would be able to achieve everything they had in view." This is precisely what was preached under the name of Non-Co-operation. Mr. Gokhale first took up the boycott of foreign goods. He pointed out that Swadeshi was a perfectly useful and legitimate movement, which was only prejudiced by the use of the term "boycott" in connection with it, as "boycott really implied a vindictive desire to injure another, even if one had to injure himself in doing so." The exclusion of foreign goods from our markets must be a slow affair. He added : "Even the attainment of a substantial measure of success in that work, however helpful in increasing our resources, would not much affect the present political domination which, in certain conceivable circumstances, might then tend to become even harsher." Mr. Gokhale then referred to the boycott of schools and colleges as "sheer madness", and to a general boycott of the Government Services as "ludicrous in the extreme." As regards the boycott of honorary offices such as seats on Local and Municipal Boards and Legislative Councils, he said that they would be injuring and not advancing the interests they had at heart by the course proposed. Mr. Gokhale added that they must all resist as much as they could "the attempt to shift the foundations of their public life." Non-Co-operation with Government, he rejected as an idea that was not to be entertained. Constitutional agitation meant bringing pressure to bear upon the constituted authorities and the idea that they should have nothing to do with those authorities was unconstitutional. The significance of the acceptance of group civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes by the Indian National Party, is that all schools of political thought have now agreed to a shifting of the foundations of our public life. When the next no-tax campaign is started, there will be no political party to resist it on the ground that it is unconstitutional. Government obstinacy is slowly undermining the forces of constitutionalism in this country. Its short-sightedness in failing to read the signs of the times, is most deplorable. We earnestly trust that a more far-sighted policy will come to prevail before the drift in the direction of direct methods attains unmanageable dimensions.

THE BEGGAR PROBLEM.

The evil of professional begging which is undoubtedly on the increase, has of late received much attention in the country. Committees were set up in Madras and Calcutta to deal with this question and in Bombay also two important committees, one appointed by the Government with the Hon. Mr. Phiroze Sethna as chairman, and the other appointed by the Municipal Corporation, had already considered the question and made valuable suggestions. And, latterly, Mr. O. H. B. Strate, the Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer, was asked by the Government of Bombay to prepare a rough scheme for establishing and maintaining a beggar settlement in the vicinity of Bombay on the lines of a criminal tribes settlement, which should include, inter alia, an industrial home, a work house for able-bodied beggars and an infirmary for those incapable of doing any work. Mr. Strate's report which has just been published is a valuable contribution to the subject and is undoubtedly the result of his thorough study of the English and Continental systems of poor relief during the brief period he was on leave. Though Mr. Strate was asked to report on the beggars of Bombay City only, he has considered the question from the general standpoint as well as from the point of view of its particular application to the Bombay City. It will not be possible for us to enter into all the details of the report. We shall only indicate the general features of the problem which are of universal application. At the outset, as Mr. Strate remarks, it must be recognised that apart from assistance given as a measure of famine relief, no public assistance has been given hitherto as relief to the poor in India. India has thus to tackle the question of poor law reform which forms an essential part in the administration of all civilized countries. Mr. Strate pays a well-deserved tribute to the benevolence of the charitable Indian public and to the value of the joint family system in supporting poor members of the family, and it is to be hoped that this admirable feature of Indian life will not disappear when the State steps in to give assistance out of the public purse. Mr. Strate first lays down certain principles for the guidance of poor law reformers in India: that it is not practically possible to recognize formally by statute the legal obligation of relieving the necessitous poor, that all forms of home assistance should be left to private charity, and lastly that public assistance should be confined to institutional relief.

Organization of Relief.

There are three possibilities, viz., control by a separate Board of Guardians, control by District Local Boards and Municipalities and control by Government. Mr. Strate rules out Government control as out of the question as having no parallel in any country and is inclined to vest the control under the District Local Boards and Municipalities. He suggests, however, the following safeguards. The units of authority should be District Local Boards and Municipalities with a population of 50,000 and upwards, and a scheme should also be devised giving the smaller Municipalities representation on the Committee of their District Local Board. Mr. Strate also proposes that, in order to ensure that the problem of poor relief may be tackled by men of practical experience and sympathy, the District Local Board or Municipality should vest its authority in matters relating to the relief of the poor in a Committee to be called the Public Assistance Committee, one half to be chosen by the District Local Board or the Municipality from among its elected members and the other half chosen by nomination from outside men having the necessary practical experience. Mr. Strate's objection to vesting the control of institutional relief in a special Board of Guardians is based on the experience of England where the Royal Commission recommended its abolition on the ground that such a body directly elected for the purpose creates vested interests and is more often calculated to hinder rather than promote relief work and urged that its authority should be vested in County Councils and County Borough Councils. The experience of all countries shows that there is often no sufficient co-ordination between private and public charity and in order to remedy this defect, Mr. Strate recommends the institution of a Council of Social Service as an aid to the Committee of Public Assistance whose function would be to organize the recording of private charity and public assistance and thus avoid overlapping.

Persons to be dealt with.

First come the religious mendicants. As India is a country where religion has got a tenacious hold on the people, any drastic action with regard to these mendicants will be resented by the people and Mr. Strate's suggestion for limiting their activities for the present to begging in temples and mosques with the consent of the trustees or in their vicinity by the consent of the Commissioner of Police or the District Magistrate and to house to house begging, seems to be reasonable, but it is to be hoped that, with the advance of public opinion, all begging may be prohibited other than by those who are rendering a definite service to the community in return for their support. Next we have those who apply for assistance. Though there may be many genuine cases of distress there will be many cases of imposters as well and no efforts should be spared to inquire into the previous history of the applicant and his capacity as well as that of his relatives in order that the necessity of the man may be assessed at its true worth. With regard to those found begging against the rules, Mr. Strate suggests that they should be brought before a Magistrate and sentenced to various kinds of punishment including fine, probation, deportation, imprisonment and residence in any one of the institutions. In the case of those found in a helpless condition Mr. Strate recommends that they should be sent to a hospital if accommodation is available, failing which they should be sent to an institution under the Committee of Public Assistance until such time as their relatives are traced and the persons sent to them or retained according to the circumstances of the case.

realpatidar.com

realpatidar.com

And lastly comes the case of children. When children are found begging and are brought to the clearing house, Mr. Strate advises that systematic efforts should be made by the central staff to trace their parents and that children should not be separated from them except only as a last resort.

INSTITUTIONS FOR RELIEF.

Mr. Strate suggests a number of such to be established, some under the Council of Social Service or other voluntary associations, some under the Committee of Public Assistance and others under direct Government control. The list is indeed formidable, but there is no denying the fact that much depends upon the classification of institutions as fully borne out by the experience of all countries. Mr. Strate stresses in particular the need for an institution to provide work for adult blind persons, a compulsory colony for infirm and aged persons with hospital accommodation attached to it and a compulsory colony for able-bodied men. This last forms an integral part of all poor law systems and the work undertaken by it consists for the most part of the acquisition of a large area of cheap land and reclaiming and using it for agriculture, and in some cases factories are also added to agriculture in the same institution. Mr. Strate, however, warns that we cannot rely upon the income of a colony for able-bodied beggars doing more than providing the food and clothing of the inmates. Mr. Strate rightly attaches much importance to a minimum period of compulsory confinement in the institutions, as no effective reformation can be secured with a stay of a few days or weeks. On the other hand, a maximum should also be fixed as, otherwise, a type of person may come into existence who "is willing to remain indefinitely in the institution, preferring the security of the institutional life to the life outside with its greater freedom but greater responsibilities." Following recent experience in some of the countries, Mr. Strate thinks that though some efforts to prevent escapes must be made, no expensive methods of guarding should be adopted such as will be involved in the search for those who escape from the area.

COST OF POOR RELIEF.

We find various systems on the Continent under which the charges are distributed between the local authority and the State in varying proportions. In England, however, excepting Old Age Pensions and other help to the poor which the State has provided, the cost of poor relief is met almost wholly from the rates levied locally for that specific purpose. In Bombay, Mr. Strate recommends that the cost should be equally divided between Government and the local authorities, the contribution of Government being conditional upon its acceptance of the budget which, however, it may refuse if it is not satisfied that there is due economy and efficiency, a condition which, we hope, will not bring about any hitch between the two authorities as in some cases in the past. Mr. Strate also urges the adoption in our own poor law reform of the two principles enforced in practically all poor law systems, viz., the legal liability of certain relatives to contribute to the cost of maintenance, and the right of recovering the cost of relief from the person if he becomes able to repay afterwards. Mr. Strate's report is in every respect valuable and exhaustive and, if only the main recommendations which he urges are adopted, we can go a long way in satisfactorily solving the problem of beggary in Bombay. Copies of the report can be obtained from the Book Depot, Town Hall, Bombay.

AN ALL-ROUND PROGRAM.

(BY MR. S. D. NADKARNI)

1.—THE ESSENTIALS OF OUR NATION-BUILDING.

When it is claimed—as is often done—that religion should have nothing to do with politics, what is meant by religion here can only be theocracy. For theocracy is nothing but the government of society by artificial distinctions between man and man, between man and woman, set up in the name of some ultra-rational sacred principle, whether expressed or implied. The discrimination may be made on the ground of caste or creed, race or sex, colour of the skin or of 'the true faith.' Now, if it is recognised that a people's politics is but a phase of its social life—and not a thing apart,—or if it is realised that the form of every people's government is ultimately determined by the condition of its social life and thought, then it will readily be granted that if theocracy should have nothing to do with our politics, neither should it have anything to do with our social life. Theocracy, indeed, has been the bane of India in a more tragic sense than perhaps of any other country. It is of this evil that the nation must shake itself free, before it can make real progress. Unless theocracy is done away with in every form, there seems to be no hope for India: only the Kali age will continue to be her lot!

But so much has been and is being said and written all around us on how to regenerate and free the Indian people—so much that is weakly sentimental, absurdly chimerical, mere 'patrioteering bosh,'—that I feel it is high time that a consistent and comprehensive program were laid down which would be clearly practical and indubitably beneficial to the nation as a whole.

Now I hold certain elements to be basic or indispensable in the building up of a free and progressive India. Though there may be scarcely anything new or novel about them, I have embodied all such elements in the form of items of a program, which I mean to formulate and annotate in the course of these communications. I have ventured for the most part to bring together and correlate ideas which are already floating in the air, in the hope that they may prove 'pregnant in unison.' What I am going to attempt is an eclectic synthesis of ideas drawn from various and conflicting schools of political and other thought in our midst, rather than anything like an original contribution to that thought. I proceed to formulate these ideas.

In India and for India there is now wanted a party of Rational Nationalists. 'Equal opportunities to all' must be their ideal, and their slogan 'Down with theocracy in every shape!' They shall try to achieve their aim, which shall be nothing less than 'the greatest good of the greatest number' of their countrymen, by every practicable and legitimate means, unfettered by any doctrinaire or sentimental scruples, but going about their work in a rigorously scientific, even a 'commercial,' spirit—all in the interest of the nation. Their program should be as follows :

SOCIAL.

1. To legalise marriages contracted without the caste, sub-caste, credal fold etc., and within the gotra, by means of a Civil Marriage law applicable irrespective of creed, caste and race, but with healthy restrictions only as to the age, civil condition etc., of the parties, and making thereunder registration of marriage compulsory in all cases.

2. Inheritance to be governed in all cases by a general (or non-personal) law, unless it is otherwise and specifically secured by a duly made will,—the State levying a graded share of the property in every case.

POLITICAL.

1. The State to be a Federation of autonomous Provinces or sub-states, each sub-state being a uni-lingual province of India-and-Ceylon (and no Burma),—the Federation being named 'the Union of India and Ceylon,' or 'India' for short.

2. (a) The State not to take note of its citizens' creed, caste, or race in any department of its activities.

(b) No disqualification to attach to sex for any post etc., and perfect equality of both sexes to be guaranteed in all State matters (or in at least the civil ones).

NATIONAL DEFENCE.

1. (a) Organisation of National Defence in all its branches to be modelled (as far as possible) on that of the Swiss both as regards general conscription and the allocation of the respective shares of the Central and Provincial governments in the responsibilities of Defence.

(b) All units of the national forces to be formed strictly on a territorial basis, and not on communal, caste or racial lines.

ECONOMIC.

1. The policy of the State to be to help the nation to become self-supporting with regard to as many economic products as it is possible and desirable to produce in this country.

EDUCATIONAL AND GENERAL.

1. Education to be strictly secular in all public institutions maintained or aided by the State.

2. Arrangements to be made for special encouragement in the matter of education to the backward and the poor,—the manner and the degree of such encouragement being determined by the merits and needs of each individual case and not by the accident of birth alone nor by the fact of creed at all

3. Each Province to have at least one university of its own.

4. English, with a phonetically reformed graphic system, to be the Federal language, and also the medium of international intercourse for India.

5. The medium of instruction for teachers and of expression for the taught to be the vernacular of their Province necessarily in the lower stages of national education and as far as possible in the higher stages, where English may be substituted optionally for or used partly with the vernacular according to the needs of the subjects,—English (with the reformed spelling) being taught as a compulsory 'second language,'—its teaching beginning with the middle-school course and being continued up to the point where the general course (whether secondary or collegiate) is left for a special course (i.e., a technical or 'professional' one).

6 (a) A common decimal or metric system of weights, measures and money to replace the present uneconomical, irrational and diverse systems in use all over the country.

(b) The Western calendar and mode of reckoning of time to be observed in all State transactions.

THE INDIAN STATES AND FOREIGN SETTLEMENTS.

(These will be dealt with in the last article.)

NOTES ON THE ITEMS.

On the items Social—1 and 2.

The aim and necessity of these 'secularising' planks will be plain to those who realise that 'politics is only a branch of sociology.' Political structures to be permanent or even possible in these days may not be raised on social sands. We can never really progress as a nation, unless social cohesion is made possible; and social cohesion will only be possible if the natural means to it are not penalised by law or 'religion,' as they are now penalised. Thus, the object of the first item in particular is not to penalise the system of water-tight castes and communities,—but to prevent the penalising of any who in their own persons choose to defy or ignore that system, and thus by weakening the anti-national hold of caste and 'religious' fold on our people, to help the consolidation of the nation. The said item is necessarily in the nature of an 'enabling' measure: the marrying of parties compulsorily outside their caste or community (or within their gotra) is obviously absurd.

TEMPLE ENTRY IN TRAVANCORE.

Our Travancore correspondent writes :—

The maidan meeting at which Mr T. K. Madhavan and his confederates unfurled the flag of temple entry is a very significant event of the week with which are associated many important features. When in the course of the discussion on the Vaikom resolution the Government Bench said that the advocacy so strongly put in under the cloak of roads being thrown open to all classes was only the first step and that the real intention of the red-hot reformers was temple entry, there was so much of protest against temple entry and it was pompously added that they had no idea of temple entry at all. This was followed by a similar denial from no less a person than the protagonist of their movement, Mr. Gandhi himself, who, in the course of a speech in Trivandrum, said that temple entry was not their objective. How sincere and earnest these gestures were, could be seen from the fact that soon after the Vaikom Satyagraha ended, Mr. T. K Madhavan started the agitation for temple entry and travelled far into Northern India to see his Chief at Sabarmathi and also set out with his frantic appeal made to audiences in the northern cities. As a result of his interview with Mr. Gandhi he got a message from him to be read, according to his programme, at the session of the Sri Mulam Popular Assembly of which he had been made a nominated member. But he failed in his efforts and his next effort was to have that message read to as large an audience as possible. A public meeting was therefore organised, the message of Mr. Gandhi being taken on an elephant in procession to the place of meeting. The meeting was presided over by Mr. T. K. Velu Pillai, High Court Vakil and a sober writer and thinker. The first item in the programme was to read the message of Mr. Gandhi which was as follows :—

"The Reformers of Travancore have done well in the matter of untouchability. The more I think of it in terms of religion the more convinced I become that it is the greatest blot upon Hinduism. I, therefore, hope that the reformers will not rest content till every temple and every public school is open to the so-called untouchables on a footing of equality with the other Hindus."

I have only to point out in connection with this message that Mr. Gandhi was entirely misinformed in regard to schools For the process of throwing open all public schools to the pupils of all classes irrespective of caste or creed, began 20 years ago and to-day almost all the 2000 public schools maintained by the State are open to all including the untouchables and unapproachables so that the appeal of Mr. Gandhi in regard to schools which would necessarily imply a contrary inference was absolutely unnecessary. As regards the temple entry itself the position was well explained by the President in the course of his speech. He said that every one of them present there sympathised with the object of the meeting. In these days when Christianity and Mahomedanism had perfect organisations for propaganda work and have been steadily making conversions from Hinduism, it was the duty of every true Hindu to bring about a consolidation and solidarity of interests and thus organise with a view to keep their ancient religion intact. As they would see, the Hindus were decreasing in number in Travancore as a result of conversion to Christianity. It was therefore all the more necessary for them to work together to attain the object of their religion. Temple entry was no doubt near the heart of every Hindu, be he touchable or untouchable, and it was a legitimate desire of every one in the Hindu fold to seek admission to a Hindu temple. The question, be it remembered, was both a social and legal one. They all knew that the temples in Travancore were founded and richly endowed by caste Hindus and at that time there was no idea of these temples being used for purposes of worship by persons other than caste Hindus and later practice has also been the same; that was a fact whatever may be the inference drawn from it When these temples were taken over by Government with all their endowment for purposes of management the position of Government was merely that of a trustee. The legitimate claims of beneficiaries should not be prejudiced in any way. That was the point which has been engaging public attention. The question deserved looking into. And proper investigation of the problem would alone satisfy the demands of fairness and justice. What he would therefore suggest was the appointment of a committee of competent persons representing every kind of interest. The conclusion of such a committee ought to be a safe and proper guide in a consideration of the main problem of temple entry, In the meanwhile educative propaganda should be carried on with a view to enlighten the public. All elements of politics should be eschewed. It should be a purely social question. In conclusion Mr. Velu Pillai, the Chairman, appealed for the co-operation of caste Hindus and for a better understanding of the various aspects of the subject viewed from the viewpoints taken by him. After the speeches were over, a resolution was passed placing on record the need for propaganda work and for the appointment of a committee to carry out that object. The committee was also authorised to raise Rs. 25,000 for the purpose. Proceedings were then brought to a close.

WANTED INDIVIDUAL ACTION.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Kindly allow me to say a few words with regard to the letter under the above caption printed in your issue of the 27th March, by Mr. N. N. Menon in answer to the points raised in my letter of the 6th March. Mr. Menon is at liberty for argument's sake to make subtle distinctions between "leaders abdicating" and "giving up the yoke of loyalty to leaders", but, in my humble opinion, one is the inseparable counterpart of the other and amounts more or less to the same thing. He has, in his second letter, brought in new points and new interpretations of his first letter. I shall only give one instance. In the last paragraph of his first letter he says : "These can be practised without the advice of a political leader or mandate from the Congress and if the 320 millions of people will make up their minds to do as stated above (i. e., to "take to their own course of action for the realisation of the political salvation of our Motherland "without the advice of a political leader or mandate from the Congress" after "giving up our yoke of loyalty to leaders"), Swaraj is ours tomorrow." But in the second letter he tries to stand on firmer ground by saying : "What I asked the people to do is only to follow the constructive programme of the Indian National Congress side by side with the boycott of British goods." By the bye, he has ignored my request to show how the leaders prevent the masses from taking to the course of action suggested by Mr. Menon on account of quarrelling among themselves as regards party politics. However, I am glad Mr. Menon has come round to the right course and I assure him that I shall not be found wanting in supporting heartily the constructive programme in every possible manner in order to attain Swaraj as an automatic result of internal growth.

HINDU MAHASABHA AND ITS EXPERIMENTS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Already there are more than thousand and one sects and sub-sects among the supposed 220 million Hindus which number includes more than 60 million untouchables. It is not understood how these 60 million untouchables can be counted as Hindus, when these untouchables openly take beef etc., and also food at the hands of the Mohammadans and Christians, and these untouchables are treated worse than the street dogs by a major portion of the Hindu society. To swell the number of these untouchables, a few Hindu leaders are trying their very best to reconvert, under the name, Shuddhi, a few Mohammadans and Christians to Hinduism. The Hindu society from the beginning is not one homogeneous community.

When any one is taken into the Christian or Mohammadan religion he is treated as their own brother with regard and love and he is at once allowed to interdine and intermarry. It is not known by what new name these converts should be called in the Hindu caste nomenclature. Shall we call these new converts Shuddhi Hindus? It is a plain established fact that a Brahmin will never give even his outer heart or outer verandah of his house to a Non-Brahmin, much more so to a Shuddhi Hindu. Instead of uniting the innumerable Hindu sects into one homogeneous Hindu religion, the Hindu leaders are only indirectly aiding in dividing and sub-dividing the Hindu community.

Ramanuja, Vallabhachari, Chaitanya, Dayanand, Kabir, Nanak, Ram Mohan, Shraddhanand and many other Hindu saints tried and are trying their best to unite the different Hindu sects into one homogeneous community, some by removing social evils, others by introducing a new mode of worship, and still others by putting a new interpretation to the Vedas etc, but they have not only failed in their attempts but, at every attempt, a new reactionary Hindu sect has come into existence. What we find to-day among all these various Hindu sects is a very superficial Hindu Nationalism with a deep undercurrent of communitism or exclusiveness. Sangathan and Shuddhi can never give security to Hinduism, but will only give a new sect. To create a newer and better India and to bring about unity among all these re-actionary sects, the only panacea is to introduce compulsory education, interdining and intermarriage. Nothing short of this can help the nation in any way.

Yours etc.,
A NON-BRAHMIN.

ANDHRA KALAVANTALA SOCIAL REFORM CONFERENCE.

The fourth Andhra Provincial Kalavantala Social Reform Conference met on the 3rd and 4th instant in the Maruthi Hall at Gudivada under the presidentship of Mr. Surya Prakasam, B.A., L T, Cocanada. Nearly 300 delegates from all parts of the Province attended the Conference, including Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu and Mr. G. Ramachandra Rao.

MESSAGES OF SYMPATHY.

Messages of sympathy wishing the Conference success were received from Mahatma Gandhi, Poet Rabindranath Tagore, Lala Lajpat Rai, Dr. Annie Besant, Sir T. Sadasiva Iyer, the Hon Raja of Panagal, Mr. V. R. Shinde, Pandit Sithanath Tatvabhushan, Babu Hemchandra Sircar, Swami Shraddhanandji and Dr. V. Ramakrishna Rao.

Mahatmaji wrote:—Any movement which has for its object amelioration of the condition of our unfortunate sisters has my full sympathy.

Rabindranath Tagore:—I have nothing but warmest praise for the work you have undertaken and hope that the courageous efforts you are making on behalf of the helpless victims of a tyrannical pseudo-religious custom may lead to the early effacement of this stain on your community.

Lalaji:—The work you are doing is the noblest of its kind and God will reward you for it.

WELCOME ADDRESS.

The meeting opened with prayer, songs by girls and a divine service by Mr. G. Subbiah Naidu. The Reception Committee Chairman, Mr. A. Ramamurti, in welcoming the delegates said that the time had come when the position of this community should be definitely determined in society. He strongly deprecated the attempt made by others to condemn this community for a vice to which they themselves were responsible. He added that others would be committing the greatest crime if they did not help in the regeneration of the community. He asked every member of this community to give up their caste vocations, and take to spinning and weaving. He also instanced the work done by Sengundars in Coimbatore in this connection. He deplored the present fallen condition of the women but was glad that so many had been giving their daughters in marriage in the best interests of the society. He wanted the help of legislation to put down the evil practice of introducing young girls to a life of prostitution in the guise of teaching them dancing and singing.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

The President then read his printed audress in which he reviewed the present unfortunate position of the community. He deplored the degraded condition of their fallen sisters and advocated reform by establishing rescue homes. He wished that propaganda work should be carried on among the members of the community to encourage marriages of young girls and the education of boys.

SIR R. VENKATARATNAM.

Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu then addressed the Conference for one hour when he feelingly referred to the shame to which the sisters of the community were subjected to. He wanted everyone to approach the whole question with a brother's heart and consider every woman of the community as a mother. He exhorted every member of the rising community to make it a point to save at least one sister from the wrong path and to feel satisfied that he had done his duty towards the community in which he was born. He deprecated the idea of the members of the community trying to escape the stigma by disowning the community to which they belonged.

The Secretary, Mr. B. Gopala Krishnamurthy, read an interesting report in which he narrated the various activities of the standing committee and the work of reform committees in various towns.

RESOLUTIONS.

After conveying its grateful thanks to the Maharaja of Pithapuram and Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu and

SUPPLEMENT

TO

The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 14. BOMBAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1926. Price One Anna

EMIGRATION TO BRITISH GUIANA.

We published in our last issue of the Overseas Supplement Kunwar Maharaj Singh's report on his deputation to British Guiana and the Government of India's Draft Notification on the British Guiana Colonisation. The Draft Notification has since been submitted to both the Houses of the Central Legislature and passed by them after a most perfunctory debate at the fag end of their session. We cannot help thinking that both the Assembly and the Council of State have deplorably failed to correctly appraise the feelings of the country in regard to this question, and we regret they were carried away by the vision of a Greater India beyond the seas which Mr. Bhore conjured up before their minds. It was only three years ago that the Government of India refused to open the question of emigration to British Guiana and we do not know what has happened in the interval to re-open this question. Kunwar Maharaj Singh in his report remarked that "subject to certain conditions, the colonisation scheme, as elaborated by Sir Joseph Nunan in his report dated 20th November, 1924, should be accepted as both generous and practicable." How utterly exaggerated and untrue this claim is, how the so-called colonisation scheme from first to last is nothing but a labour scheme and how dangerous it is to re-open the question of British Guiana emigration at this stage, will be evident from a brief history of the scheme following. The abolition of the indenture system put the sugar planters of British Guiana in a great fix. There was immense land available but no man-power to cultivate it. So they struck upon Indian labour as a profitable field for exploitation. The result was that a deputation led by Dr. Nunan, Attorney-General of the Colony, came to India and filled the whole country with propaganda in favour of the British Guiana Colonisation scheme. Dr. Nunan's proposals were examined by the Select Committee of the old Imperial Legislative Council and the Pillai-Tiwari deputation was despatched to British Guiana to investigate the feasibility of the scheme and report on it. But the Pillai deputation, during its stay in British Guiana, met with several strange experiences. On reaching Guiana it was informed by the Governor that Dr. Nunan's scheme was neither authorised by nor acceptable to his Government, and be it remembered that it was the self-same Governor who presided over the meeting that sent the Nunan deputation that subsequently repudiated the scheme. Instead of it, the Governor offered an unsatisfactory substitute. Under this scheme emigrants in the Colony would have to engage in some agricultural work under some registered employer for a period of three years in order to qualify for grants of lands and those who wished to take up farming on their own account should go to the Colony at their own expense. No wonder the Pillai-Tiwari deputation came to the conclusion that the colonisation scheme was only a labour scheme intended to benefit the sugar interests and not Indians as was loudly trumpeted to be. Nor were the conditions of Guiana in any way satisfactory. Messrs. Pillai and Tiwari found the health conditions far from satisfactory, housing conditions on the estates bad and insufficient, the supply of drinking water deserving prompt attention, the rate of wages so low "that an average worker cannot earn a living wage" and the physical conditions governing the agricultural situation such that it is hardly possible for ordinary settlers to take up land and cultivate it successfully immediately on arrival in the Colony. In view of all this they recommended the rejection of the idea of colonisation of British Guiana under existing circumstances.

That things have not improved since Mr. Pillai reported last, is proved from an interview which he gave to the press recently. "I do not see", said Mr. Pillai, "why the Government of India should be anxious to re-open emigration to British Guiana. Indians living there are leading a wretched existence and so far as I could gather the Colonial Government has not moved an inch in the direction of ameliorating their condition as recommended in our report." Mr. Pillai doubted whether it was due to the powerful influence of the Colonial Office and he instanced in support the case of the Fiji Report which never saw the light of day because the Fiji Government and the Colonial Office were opposed to its publication As regards the reclamation of land mentioned in Government's Draft Notification, Mr. Pillai said that it is not easy to prepare land for cultivation and that, even supposing that there is some land now ready for cultivation, the existing emigrants there have a prior claim. The absence of easy communications, of any supply of good drinking water, and of drainage facilities, constitute a further handicap which no pioneer emigrant can hope to surmount. The health conditions too have not in any way improved. Mr. Pillai said that no schemes of great improvement have been taken on hand since Mr. Clementi declared in 1919 that, in the Colony, at frequent intervals the death rate exceeded the birth-rate and malaria, enteric fever, anklystomiasis, tuberculosis and intestinal troubles were prevalent to a large extent. Again, the recommendations of the Pillai report with regard to the recognition of marriages and permission to Hindus to cremate their dead have not been given effect to. As for political status, Mr. Pillai repudiated the statement made by Mr. Bhore in the Legislative Assembly that the 1923 Declaratory Ordinance had given the Indians what they wanted by citing on his behalf the demand made by Kunwar Maharaj Singh in his report for a declaration of status. Mr. Pillai ended with an appeal to the Government of India to send out a responsible Indian Officer to go and study the conditions in British Guiana before any further steps are taken and thoroughly satisfy itself that everything is safe so that the pioneer settler will not be forced after one month's stay to seek the plantations to maintain himself. We hope the Government of India will see its way to accept at least this suggestion of Mr. Pillai. The Imperial Indian Citizenship Association also in a strongly worded telegram to the Government of India, which we publish elsewhere, says that the country is opposed to the decision of the Indian Legislature on this point and requests that the Government will enable the country to consider the advisability or otherwise of the scheme before it is given effect to. The Imperial Indian Citizenship Association is certainly not an irresponsible body, it counts among its members some of the greatest authorities on the problem of Indians abroad and as such we hope the Government will see the wisdom of conceding its wishes. We need hardly say that a terrible responsibility rests upon the Government to see that British Guiana does not become another South Africa, the free hunting-ground of White Imperialism.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN SITUATION.

The long-expected debate on the South African situation in the Legislative Assembly did not come off. Mr. Jinnah who was to have moved the resolution in the Legislative Assembly on the 24th March withdrew it at the request of Sir Alexander Muddiman, so as not to weaken the Government in its delicate negotiations with the Union Government or embarrass the Paddison Deputation in its work in South Africa. Mr. Jinnah, however, wrung out a half-hearted assurance from Sir Alexander Muddiman for a special session of the Legislative Assembly in case the situation necessitated it. There is no doubt that both the Government and the people are at one in this question and one of the members of the South African Deputation who was then at Delhi bore testimony to this. The reports received from South Africa do not enable us to correctly gauge the situation there. While a Reuter's message dated the 8th April said that negotiations between the Indian Deputation and the Union Government have been shaping lately for the better than hitherto and that it is considered probable that the points at issue will be settled satisfactorily in the meantime, another message received on the same day containing an interview with Mr. Andrews causes us some disquiet. Mr. Andrews declared that "it would be a tragedy of the first magnitude in the history of the 20th century if South Africa persistently insulted and antagonised the East" and "that the time he had spent in South Africa seemed like a nightmare to him similar to those anxious days in Europe before the declaration of war in 1914." It is, therefore, extravagant to entertain any hopes of easy settlement, especially in view of such effusions as those of Mr. Tielman Ross, Minister of Justice, who, addressing a meeting at the Transvaal, declared that the Asiatic question must be settled in the interests of South Africa alone and that they were not going to listen to hints which came from India. Since the above was in type, the news from South Africa is somewhat encouraging. Good sense seems to be dawning upon the Whites. The Natal Witness in an article declares that the Asiatic Bill is a bad measure and unjustifiable from all points of view, ethical and practical. The paper suggests a conference between the Indian and Union Governments with a view of finding a more equitable solution of the Indian problem, since India's friendship is essential if at least for the sake of trade. We are also glad to hear that the Indian Deputation which is shortly to leave for India had a long interview with General Hertzog and Mr. Malan and that both the parties have arranged for a mutual friendly dinner and entertainment.

STANDARD WAGES IN CEYLON.

The following press communique from Ceylon has been issued: "With regard to the discussion which took place at Delhi in connection with the question of the Standard Wage on estates, it is hereby notified for general information that the discussion resulted in a general agreement regarding the method of establishing standard rates of wages on Ceylon estates. It is proposed to introduce the necessary legislation in due course." This cryptic communique, however, does not enlighten us on the nature of the agreement arrived at and it is much to be regretted that the Governments of India and Ceylon should have resorted to this hole and corner method instead of taking the manlier course of taking the public into their confidence. The comments of the Hindu, Madras, on the question of the standard wage in Ceylon, are very illuminating. In the first place, the basis of the standard wage as now fixed at 50, 40 and 30 cents respectively for men, women and children is quite inadequate. It was fixed not after consultation with the representatives of labour and taking all circumstances into consideration, but more or less in an arbitrary way. The family budgets which the Indian Agent relied on for the calculation of the standard wage were budgets based on a starvation standard of living which took no notice whatsoever of the provision for expenditure on objects like education for the young, old age pensions and sickness which the wages scale in no civilized country ignores to-day. The inadequacy of this standard wage is well brought out by the fact that the Government of India itself realised this when it at first insisted on a 10 per cent increase on the standard proposed by the Indian Agent, but finally gave up this claim in consideration for a grain allowance which practically amounts to nothing. Again the benefit of the proposed standard, inadequate as it is, cannot even be shared by more than two-fifths of the Indian population of the island, and nothing can prevent the planters from further restricting the beneficiaries of the proposed standard. Perhaps, the most important of all the objections against the proposal is that it applies only to time-workers who form 60 per cent of the labour force in the Colony and not to piece-workers and the planters, if they choose, can discharge those engaged as time workers and appoint persons in their stead on the discredited piece-work system. And, last of all, though there is a provision that the standard wage will be reduced with the lowering of the cost of living, there is no corresponding provision for raising it with a rise in the cost of living. For these and other reasons, we join with our contemporary in appealing to the Governments concerned to publish all the facts of the case and proceed in the light of public criticism.

IMMIGRATION LAW OF U. S. A.

The following is a declaration by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of the United States of America regarding the Asiatic Exclusion Section of the Immigration Law of 1924:—

The Asiatic Exclusion section of the Immigration Law of 1924 has created an international situation that causes us grave concern. The manner of its enactment, the abrupt abrogation of the Gentlemen's Agreement without the conference requested by Japan, the insistence of a discriminatory law which Asiatics resent as humiliating, unjust and unchristian, and the affront to Japan's prestige as one of the great and equal nations of the world, have combined to wound and grieve a friendly nation.

Many expressions of resentment and of disappointment in the idealism, brotherhood and goodwill of America have come from India and China as well as from Japan. While Asiatics know and say that nothing they can do can change the situation or the law, they repeatedly declare their trust in the sense of justice which many of them still believe inheres in the American people and their confidence that the American people will ultimately set this matter right.

The careful consideration of this important and far reaching problem leads us to make the following observations:—

1. No Asiatic nation was or is asking for the privilege of immigration.

realpatidar.com

2. It was and still is possible to assure full protection from all dangers of Asiatic labour immigration and at the same time to give Asiatics complete equality of race treatment.

3. A fundamental factor in the situation is the recent interpretation of our law of naturalization whereby eligibility to citizenship has been limited to persons of the white race and to persons of African birth or descent. This law was enacted when these modern problems were not before the nation. This law debars as unfit for citizenship on the basis of colour alone persons of all other races, whatever their individual character or qualifications.

4. The immigration law of 1924 provides that on July 1, 1927, a new quota principle for the regulation of immigration shall come into force. If that quota principle were applied to Japanese, Chinese and East Indians, the number of immigrants annually admissible from those countries to the United States would be 150, 100, and 100 respectively.

5. President Coolidge has declared in his last message to Congress that "we ought to have no prejudice against an alien because he is an alien"; that "the standard which we apply to our inhabitants is that of manhood"; and that "it is fundamental of our institutions that they seek to guarantee to all our inhabitants the right to live their own lives under the protection of public law", which means "the full right to liberty and equality before the law without distinction of race and creed".

In view of the foregoing facts and observations we are impelled to record our convictions

1. That the dictates of humanity and the welfare of the world demand the recognition by all governments of the brotherhood of man and the inherent right of all nations and races to treatment free from humiliation.

2. That the United States cannot afford to over-ride the principle of essential human equality embedded in the Declaration of Independence.

3. That no nation can afford needlessly to flout and wound the feelings of other nations and peoples.

4. That the maintenance of justice, humanity, courtesy and goodwill between the people of the Far West and the Far East is essential to the permanent peace of the Pacific and of the world.

5. That we recognize the need of restriction of immigration in order to conserve American standards of labour and living.

6. That Asiatics in the United States should be accorded their rights as human beings and also their rights to which they are entitled by the letter and the spirit of the treaties under which they came to the United States.

7. That, in the words of former Ambassador Woods, this action of Congress referred to above was an international catastrophe.

8. That we see at present no better solution of the problem than the application to Japan, China and India of the quota law as it comes into force in 1927, which would result in the annual admission of 350 immigrants from those three sections of Orient.

We, therefore, recommend to all right-thinking and peace-loving citizens of the United States the importance of giving these matters earnest study to the end that in due time appropriate steps may be taken to re-establish right relations between the United States and the peoples of the Orient.

INDIANS ABROAD : SOME CENSUS FIGURES.

The following is the concluding portion of the article on the above subject by Mr. J. B. Sen contributed to the Servant of India relating to Indians in Trinidad and Tobago and Mauritius. We regret that owing to pressure of space we cou'd not give publicity to it earlier. The earlier articles on the subject were published in our issues of September and October 1925.

Trinidad and Tobago.

The area of Trinidad and Tobago is 1976 sq. miles. Of the total population of 3,65,913 enumerated in 1921, the East Indians were 1,21,420 or nearly 33 per cent. The Indian population according to parentage and birth place was constituted as follows :

|---|---|
| Natives of India—31,354 | |
| Born in Trinidad : | |
| Indian parents | 87,837 |
| Indian fathers | 1,580 |
| Indian mothers | 649 |
| Total | 1,21,420 |

The census of 1921 shows an increase of 32,361 persons over the enumeration of 1911, or an increase of 9·7 per cent. in the total population. The origin of the Indian colony in Trinidad dates back to 1845 when the first set arrived and took work under indenture. They came at regular seasons until 1848. From 1849 to 1851 there was a suspension of arrivals, but from 1852 the arrivals continued with more or less regularity until 1916. From 1917 no returns of arrivals have been made and from this time the cessation must be fixed. The average increase in the five periods from 1871 to 1901 was 10,133 or 1,013 per year. In the period 1901-11 this average dropped to 2,916 or 291 per year. In the period ended by this census although a few arrivals were recorded in the early years of the decade these ceased entirely and a fairly regular outflow has taken place (Census of the Colony of Trinidad and Tobago, 1921, p. 31). The East Indian population might be arranged thus according to sex :

| | Males | Females |
|---|---|---|
| Natives of India | 23,866 | 7,488 |
| Indian parents | 42,057 | 39,780 |
| Indian father only | 824 | 756 |
| Indian mother only | 330 | 316 |

According to religious persuasion : Hindus—88,404, Mahomedads—17,691, Christians—14,343, others—982. The following figures from the professions and occupations census are interesting :

| | Indians | Non-Indians |
|---|---|---|
| Public officers | 54 | 1,030 |
| Police | 8 | 857 |
| Teachers | 284 | 1,994 |

| | (Males 223, Females 61) | (Males 880, Females 1,135) |
|---|---|---|
| Lawyers | 5 | 146 |
| Medical profession | 1 | 231 |
| Managers and sub-managers and overseers | 257 | 1,921 |
| Mechanics and handicraftsmen | 992 | 17,569 |

It will be seen that Indians have a far less important place in the above professions than is expected from their numerical position. Of the Indian population 49,380 were returned as agricultural labourers. The literate population among the East Indians forms only 126 of the total. The following is an abstract of the literacy or rather illiteracy position:

| | Males | Females | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| Able to read and write | 10,685 | 2,878 | 13,563 |
| Able to read only | 1,321 | 508 | 1,829 |
| Unable to read or write | 55,058 | 50,957 | 106,015 |

Of the 293 primary schools 49 were under the Government. There were two colleges for boys and one for girls to provide secondary education. The total revenue of the colony (1922) was £1,661,607. The total expenditure on elementary education (including private contribution) was £134,897. The colony has a Legislative Council consisting of 10 officials and 11 non-officials, all nominated. How many of them are Indians is not known; probably only two or three.

MAURITIUS:—

The colony of Mauritius is 720 sq. miles in area. The total population enumerated in 1921 was 3,76,485 against 3,68,791 in 1911. The Indian population for the respective periods was 2,65, 524 and 2,57, 697. It will be seen that Indian immigrants and their descendants constitute the majority of the population, comprising 70 per cent. of the inhabitants of the island. The birth and death rates among Indians (1922), were 35·9 and 33·3 per mille respectively. Of the total population 1,39,150 were males and 1,26,374 females. The following table shows their conjugal condition.

| | Males | Female |
|---|---|---|
| Persons legally married by civil status officers | 14,460 | 16,432 |
| Persons married according to religious rites but not before a civil status officer | 12,763 | 13,807 |
| Persons living together as man and wife in permanent unions, but not married either religiously or civilly | 19,136 | 21,382 |

On the conjugal condition of Indians the census commissioner makes the following remarks: 'The large number of persons living in concubinage are not to be considered as living immoral lives according to their eastern standards: the unions are to all intents and purposes permanent ones, large families being born of them. The Indian community is undoubtedly influenced to a great extent by early marriage, and caste prejudices. Widows cannot remarry and the different castes do not contract religious or civil unions among themselves.' (Report of the Census Enumeration, Mauritius, 1921, p. 9). 'Of the couples living as man and wife in the Indian population 68 per cent have been through either a religious or civil ceremony... These returns cannot be interpreted as indicating a condition of immorality, although they should lead the most influential members of community to exert their influence with a view to remedying a state of affairs which cannot do otherwise than reflect on the moral well-being of the offspring. The new legislation passed during the last decade gives facilities to all ministers of the religion for fulfilling the formalities required by both the religious and the civil authorities.' (Ibid. p. 12). As will be seen from the following, the percentage of civilly married Indians in 1924 was considerably greater than in 1911:—1911, 8·89 males, 10·11 females; 1921, 12·28 males, 13·98 females. The Indian population, arranged according to religious persuasions, was as follows:—Hindus—187,662, Mahomedans—42,694, Christians—16,678, others—18,490.

The number of primary schools in the colony was 151 made up of 57 Government schools, 66 Roman Catholic, 19 Church of England, 2 Presbyterian, 4 Hindoo, and 3 Mahomedan institutions. Calculating the number of Indian children of school-going age as 15 per cent of the total Indian population, out of nearly 40,000 children, only 16,398 were attending primary schools. Of them 13,863 were boys and only 2,535 girls. (The figures are taken from the annual report on primary education, Mauritius, 1923.) Primary education is free in the colony but not compulsory. The total revenue of the Colony in 1921-22 amounted to Rs. 26,307, 658 of which Rs. 1,095,734 was spent on education. The council of Government consists of the Governor and 27 members of whom 10 are elected, 8 are ex-officio and 9 are nominated. Though subject to no political disabilities no Indian has ever sat on the Council.

Bombay Retaliates on South Africa : The Bombay Legislative Council at the close of its session last month, passed a resolution recommending to Government not to purchase coal or any other article from any part of South Africa which gives a unfavourable treatment to Indians. The Government Member said that there was no necessity for such a resolution, as it was always the policy of his Government to buy Indian coal, but that he had no objection if the Council passed the resolution.

Help for South African Indians : Mrs. Naidu is forming a strong committee for the purpose of an All India Collection Fund for the cause of the Indians in South Africa. Originally she fixed the 13th April as the date but she has postponed it to a later date which is to be duly notified.

Protest against Anti-Asiatic Bill: Both at Poona and Yeotmal meetings were held on the 13th instant under the auspices of the Congress Committee in which all political parties were represented to express their emphatic protest against the recent anti-Asiatic Bill of South Africa and their sympathy to the suffering Indians in South Africa.

Trading Rights in Transvaal: On the 29th March Mr. John Scurr drew attention in the House of Commons to the fact that in the town of Balfour in the Transvaal, Indians were refused trading licenses as a result of which interests amounting to £ 40,000 were threatened and called upon the Government to make enquiries in regard to this question. Earl Winterton, replying on behalf of Government, said that in this matter the Government of India was in direct communication with the Union Government.

Evils of Indenture: Mr. Andrews interviewed in S. Africa by a Reuter's correspondent said that the records showed indisputably a record of evil of the Indian immigration under the indenture system, how India from 1828 onwards had been reluctant to allow Indians to go to Natal and had twice in 1858 and in 1866 refused permission, but in each case had yielded to pressure that had been brought to bear. He pointed out that even as late as 1911 the employers had sent a deputation imploring the Indian Government to continue the indentured emigration, but India had refused. By indentured system Natal had incurred a debt from Indians who could not be thrown out of the country as a man threw away an orange peel after taking out all juice. This was neither fair nor just. India herself, he said, must take part of the responsibility for allowing this evil system.

I. I. C. A. on Br. Guiana Emigration: The following telegram has been addressed by the Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association to the Government of India: "The Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association views with alarm the draft notification of the Government of India legalising the emigration of unskilled labour to British Guiana. The Council has reason to believe that only three years ago the Government of India was against emigration to British Guiana, because of the absence of communication and good drinking water in that colony. It will, therefore, be grateful to be informed when and how these difficulties were eliminated. Dewan Bahadur Pillai, who headed an official Deputation to British Guiana a few years ago, in a recent message to the press, has emphatically opposed all emigration to British Guiana until the existing disabilities to which the Indian settlers are subjected are removed. Moreover, the Indian settlers in British Guiana would not favour emigration from India, as they require time to settle down and raise themselves from the prevailing state of depression and backwardness. The Council further hopes that the Government of India will enable the country to consider the advisability or otherwise of the scheme before it is given effect to and is of opinion that the country is opposed to the decision of the Indian Legislature."

others for their help and sympathy and His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad for issuing a firman prohibiting the holding of nautch parties in his dominions on all religious and social ceremonies, the Conference requested all to help the Educational Council at Guntur and the Hindu Yuvathi Saranalayam at Kilpauk and Hindu Yuvathi Journal.

The Conference reloved to form District and Taluq Committees as branches to the Mahasabha and to carry on propaganda by appointing pracharakas.

THE YOUTH SECTION.

(By Marguerite Louis.)

Shall Humanity Perish?

In October 1923, a number of young men and women, most of whom were members of the No More War Movement, met together to discuss how best they could achieve their ideal of a war-free world. They recognised that war was the greatest enemy of true progress, a denial of the sacredness of human personality and the very antithesis of all the ideals which Youth holds dear. Realising that, by the development of modern methods of slaughter, war would destroy mankind unless it were itself abolished, they resolved to devote themselves to combatting war in all its aspects and specially to spreading among young people the idea of personal resistance to war. They believed that they could more effectively achieve the latter aim as a separate Youth organisation than as members of an adult body, and so they decided to form a Youth Section of the No More War Movement. In common with the members of the parent organisation, all those joining the Youth Section declare their intention of refusing all forms of war service.

Youth will Build the Future.

The first public pronouncement of the Youth Section was a manifesto issued to the press of Great Britain on New Year's Day, 1924, in which it was declared that war is not inevitable but can be abolished by inspiring men and women to work in the spirit of service instead of the spirit of greed and by educating them to establish an international order based on the fellowship ideal The Youth Section has no negative aim. It does not advocate simply resistance to war when war comes, though that is indeed an important part of its programme. It seeks to remove the causes of war. It believes that the only way to prevent war is to eliminate the war spirit from our lives and to replace it by the spirit of fellowship and goodwill. Its members desire to work actively in building up a new world from which force and violence shall be banished.

Active Co-operation with other Youth Organizations.

This spirit of reconciliation, of active co-operation and goodwill, which is to eradicate war, must find expression in all our thoughts and actions. Differences of opinion must not be allowed to lead to hostility but to a greater effort for mutual understanding. The Youth Section, therefore, desires to get into touch with other young people's organisations and to discuss with them its ideals. It is willing to send speakers to other societies, to contribute articles to youth magazines and to take part in conferences on subjects bearing on its aims. It is in fact already doing these things and looks for wider opportunities of explaining its faith. For instance, it has on two occasions taken part in the organisation of the Peace Week of Youth. Harold Bing, Chairman of the Youth Section from 1924-25, was Chairman of the Peace Week of Youth Committee in 1924 and 1925. Groups of the Youth Section have been established in various parts of the country and these groups organise meetings, study circles, language classes etc Other developments in the Youth Section have been its week-end camps, arranged so as to give opportunities to members to meet each other and discuss the pacifist faith and its application to everyday problems. Camps are sometimes arranged in conjunction with other youth organisations. Folk dancing and play reading also form part of camp-life.

The Youth Section has a correspondence scheme by which it puts its members into touch with youths abroad. Contacts have already been established in Europe, Scandinavia, India, China, Japan, America, Russia and Australasia. The Youth Section is not attached to any religious church or sect and makes no sectarian declaration in its statement of principles, yet it is not anti-religious. Its members are drawn from many Christian sects and include also members of other religions, as well as some who make no specific profession of religion. At the same time it is imbued with a strongly religious spirit in most of its activities. The religion of the Youth Section is love of its fellow-men. Desiring to form an integral part of the great Youth movement which to-day is manifesting itself everywhere, the Youth Section is affiliated to the British Federation of Youth It is also in correspondence with Youth movements in other parts of the world, and through the War Resisters' International is affiliated to about thirty similar organisations in twenty different countries.

Youth Must Act Now.

The present is a critical period in the history of the human race. Are the nations to commence over again the mad competition in armaments which led to the last war and will inevitably lead to another and greater calamity, or will they abandon the methods of force and violence and turn their steps into the way of peace? Youth must make its voice heard in favour of a courageous policy of disarmament and international friendship and must be prepared to translate its principles into deeds. The Youth Section does not wish to withdraw members from other Youth organisations which are working in their own way towards the building up of a new social order in which everyone shall have the opportunity of full and free development. It is important, however, that every young man and woman who has decided to resist war should make that decision known so that our influence may be fully felt in bringing about the change of public opinion which will lead to universal disarmament.

THE TURKISH WOMEN OF TO-DAY.

Mrs. Adnam, better known under her maiden name of Halide Edib Hanoum, a member of the Nationalist Party in Turkey and one of that country's most prominent women, gave an interesting lecture in a London drawing-room recently on "The Turkish Women of To-day".

Mrs Adnam denied that she had been made Minister of Education in the first Turkish Cabinet of the Turkish Republic. The matter had been considered but never actually came to pass. She also denied that she had fought in the Turkish Army She certainly wore the uniform of a sergeant, and was in command of the transport department, but, beyond this and writing the Turkish soldiers letters for them, she lived the life of a civilian.

Mrs. Adnam repudiated the erroneous western ideas of Turkish women, and said they shared the same fundamental human nature with English and American and all other women of the world. It was also widely believed that every Turkish woman lived in an environment of polygamy and seclusion, whereas almost ideal equality prevailed between the sexes in the tents of primitive Turkish tribes There was no polygamy and no divorce in ancient Turkey, and everywhere a single moral standard prevailed.

Polygamy Arrested.

In a period of decadence polygamy became rife and the value of women became lessened, but this deterioration was arrested by the reforms of Islamism. Mahomed limited the number of wives to four, and gave women certain property rights which were the envy of the Western world for centuries. In the early years of Islamism Turkish women became noted as teachers of law and literature and as poets and writers.

The year 1839 marked the first preliminary stage in the emancipation of Turkish women. This year marked a great reform when schools were provided for girls and women and many pens were exercised upon the question of women's rights. In 1876 a training school for women teachers was established in Constantinople and many primary schools were built both in the capital and in the provincial centres.

English Teachers.

Greater culture was now expected from girls' teachers and a number of governesses were imported into private houses. These were chiefly English, the Turks at that period regarding English women as models of perfection. The Turkish Revolution of 1908 was almost entirely due to the emancipation of Turkish women. Women's clubs were formed for philanthropy, self-education, hygiene and infant welfare. Day and night schools were established and to-day there are practically no illiterates among Turkish women.

Women in War Time.

The Balkan war in 1912 brought Turkish women into still greater prominence They held protest meetings against the current atrocities then prevailing and succoured the hapless refugees who fled to Constantinople. One public meeting, held in the university at that time, was attended by 5,000 women, who stripped themselves of their jewellery and pooled it for a relief fund for the refugees. Women also took up nursing at this period with much success.

In the great war of 1914 Turkish women took the places of men engaged at the front and entered administrative offices, trade and commerce and tilled the land. In 1916 the Turkish family laws were drastically altered. The harem was abolished with the exception of that of the Sultan's and polygamy was forbidden. Every Turkish woman upon her marriage, received a comprehensive contract insuring her certain rights.

In 1916, too, women were admitted to the Turkish University, although the medical and legal professions remained closed to them. They were opened, however, to women in the following year which also marked the beginning of genuine co-education in Turkey. The origin of the Nationalist movement in Turkey Mrs. Adnam also ascribed almost entirely to the women's increasing influence. Women fought side by side with men in the army, and later attended to the whole of the transport arrangements.

At a somewhat later date the abolition of the dividing curtains between the sexes in tram cars, boats and other public places was decreed and both sexes now go about freely in the streets. Women may now also appear on the stage as actresses. They shingle their hair and dress in European fashion except that they do not always adopt the European hat, preferring instead to wind a silk hand-kerchief about their heads.

The new Turkish woman, however, has no political status as yet and Mrs. Adnam was of the opinion that they should be allowed to exercise the franchise but thought the duties of deputies in the Assembly or Turkish Parliament should be postponed for a little while longer, until women had gained more political experience.

WOMEN AND COUNTRY'S SERVICE.

During her short stay at Allahabad Mrs. Naidu addressed many meetings, but the most interesting of all was the ladies' meeting held under the auspices of the Mahila Samiti on the evening of March 23. It was a crowded meeting representing all classes and religions, nearly all the enlightened ladies of the city being present.

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu addressing the ladies in Urdu said at the very outset that she was ashamed to look around her as she could see very little Swadeshi cloth. Hence her first message was Swadeshi. She spoke feelingly of all the misery prevalent in the country and said it was due to poverty and hunger. These were the two curses of India and it was the duty of every individual to contribute something towards their extinction. That could only be done by wearing Swadeshi cloth and thus relieving the misery and want of some poor country-women. To say that Swadeshi cloth and khaddar were too thick and coarse for their delicate bodies was wrong. Mahatma Gandhi did not ask them to wear coarse khaddar. All he wanted was that they should wear khaddar—which meant any hand-spun and hand-woven cloth. She exhorted the ladies to do some practical work to relieve the poverty of the country and not merely to talk about it. Mere lip-sympathy without action could not have a salutary effect. She also said that a spirit of Swadeshi inculcated and fostered patriotism. We should learn a lesson in this respect from other nations Even the Queen of England refused to include any cloth that was not made in the United Kingdom in the trousseau of her daughter Princess Mary. In Iraq also no foreign cloth was used. Every nation thus considered its own interest first. It was in the interests of India that all foreign cloth should be excluded. Would the women of India because of their love for fineries ignore the interests of the country?

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu then dwelt at some length on what she called the message of her heart. She was a wandering minstrel whose lute had but one melody and that was unity. She believed that, if the women of India once realized the danger of disunity and were touched by the melody of unity, all the petty factions among men would cease. Mrs. Naidu said that women were the guardians of the destiny of the nation. She protested most vigorously against men discussing in social conferences whether women should be educated or not, and whether they were to be kept in purdah or not. She said that women must now come forward and demand their rights and all discussions whether concessions should be granted to them or not must cease. The women of India were on the whole uneducated. There might be a stray graduate here and there but we could not judge all by these exceptions. We could not have an idea of the bulk of the Himalaya mountains merely by looking at its peak. Thus it was the duty of all women to contribute something towards the uplift of their sisters. Let them not rest content in their ignorance. Those few who were educated must consider it their bounden duty to educate their ignorant sisters. They had achieved knowledge and if that knowledge went to rust in them their education would be wasted. Unless the mass of Indian womanhood was educated the nation could not advance—as after all the nation was made up of homes and woman was always and shall always be the centre of the home. —The Leader, Allahabad.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Children's Home in Madras: The Madras Children's Society has recently founded a Children's Home at Poonamallee and we are glad to see that the Madras Government has certified that it is fit to receive children convicted under the Children's Act.

Chair of Politics in Madras: A public appeal has been recently issued to found a Chair of Politics in the Madras University in honour of the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri.

Prime Minister of Indore: The Government of India have confirmed the appointment of Rai Bahadur S M. Bapna as Prime Minister of Indore.

Sylhet Transferred to Bengal: It is understood that the Secretary of State has sanctioned the transfer of Sylhet to Bengal The whole town is jubilant over this.

Mr C. R. Das's Biography: It is stated that Prithvichandra Roy's life of Mr. C R. Das has been completed. Besides being a complete memoir of the life of the late Mr. Das, the book will be a comprehensive review and record of the history of Bengal for the last 30 years. It will be published in London before autumn this year.

"Support Indian Industries": We are glad to see that the Government of India have acceded to the request of certain gentlemen to copy the British Post Office and use the obliterating stamp "Support Indian Industries" on letters that pass through Indian Post Offices. The initiative in the matter seems to have been taken by Mr. A. B. Datta of Calcutta. It is stated that the Director General first refused his request, but on his writing to Sir B. N. Mitra, the Member-in charge, the suggestion was adopted.

Prohibition in Cochin: Mr. K. T. Mathew, member representing the Kunnamkulam Constituency in the Cochin Legislative Council, and Member, Executive Committee of the All-India Prohibition League, Delhi, intends shortly to introduce in the Cochin Council the Cochin Local Option and Prohibition Bill. The object of the Bill is to promote Temperance in the Cochin State, with a view to reach the goal of prohibition at an early date.

Poor Houses for the Destitute: At a recent sitting of the U. P. Council a non-official resolution was adopted recommending to the Government to invite the attention of the local bodies to the desirability of instituting poor houses at convenient centres for incapacitated poor and of providing free education, technical or otherwise, for their children The Government was further asked to pay reasonable grants-in-aid to local bodies for this purpose.

Madras and Mussalman Wakf Act: A press communique in a recent number of the "Fort St. George Gazette" says that the Government are considering the question of extending the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Act, 1923, to the Madras Presidency Persons interested in the matter are invited to submit their views to the Government before the 1st June 1926. The communications should be addressed to the Secretary to Government, Local Self-Government Department, Fort St. George.

Aga Khan and the Untouchables: A cable to the Englishman says that the Aga Khan, interviewed at Nairobi regarding the recent report from India that he intends using £ 1,000,000 for converting the "untouchables" to Mahomedanism, said he never dreamt of such a project. "All my life" he said, "I have been an ardent believer in Hindu-Muslim unity. I firmly believe that the sooner the high caste Hindu accepts the "untouchable" as a caste the better for them and all India, irrespective of religion."

Turkisation and Indianisation: The Forward writes: Some time ago we referred to the "Turkisation" at present going on in Constantinople. Turks do not stand any nonsense and insist on foreign corporations exploiting Turkey to take in Turks in their employment. For instance, the Indian Bank has been ordered to bring up its percentage of Turkish employees to 50 by March 6. In India we are fed merely on false hopes about "increasing association of Indians" in public administration, in trade and commerce. So long as we cannot wrest political power like the Turks, these hopes must remain unrealised. "Incapacity," "lack of technical training," "lack of initiative", do not and cannot stand in the way of "Turkisation', but they do here.

Excise Committee in Pudukottah: The Government have issued a communique, announcing the appointment of an Excise Committee consisting of 3 official and 4 non-official elected members of the local Legislative Council, Messrs. A Radhakrishna Iyer (Chairman), S Subrahmanya Iyer, G. Sundara Iyer, V. Govindaswamy Naidu, R. Arunachella Ambalayar, R. Krishnamachari and Kailasam Ambalayar, to examine the question of drink and submit a report to the Legislative Council as to the best means of combating the evil and as to the policy to be pursued by the State. They have asked the Dewan Peishkar and the Salt Superintendent to render all assistance to the Committee.

Betting and Gambling: The following resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Cawnpore Missionary Society has been sent to us for publication by the Secretary: "We as a body of Christian workers assembled at a regular meeting of the Cawnpore Missionary Conference, wish to record our anxiety regarding the growth of betting and gambling and allied evils and our emphatic disapproval of all such practices. In particular we would draw attention to the prevalence of lotteries and raffles and we would appeal to all Christian bodies to discourage actively all such practices among their own members. Especially we would appeal to all Christian institutions, who have been in the habit of raising money by such methods, to discontinue the same."

Education of Depressed Classes: The Education Department of the Lahore Municipality is busy awakening the masses to the benefits of education. During March 27 meetings have been held at various places and educational slides shown. Bhangis (sweepers), Pariahas and Purbias who attended in large numbers have evinced great interest in education. A Hindi class has been opened for Pariahas and Purbias who are also giving their names for Getting into Port: The Non-Co-operation movement created a political solidarity which lasted just a year and a half. When the year within which Swaraj was promised expired, the people's belief had to be kept up by vehement movements of civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes, which, of course, had to be abandoned at the last moment. The imprisonment of Mahatma Gandhi left the Congress without a leader. Mr. C. Rajagopala Charya tried his best to fill the vacant gadi, but the late Mr. C. R. Das unfurled the flag of revolt, and Mr. Rajagopala was no match for him and Pandit Motilal Nehru who had joined him. A series of compromises were arranged and effected, the No-Changers in each case giving in till at last the Swarajists captured the Congress machinery. When Mahatma Gandhi was released, he made an attempt to take the Congress back to where he had left it, but when he found that this was impossible, he completely surrendered to the Swarajists. Mr. Das' death afforded him a sentimental reason for associating himself more actively with the Swarajists, and for a few days, it almost seemed as if he would formally proclaim himself the leader of the Party in Mr. Das' place. But it was soon clear that the Swarajists, while they appreciated the value of his support, preferred to have it in the background. Mahatmaji loyally accepted the position of political adviser to Pandit Motilal Nehru who became the leader of the Party, and the Swaraj Party was formally given a power of attorney to act for the Congress in political matters. Within a few months of this settlement, the Responsive Co-operationists raised the standard of revolt and were threatened by the Pandit with dire pains and penalties. But he soon realised that he had gone too far, and that if he persisted in his dictatorial method, the Swaraj Party would soon be reduced to himself and Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar—a party of two like the one which John Bright likened to a hairy poodle of which it was difficult to say which was the head and which the tail. Meanwhile, too, the extra-Congress political parties were moving towards a combination to which the Responsivists showed distinct signs of gravitating. The junction of the forces had to be prevented at any cost, and at Sabarmati last week in the presence of Mahatma Gandhi, Swarajists and Responsivists arrived at a compromise. The principal feature of it is that the Swarajists have materially modified their attitude towards the Reforms which, they now allow, could and should be worked under certain conditions. This is all to the good. The next inevitable step is to accept the position of the constitutional parties and, make a bonfire of civil disobedience and kindred watchwords and settle down to a sober, sensible programme to obtain self-government by deserving it by steady, constructive work through methods calculated to strengthen and not to weaken the law-abiding instincts of the Indian people.

Sagotra Marriages: A correspondent commenting in the Hindu of the 7th instant on our article on Sagotra marriages mildly reprimands us for suggesting legislation to make such marriages valid. He sounds a note of warning that if legislation is resorted to to reform a community before it has realised its need, that legislation will remain "a mere dead letter." The correspondent of the Hindu need have no apprehension on that score. The particular measure proposed would be, in its very nature, a validating one. It would not require any one to marry in his or her own gotra but it would give freedom to those who wish to avail themselves of it. If a community has to depend for its social progress on the general awakening of its members, it may have to wait long. Measures such as the one proposed aim at removing the existing and meaningless restrictions that operate against the freedom of the individual. Stray cases, such as the one in the Punjab—and who knows there may be others that have not come to light?—go to prove, if anything, that there are people labouring under the disability of this time-worn rule of Hindu law. Fear of legal consequences prevents them from acting according to their convictions. Once the law is placed on the statute-book, it will not remain ineffectual. The same argument was also advanced against the Widow Remarriage Act and the Age of Consent Act. It is needless to point out what a blessing they have been to those who would otherwise be victims of an evil tradition.

Kanyakubja Brahmins' Conference: It is unfortunate that even at this time of the day there should be found people to oppose sea-voyages on religious grounds. The prohibition of sea-voyage has for some time past ceased to be a live issue in Hindu social reform, owing to the tacit acceptance by the wonderful commonsense of the Hindu community of sea-voyages as a necessity of modern life. But there are here and there backwaters which the new spirit has failed to reach. At the All-India Conference of Kanyakubja Brahmins held at Allahabad on April 14th, a resolution was hotly discussed whether a voyage to a foreign country was to be permitted to a member of the community. The Conference eventually came to the conclusion that such voyages were not to be condemned, provided the person who went to a foreign country showed repentance by doing prayaschit on his return. That the Kanyakubjas themselves, an intensely orthodox and conservative community, realise that it is not possible to prohibit sea-voyages absolutely, is a distinct sign of the social awakening that has come over them, and we are sure that the importance attached to the expiatory ceremony will in course of time fall into disuse as it has already done in many parts of the country. In marked contrast to this attitude of the community, stands the resolution adopted by the Conference expressing regret at the breaking up of the third Brahmin battalion. It was felt that by that act the Government had deprived the community of the opportunity of helping Government at times of need and of maintaining its martial spirit and a Committee was appointed to make proper representations to the Viceroy and the Commander-in Chief.

Publicity and Divorce: "I am afraid that to-day the standard of public opinion is not high, and I am sure there is room for a great deal of work in educating and improving the public judgment. While I shall certainly not be remiss in invoking the law in appropriate cases, I cannot help feeling that legal action will not provide the remedy unless at the same time more is done to mobilize public opinion in a general attempt to raise the standard of taste and judgment." In these words the Home Secretary for England is reported to have expressed himself lately in reply to an enquiry regarding the power of the law to prevent the publication and sale of indecent books in Great Britian. What applies to books applies equally to newspapers and periodicals and there has been an increasing tendency on their part to increase their circulation by publishing divorce proceedings in unnecessary detail. In order to deal with this evil, the House of Commons has recently passed the second reading of a Bill known as the Judicial Proceedings Bill which seeks to forbid the publication of details calculated to injure public morals, only salient particulars of divorce and similar proceedings being permitted, the penalty being imprisonment not exceeding three months or fine not exceeding £500 or both. It is not easy to forecast how this measure will operate in practice. Opinions must differ as to what are essential and what are excessive particulars. Also, the deterrent effect of publicity will to a great extent be lost as a result of this law.

Right of the Depressed Classes to Use Public Roads: We print in our news columns today the proceedings of a case instituted by some of the caste Hindus of Ambalapuzha in Travancore for a perpetual injunction against certain members of the depressed classes restraining them from using the public roads till recently closed to them by long custom. When orthodoxy found that Government was no longer prepared to uphold its exclusive claim during the Satyagraha at Ambalapuzha for establishing its right to use the public roads round the temple, it finally fell back upon the legal authorities for a clear decision on the matter. The extract from the judgment lays it down clearly that "the custom upon which the plaintiffs rely in support of their rights is unreasonable and opposed to the sense of the public right and the enlightened view among the people." This decision shows how broadminded judicial authorities with progressive views can co-operate with the reformers in all just and righteous claims which, otherwise, cannot be enforced for want of legal recognition.

A Children's Magazine: There are not many Children's magazines in India. Therefore, every addition to juvenile journalism, worth the name, should be hailed with pleasure. It is in this spirit that we accord a hearty welcome to the Children's News, a new monthly published at Delhi for the benefit of the young. It has already completed its first volume and is in the course of the second. The issue under notice is a double number containing many contributions of interest, some from the pen of students. Some of its pages are devoted to sports and children's competitions. But it is very sparsely illustrated. In a magazine of this kind, illustrations which carry a special appeal to the young should form a distinct feature. Otherwise, the Children's News is a good medium for keeping children of all parts in touch with one another and for spreading among them the ideals of "Love, service and sacrifice" for which it stands.

Slavery in Jodhpur: It is indeed a pity that slavery should still linger in some parts of the country. The All-India Raona Rajput Mahasabha, Ajmer, has sent a memorial to H. H. the Maharaja of Jodhpur protesting against the continuance of the most pernicious practice known as "Slavery of Raonas" under which the master of the Raonas has the absolute right of extracting work from them, of setting them free at will and calling them back on necessity and of giving away the daughters of Raonas or whole families of them as dowry for Rajput daughters, even if the Raona be serving elsewhere at the time. We hope the enlightened ruler of Jodhpur will follow in the footsteps of the independent State of Nepal and of the Hukawng Valley Expedition which has just returned after successfully emancipating all the slaves even at considerable sacrifice of money, and banish slavery from his State.

A Wholesome Example: We hope the punishment of two months' hard labour awarded by the third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, to a man who branded his wife with a poker for refusing to bring hot water to him, will serve as a good lesson to those who consider their wives as nothing more than "chattel or vessels to be treated with brute force," as the Magistrate remarked. It is but right that the courts of law should intervene in such cases and mould a healthy public opinion where one does not already exist and a onerous responsibility rests also upon social service agencies and workers to instil into the minds of the people the right notions of conduct between husband and wife in accordance with modern conceptions.

A Health Magazine: We have received the latest number of Good Health and Dental Welfare, a monthly journal in English conducted by Dr. H. Venkat Rao, L.M. & S., Madras, for the cause of body and teeth. The number contains particulars of the health and dental exhibitions that took place in Madras and in the mofussil during the Health Week and there are some interesting articles dealing with food, fasting etc. The Editor gladly undertakes to answer in his columns any queries of his patients and constituents in regard to defects and diseases of teeth. We congratulate the Editor on the useful work he is doing and we wish every success to the journal. The annual subscription of the journal is Rs. 1-8-0.

Death of a Prominent Social Worker in Travancore: We deeply regret to record the death on the 14th instant of Mr. Arthur Hoogewerf, the well-known Roman Catholic Editor of the Standard, Travancore, an English weekly conducted on independent and wholesome national principles. After his retirement from Government service in the Excise Department, he threw himself heart and soul in the work of social reform. He was for some time also a member of the Travancore Legislative Council. He was a staunch supporter of the Prohibition movement in India and an ardent champion of the cause of the untouchables and the depressed classes in Travancore and, in his death, Travancore loses one of its prominent social workers.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, APRIL 24, 1926.

THE NEED FOR LONG VIEWS.

The politician intent on the next election is not expected and cannot afford to take long views. But no greater misfortune can befall a country than that it should be absolutely without men to whom the ballot-box has no terrors and who can, therefore, think and speak freely on national problems. The need for long views is well illustrated by the opinions often expressed regarding the apparently increasing frequency of communal conflicts. We say "apparently," because it is by no means sure that the antagonism between the Hindu and Mahomedan communities is to-day greater than it was at any time before, as that fact may suggest to superficial observers. As a matter of fact, the number of individual Mahomedans and Hindus who are sincerely and seriously concerned in finding a modus vivendi between their respective communities is much larger to-day than it was ever before and so is the number of Hindus and Mahomedans who are actually setting a practical example in their own lives of close co-operation and intimate mutual understanding in national activities. How is it then, it may be asked, that communal conflicts continue and even seem to be increasing in number and acuteness? The answer is that the disease which was chronic in our body politic has been dislodged from the deeper layers of its being and has been brought to the surface and thus made more amenable to treatment. The symptoms which create so much alarm to the onlooker are the effort of the body to throw off the malady which had so long been poisoning the springs of life. The path of progress is not a straight line but rather a spiral curve in which things seem to move backwards when they are really moving forward and upward. It is only on a long view that the real direction of the spiral process becomes visible to the observer.

It is the faith of all men of goodwill that the federation of humanity is the goal of history. This federation will not be achieved suddenly. It will come and is coming slowly but steadily. Tiny groups aggregate to small groups, small to larger ones, those to still larger and larger groups, and so on until they all find their end in the great universal society of man. Let us see if in the caste and communal movements which we see, there is this tendency to the smaller being merged in larger aggregates. If it is there, then we need have no fear of the future as the tendency is in the right direction. If it is not there, then indeed there will be serious need to be anxious. Even to the most casual observation, however, it must be evident that there is the tendency there all right. Take the Hindu-Mahomedan case. Bohras and Khojas, Shias and Sunnis, Moplas and Memons, are shedding their particularisms and merging in one Mahomedan interest, at least for political and quasi-political purposes. The Bengali Mahomedan feels keenly the wrong done to the Malabar Mahomedan and the Madras Mahomedan is keen on securing for the Frontier Pathan the benefits of the constitutional reforms which he himself enjoys. Among the Hindus, also, there is a growing sense of the necessity of greater solidarity, and many measures, some wise and some not so wise, are being recommended and adopted with that object. The movement has already produced some effect in Northern India where there was felt to be the most need for it. The Punjab Hindu and the Madras Hindu are learning to make common cause for the amelioration of the social, economic and educational conditions of their community. Long-standing provincial differences are being laid aside, and something like a standard Hinduism is being evolved for the whole of India. In the South, a thousand and one castes and sub-castes, with the exception of Brahmins, are sought to be formed into a political group under the designation of Non-Brahmins.

The national mind has been awakened and it is to be expected that its first efforts will be along the lines to which custom and tradition had moulded it. Caste and community are ideas more concretely familiar to the Indian mind than nation and nationalism. So it necessarily seeks initial expression for its new-found power in the terms which are part of its heritage. It must and will go on doing so until it finds that caste and sect are too small to be ends in themselves, and that it must look beyond both in order to realise itself at its best and fullest. Caste and communal activities, we say, lead inevitably though unconsciously to national and humanitarian fields, though for the time being they seem to lead away from them. There is no need, therefore, to take a pessimistic view of what is happening around us. The duty of those who would hasten the process of transition from the narrower to the broader stage, is to keep reminding our communities and castes that they are members of one another and that they must all, therefore, sink or swim with each other. The Sikhs in the Punjab after an experience of six years have come to realise that communal electorates have done them more harm than good and at their recent Conference they passed a resolution to that effect. Mahomedans, too, cannot take long to find out that communal separate electorates are a great hindrance in the way of their exercising their due share of influence in the affairs of the country. Already, there are signs that Mahomedan leaders are not content with the limited outlook offered by communal interests. The newly-formed Bengal Moslem Party has placed in the forefront of its prospectus the need for thinking for all communities and castes in order to pave the way for a true and healthy rule of the people, by the people, for the people. There is much in this new Moslem movement which shows a marked advance upon the ideas which have hitherto dominated the activities of Indian Mahomedans. Not the least important is the emphatic avowal that India must in her advance assimilate the vital elements of Western civilization and culture, and that she cannot afford to lose herself in ancient and medieval obscurantisms. The leader of the new movement is Sir Abdur Rahim whose recent speeches have by their outspokenness created a certain prejudice against him among Hindus. An outspoken man, however, is often a kinder-hearted man than one who conceals his feelings under a cloak of sweet words. Sir Abdur Rahim has declared that he has a high regard for the Hindu community which he has not the least desire to antagonise. In this connection, we would call prominent attention to the emphatic contradiction by His Highness the Aga Khan of his rumoured intention to spend a million pounds for the conversion of the depressed classes to the Islamic fold. His Highness says he has been a life-long advocate of Hindu-Moslem unity and appeals to the Hindus to recognise the untouchables as one of their castes. The suggestion that the depressed classes should be recognised as a caste by other Hindu castes reveals unusual insight into the processes of Hindu evolution. It accepts caste as a conveninet mode of conceding equality without interfering in the internal economy of groups which have inherited a common culture or common disabilities. It is, therefore, more likely to commend itself to orthodox Hindus than more radical reforms involving the abolition of the caste system, though our own opinion has always been that so long as there are castes there are bound to be out-castes. This is but an illustration of the increasing volume of goodwill among the leaders of the two communities, which should not be allowed to be lost sight of in the din and dust raised by communal quarrels here and there.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRIES.

An interesting paper on women and children in Indian industries was recently read before the Royal Society of Arts in London by Lady Chatterjee, wife of the High Commissioner for India, with Lady Chelmsford as President. Lady Chatterjee's work as adviser to the Government of India on the industrial employment of women and children and her personal investigation into the conditions of women workers in Bombay eminently entitle her to speak with first-hand knowledge on this subject. During the last thirty years, India has made considerable advance in industrial development and, what is more, women and children workers have taken an increasing part in the development of the great textile, mining and tea industries as well as some small industries. The figures Lady Chatterjee gave in this connection are interesting. While in 1892 there were 43,592 women, 16,299 boys and 2,589 girls employed in organised industries, in 1922 there were no less than 206,887 women, 56,552 boys and 11,106 girls employed in the various industries, that is to say, the number of women employed in factories has increased five-fold while that of children threefold. The reasons for this phenomenal increase are not far to seek. Agriculture which is the only other alternative industry possible to villagers, is not a paying proposition. For several months in the year, agriculturists are without employment and to add to it there is the ever-increasing fear of the professional money-lender and so men and women are perforce compelled to resort to industrial areas to earn money. Naturally, the wages given in factories are a little tempting and hence follows a constant emigration of labourers from villages to towns where the factories are situated. It is satisfactory to note that women are now doing not only mere unskilled work as formerly, but that they are taking a larger part in the actual processes of manufacture as in the jute mills of Calcutta for instance. The importance, therefore, of securing satisfactory conditions of employment so as to ensure the efficiency of this woman labour force, cannot be gainsaid. Lady Chatterjee mentioned some important reforms which have been effected in recent years in this direction. A very important change is a general raising of the age of employment in all factory industries. "Prior to 1922 children between the ages of 9 and 14 could be employed for 7 hours a day in non-textile and for 6 hours a day in textile factories. Boys and girls about 14 were reckoned as adults The Act of 1922 raised the minimum age of employment to 12 and prohibited the employment of children between the ages of 12 and 15 for more than six hours a day in any factory. A rest interval was also prescribed." As regards adults, the hours of work were restricted by the new Act to 11 per day and to 60 in the week, a rest interval was also prescribed, and no women were allowed to work in any factory at night. Care was also taken to see that a large proportion of the smaller factories were brought within the scope of the new Act. There is one important point, however, in which there is urgent need for reform. The figures for the coal mines for 1922 show that as many as 39,753 women are employed to do work underground which cannot but tell ultimately upon their health. A strong public opinion has already come into existence against the employment of women for such labour and we are glad to see Lady Chatterjee herself conceded the necessity for immediate legislation on this matter.

The fact that the factories have to depend upon an immigration population, brings into prominence the question of providing proper accommodation for them. Especially is this the case with the cotton mills in Bombay and the jute mills in Bengal. The provision of satisfactory housing has not only a very direct effect on the health of the working population and specially on the women and children, but also on the stability and efficiency of this labour force. It is well-known that absenteeism is the curse of the labour supply in Bombay, as it consists of a floating population which constantly returns to the villages to seek an outlet from the din and bustle of town life. If we want to make labour not only stationary and efficient but also take an intelligent interest in work without which neither the quality nor the quantity of the output will improve the remedy lies only in proper housing which will induce labourers to stay on. The Bombay Development Department undertook to solve the problem of housing in this city, but, unfortunately, its efforts have not been attended with success. Out of 50,000 one room tenements which it undertook to build in 1920 only over 16,000 were completed by 1925 and of these many of them are now lying vacant. The high cost of erection, the difficulty of obtaining an economic rent and the insanitary and unsatisfactory nature of the construction, all these have combined to bring about an absence of demand for these tenements and the result is that the city is no better for the existence of this Department. A distinguishing feature of industrial labour in India, as pointed out by Lady Chatterjee, is that the women employed are mostly married and frequently the mothers of young children, while in England the majority of women industrial workers are between the ages of 18 and 24 and are unmarried, and hence arises the special need for provision of creches and maternity benefits in Indian factories, which, unfortunately, is only absent in a large number of cases. Lady Chatterjee in conclusion pleaded for skilled medical aid and supervision for women workers not only at the time of child-birth but throughout the time of their industrial employment. If a comprehensive measure could be framed, she said, making it compulsory in factories and mines employing a large number of women to provide them with medical aid at the time of child-birth as well as on other occasions and also making it obligatory to provide creches, many of the ill-effects arising out of the industrial employment of married women would be removed. Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, who was also present on the occasion, pointed out the need for the control of the sale of alcohol in the industrial centres, for a large part of the earnings of both men and women goes not to the betterment of their condition but to the toddy and liquor shop-keepers.

AN ALL-ROUND PROGRAM.

II.—Notes on the Items.

On the item Political—1. [The State to be a Federation of autonomous Provinces or sub-States, each sub-State being a uni-lingual province of India and Ceylon (and no Burma)—the Federation being named 'The Union of India and Ceylon' or 'India' for short.]

As a rule, no component State (termed a sub-State) of the Union should have more than one vernacular or extend over more than one language-area. But there may be more States than one with the same vernacular. Thus the Hindustani area being too big for one State will have to be divided up into at least as many convenient areas as it has been in the Congress constitution. Some small areas whose population is almost 'cosmopolitan' in composition may be made into 'city-states', as Bombay City is a Province by itself in the Congress constitution, and as Madras ought to have been, with its almost half Tamilian and half Andhra population. (I believe there are some 'city-states' in Germany yet.)

The island of Ceylon must be politically united with India, because it is racially, linguistically and geographically Indian, as truly as the island of Sicily is Italian. A portion of Ceylon in the north is Tamil, being inhabited by Tamilians from the mainland opposite; and the rest of the island is Singhalese, being inhabited by the Singhalese who speak a Sanskritic language, descended as they are from colonies planted in the island from the 6th to the 3rd century B. C. from Maghada and Kalinga (or modern Bihar and Orissa approximately). Ceylon, therefore, unlike Burma, must necessarily belong to India. The vast majority of the Ceylonese, it appears, would be only too glad to be linked up with India, their 'mother-country'. And 'India' may still be used as a short term for the (proposed) fuller and more correct name of 'the Union of India and Ceylon',—just as 'Italy' is used for the Italian mainland plus Sicily, or as 'England' is very often put for 'the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland', and as (though not in quite an analogous way) 'America' is used for 'the United States of America.'

On the item Political—2. [(a) The State not to take note of its citizens' creed, caste, or race in any department of its activities. (b No disqualification to attach to sex for any post etc., and perfect equality of both sexes to be guaranteed in all State matters (or in at least the civil ones.)]

Part (a) of this item is intended to secure that the State shall be 'secular' in all its relations with the citizen,—leaving 'religion' or creed as the individual's own private concern. For "equal opportunities to all" does not mean equal opportunities to all creeds, castes etc., but only equal opportunities to all individual citizens as such. And such alone ought to be the State's 'neutrality in religion', if it is to be truly so called.

Part (b) applies the principle of equal opportunities to sex, as part (a) does to caste, creed etc., and is intended to remove all sex inequalities which are mainly theocratic in origin and not warranted by any rational considerations, as of justice and efficiency.

Apparently the broadest expression of the secularist principle in the whole program is the present item of which some others, e.g., the two Social items, may be said to be particular applications.

On the item National Defence—1. (a) [Organisation of National Defence in all its branches to be modelled (as far as possible) on that of the Swiss both as regards general conscription and the allocation of the respective shares of the Central and Provincial governments in the responsibilities of Defence. (b) All units of the national forces to be formed strictly on a territorial basis, and not on communal, caste or racial lines.]

Part (b) of this item is a necessary corollary of the item Political—2 (a). There must no longer be the n-th Gurkhas or the m-th Sikhs or the p-th Rajputs and so on.

[ Perhaps it would do as well, in pursuance of the same policy, to discourage by State action any games like cricket-matches being publicly played between groups formed on a purely communal basis! And also of course all gatherings which are purely communal —instead of being even nominally territorial,—other than those for purely 'religious' or 'social' purposes, must be discouraged or even banned. ]

As regards part (a)—whatever justification there may have been in former times for the classification of races, castes and communities into the so-called 'martial' and 'non-martial' ones, with the consequent exclusion of all members of the latter from military service,—the distinction can hardly hold good or be really useful in the condition of modern warfare, depending, as it does, more on technique (mechanical, chemical and tactical) than on physical strength and personal prowess. Therefore nothing but physical and mental fitness shall be considered in regard to the recruitment to the Defence services of both 'men' and officers. Besides, the exclusion of members of any communities as such will not only operate against the unification of the nation, but be very unsafe to the excluded communities.

On the item Economic—1. [The policy of the State to be to help the nation to become self-supporting with regard to as many economic products as it is possible and desirable to produce in this country.]

This item is self-explanatory.

On the item Educational and General—1. [Education to be strictly secular in all public institutions maintained or aided by the State.]

This item is a particular application of the principle of the item Political—2 (a).

On the Item Educational and General—2. [Arrangements to be made for special encouragement in the matter of education to the backward and the poor,—the manner and the degree of such encouragement being determined by the merits and needs of each individual case and not by the accident of birth alone nor by the fact of creed at all.]

This is a remedy, just and democratic in aim, to the communalism which we deplore in our public life to-day, but which was almost inevitable considering our social system of water-tight castes and communities. A likely and obvious criticism of this remedy is 'Who will administer it, and how?' The reply is that this item represents, and not only this item but almost every other item in the program represents, the only rational solution to the problem with which we are face to face in each department of our national life. The solution presented in each case is one which all our real 'nation-builders' must ever keep in view in their respective spheres, and which it will never do for them to lose sight of or to counteract. In fine, all those items are the lines on which alone 'nation-building' seems to be possible for us Indians and Cingalese,—whether our actual progress on them is immediately practicable or not.

The above item, in particular, follows directly from the principle of "Equal opportunities to all",— its need arising from a fact which cannot be overlooked, viz., that Indian society ranges from the highest type of civilisation and culture to the lowest grade in the scale of civilisation represented by the aboriginal tribes and some of the depressed classes. The item secures, besides, that the work of cultural levelling up shall not be planned in terms of castes and communities as such a procedure would not only prove unjust and partial to individuals, thus going against the principle of equal opportunities, but would also be anti-national, as contravening the item Political—2 (a); but that on the contrary such essentially social work shall proceed on just general and comprehensive lines irrespective of caste, creed, or race.

On the item Educational and General—3. [Each Province to have at least one university of its own.]

The aim of this is to ensure that no university of the Union shall have to deal with more than one vernacular as medium of tuition and examination, and that each language-area shall be self-contained as regards its educational system.

CONFESSION OF FAITH AND RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

(By A Bombay Youth.)

Easter has come and gone. Many of us did our best in celebrating it in a fitting manner. Churches, priests and congregations were all busy. From morning till night, from hour to hour, church bells were pealing. But how many of us really tried to understand the deeper and real significance of Easter? How many of us tried to know the meaning of the blessings which we received from the Holy Father for the confessions we made to him? All round the year, the whole life was a mire full of sins and the year concluded with a record of which no one could well be proud. And we repented before our priest for our misdeeds as we did last year. We confessed to him our sins as we did last year and we received his absolution in return. However, was the repentance a genuine one? Was the confession of sins made honestly with firm determination not to commit them again? For, if it had been so, we would not have cared to go to the priest. The confession ought to come from within. Lord Buddha has said: "within yourself deliverance must be sought." So let the deliverance come from within. Let the confession be transparent. It should be as transparent as the confession of the Apostles. The Apostles did not hesitate to say to the Blessed Mary that they humiliated her only begotten son—the Jesus Christ, our Lord. They told her the truth and she forgave them, though her heart was full of agony. It was the agony of love and compassion and it was not the representation of the revenge which any human being would have had. She forgave them not because they confessed to her but she knew they would not repeat the sin. So, the repentance must be heralded by a change of attitude in us. And have we really changed? If we have, then the year to come will not need us to say at the end of it that we have broken the commandments. We shall not go to Church for the atonement of our sins. But we shall go thither to demonstrate the proof of our righteous conduct by seeking the blessings of Jesus Christ, our Lord, who rose on the third day to prove the prophecy. For His prophecy could not be false since it was the prophecy of one who was born with an inborn faith, a faith that knew no bounds, a faith that had no fetters. He knew that he was to suffer tortures. He was well aware that he was going to be crucified. He had full knowledge that the Apostles would humiliate him, nay would even deny him. So knew the agonised mother, the noble Blessed Mary. She knew that there was a great plan behind her son's torture, crucifiction and humiliation. But with that indomitable faith in the supreme will of the Great Ones, both of them resigned themselves and the Jesus of Nazareth triumphantly rose on the third day. Let us, therefore, build up a strong faith. Let us realise that if we want our prophecy to turn true, we have to stand the tests of torture, crucifiction and humiliation. If we are not ready for it, we are not worthy of His blessings, which come to us through His Representative on Earth, the Holy Father. Let us, each one of us, go to Him and say with all humility and submission: " Holy Father, give me the courage to change myself. Bless me that I may be fit to represent Christ on Earth. Give me the strength that I may refrain from sin". And then we shall not have gone to Church to confess but to rise.

NON-VIOLENCE AND THE WEST.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

You will pardon me if I challenge a statement in your first paragraph, issue April 17th, under the heading of "The National Week". You say: "the West welcomes with effusive enthusiasm Mahatma Gandhi's gospel of non-violence, not with the intention of adopting it herself, but in the hope of inducing the East to adopt it and thus to assure her of a perpetual dominion in Asia and Africa. This is an aspect of Western ingenuity which has escaped attention in this country." Surely, this sentence savours of a bitterness and unfairness unworthy of the Indian Social Reformer.

The aftermath of war has borne in its train all the world over terrible excrescences of militarism and all right-thinking men shudder at the thought of the sufferings of women and children and other innocent people which result from such acts of violence. But the acts of violence are in themselves the off-spring of mistrust, jealousy and misunderstandings between peoples of different races and it is these the roots that need eradication. Mahatma Gandhi has been unsuccessful as a politician, but thinking people of every race find in him a living exponent of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount. He has taught again to a world riven with strife the doctrine: " That ye resist not God "— " Love your enemies, bless them that curst you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. "

This is the healing medicine which, not only India, but the whole world is asking for. It does not belong to any one nation, it is a universal truth given to us all by Him who came for the " Healing of the Nations " and the casting down of racial bitterness.

It is not therefore those in the West who desire militarism who welcome Mahatmaji's doctrine, but those who would try and follow the teachings of Christ, who came to unite all men of all colours and all races in a Kingdom of Peace and Goodwill.

WHY BLAME BRAHMINS ?

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Mr. Amritlal Majumdar, in his correspondence " The Bane of Hinduism," in your columns of the 10th April, quite unnecessarily blames our Brahmins for the present condition of Hinduism, and appeals to our countrymen to throw away the caste system into the sea and reform themselves. But the difficulty of attaining the object aimed at can scarcely be said to be properly faced by Mr. Majumdar.

Why the state of the Indian world is such as it is, should not be a puzzle if it were borne in mind that the method of conducting Hindu funerals is based upon the pernicious doctrine of untouchability,—a method objectionable from the sanitary standpoint, which has been sufficient in itself to defy reform and maintain the Indian caste system.

The Brahmin has no business to come in our way if we have a 'will' to act according to the good rules of conducting our funerals laid down by our Rishis for our social solidarity and discipline. "A dead body should be conveyed in a hearse drawn by bullocks."—Ashavalayana Grahiya Sutra IV. 2-3.

Yours etc.,

PROSTITUTION IN BOMBAY.

Under the auspices of the Bombay Students' Brotherhood, Miss Ida M. Dickinson, a lady worker of the Bombay Vigilance Association, delivered a public lecture on " Fighting the Social Evil " on the 16th instant. Mr. K. Natarajan presided.

Miss Dickinson said :—

This meeting, following closely on Miss Davis' address to you on " Social Purity Ideals" is another sign that the social conscience in Bombay is waking up again to the need of a greater effort to grapple with the ancient evil of vice practised as a trade. Such awakenings take place at intervals, usually as the result of some crime connected with the vice. You remember how, in 1921, a murder in a brothel in Duncan Road drew the attention of the population to the horrors which existed in their midst. As a result of the feeling aroused, the Social Purity Committee was formed, and undertook to investigate the matter and the result of their report was the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act of 1923 and the formation of the Vigilance Association. Since then, I am afraid, interest in the matter has died down, but a recent case of traffic in minors has revived it and indignation is aroused at such things. Now, indignation is an excellent thing, an indispensable thing. No great reforms have ever been carried out in cold blood, but indignation alone will not suffice. All social problems, and most of all this one, whose roots go down so deep into the life of men and women, need much patient study and hard thinking before measures that will deal radically with the evil can be taken.

To-day I want to urge you to study the subject for yourselves and to take what I am going to say as an introduction to your study. Therefore let us look back for a few minutes so that we may learn from the mistakes of the past what we should avoid and by tracing a slow improvement in the attitude of society find a hope for the future.

The Cause of Prostitution.

First we ask ourselves, why has such an admittedly vile thing as prostitution been allowed in all ages and in all places to exist at all? Surely, as a result of the pessimism of men and their low estimation of the great gift of sex. Sex impulse is of tremendous force and it needs training and exercise of the will to use it rightly and the inspiration of a high ideal to uplift it. Because it is difficult—and are not all things that are worth doing difficult?—men have said that it is impossible to live up to this ideal of a pure life and, as the mistaken medical opinion of the past was all on their side, it became the universally accepted opinion. Still men saw the beauty of the ideal and though they would not struggle to attain it themselves, they wished to see it realised by women. From this arose the double standard of morals which has led and still leads to so much confusion and injustice. The result of this moral confusion is the prostitute, the scapegoat of the sins of others, despised and outcast by the society which made her what she is.

Men alone are not to blame in the matter, women who were and are selfish enough to allow their sisters to be sacrificed are almost equally to blame.

The Past.

Prostitution is the child of slavery and those who uphold it assume, as those who upheld slavery assumed, that some human beings have the right to treat other human beings as mere material objects, as goods and chattels existing for the use or amusement of their masters. So that in the ages in which slavery or serfdom flourished, prostitution did not always exist as a separate institution. It became an institution because men found out that vice, once admitted and tolerated, does not remain stationary but spreads rapidly and brings forth fruits of crime and disorder, demoralisation of the young, perversion and disease. So that although society lacked faith and courage to attack the root of the evil, it tried to lop off the branches by regulation or repression.

On the whole the ancients were more logical in their treatment of the prostitute than the moderns. She was not regarded as a necessity and at the same time as a criminal as she now so often is. Rather she was regarded as a person sacrificed or sacrificing herself for the public good, that is rather the attitude in Japan now and I submit that once you admit the ground fallacy of the double standard of morals for men and women and the necessity of the prostitution, that is the only logical way to regard her.

Prostitution in India.

I know too little of Indian history to tell you much of what happened here in past time. We know that the Maurya Government had many regulations for public women and taxed them to the extent of seven per cent of their income. The great Moghuls were not ashamed to draw revenue from the same source. In the great empire of Vijayanagar prostitution was such an important institution that 12,000 men of the police force were paid from the proceeds of taxation on the women.

After the French Revolution.

After the upheaval of the French Revolution and the Napoleonic wars, we find as we should expect to find that the appalling increase of venereal disease which is a close attendant on war had drawn attention to the hygienic aspect of the problem. Fear drove the authorities into making stringent regulations. The Paris Police system as now existing then took shape. As this is said to be the most perfect type of regulation it is well to consider its methods and their result. Paris, as well as some other European cities, has a special body, the Morals Police; to this body is given practically arbitrary power over prostitutes; they can order the inscription of harried women and minors on their lists. Once inscribed the woman not only becomes a social outcast but loses all legal rights; if a sentence is passed on her she is allowed neither attorney nor witnesses. The women inscribed come from the poorer classes, the prosperous well-educated prostitutes who abound in Paris are not found on the Police lists. As a number of people tell us that we cure the evil in Bombay by introducing the continental system, it is for us to know what that system is.

In England.

England has only made one experiment in regulation at home, though I am ashamed to say that it has found a place in her colonies. This one attempt was the Contagious Diseases Act of 1864 and following acts. Public indignation against these unjust laws was so great that when Josephine Butler started her great campaign against the State regulation of vice, she was supported, not only by the whole weight of the women's movement, but by medical opinion and social reforms on the Continent as well as in the United Kingdom. By 1875, the International Federation for the abolition of State Regulation of Prostitution had been formed and by 1886 the Acts were repealed. The agitation at home spread to India, the disgraceful cantonment system was exposed and finally put an end to by the Defence of India Act of 1918.

Before passing on to another aspect of the problem let me repeat to you Josephine Butler's own words: "The organisation of prostitution by public authority is a hygienic mistake, a social injustice, a moral monstrosity and a judicial crime."

The White Slave Traffic.

At the end of the last century society was startled by the revelations of the so-called white slave traffic. A well-organised trade in women and girls had grown up by which girls were entrapped and conveyed to places far from their homes where they were placed in houses of ill-fame. The proprietors of brothels in the Eastern ports and in America thus obtained a fresh stock of human material for their devilish shops. The organisation was so perfect that a girl could be lured from her home in Eastern Europe, shipped off from London with a false passport and landed at Buenos Aires.

These discoveries led to the passing of severe laws against pimps and procurers and the formation of the National Vigilance Association. The ultimate result was the International Agreement to suppress the traffic in women and girls. Although great success attended these measures, the traffic is not yet dead and we read in the paper some weeks ago that a gang which supplied South America had been arrested in Paris.

So much for the fight against the present social evil in the past. You may think that I have been wasting your time with all this when what you are interested in is the state of Bombay here with its 5,000 declared prostitutes and its streets given over to open and shameless debauchery. Now it is just because we need all our faith and courage when we come to think of these horrors in our midst, that I have spoken of the past, for my belief is that we can derive hope from this study. There has been progress very very slow, but still progress. Prostitution, once a department of the state, sinks to be merely a municipal institution. From that it passes to the stage of private ownership. The necessity for the double standard of morals once upheld by practically all medical opinion is now denied to many of the leaders of the profession and no worker for social reform would now be found to speak for it.

Public Opinion can Root Out the Evil.

Another lesson we can also learn from the past. Reform has always been the outcome of strong public opinion. It was the people who demanded the abolition of brothels from Henry VIII and Francis I. It was public opinion that carried Josephine Butler successfully though the fight against the C. D. Acts. It was public indignation which led to the legislation against the white slave traffic. Righteous laws can only come as the outcome of healthy public opinion. It is upto all of us in each of several communities to try to arouse such opinion; then only the existing laws operate effectually, then only can we hope for better laws in the future.

The system in Bombay is, as you know, one of segregation and toleration. It is a very bad system. Like regulation it leads people to think that prostitution is a necessary evil. While living in the segregated area women naturally think that they are carrying on the trade with the approval of the authorities and the public. The prominence allowed to the houses on mainroads and tramlines is a glaring advertisement of evil and a perpetual menace to the young.

The public is lulled into false security, imagining that the evil is confined to a small part of the town while in reality it abounds in clandestine forms in all parts. There are two other large areas as well as the one usually spoken of as such and there are scattered houses as well, and the case of abduction and sale of minors which occurred lately took place outside the area.

The Future.

To kill the brothel system the attack on the demand and supply must be carried on in equal measure; one without the other is bound to fail. The first is in one sense everybody's business, as all that makes for healthy happy intercourse between men and women and boys and girls tends to check it, but in a narrower sense it calls for work of men among men and boys. The second is also a matter in which all can help. All who work for better education, better conditions of employment, better housing and more facilities for wholesome recreation, are indirectly fighting the social evil. But all this comes under preventive work and I hope that you will take up this subject for study some other time.

The direct action against prostitution can best be accomplished by cutting off the supply. We need greater watchfulness in the districts from which the women come and a complete application of the Prostitution Act to the whole Presidency. We need people who are not afraid to come forward and give evidence. We need far heavier penalties for pimps and procurers. Those who live on the proceeds of others' vice must be so harried that they at last find that the game is not worth the candle.

We most urgently need the putting in force of the new Children's Act to save the next generation from the fate of their mothers. It must no longer be possible to bring up children for the purpose of selling them like beasts.

Constructive measures must be carefully thought out for the permanent assistance of those who have been dragged out of the swamp and the present type of rescue home should be supplemented by training schools and workshops.

No mere abolition of brothels will affect all this. On the other hand, if only some of these were accomplished the brothels would have to shut down from lack of supply.

Chairman's Speech.

After the lecturer had spoken Mr. Natarajan said that the first difficulty in the way of reform was that pointed out by Miss Dickinson—the prevalence of a public opinion which had one standard of morality for men and another for women. This could be changed only by women becoming more educated, more conscious of their own rights and more insistent in enforcing them. The next difficulty in the movement against the social evil was that the community did not know the real nature and incidents of social vice. If it knew the facts it will feel a rude shock to its complacency. The evidence given before the Bombay Prostitution Committee brought to light many facts relating to the nefarious traffic. It was related that hackney carriage drivers, hawkers, bangle-sellers and others in seemingly innocent trades were among the agents employed by the brothel keepers. There was a regular organisation for enticing young women, which had its recruiters who frequented railway junctions, the vicinity of orphanges and schools for girls. Recent cases have come to light of young girls who lost their way being kidnapped and carried away to brothels. The lives of these women in brothels were most miserable. They seldom lived to carry on their profession for more than five years. In two years in most cases they became diseased and for the next three or four years they spread the infection round. A specialist in these diseases once told him that a very large percentage of men in some classes were infected and that through them a considerable proportion of their women were also victimized. The prevalence of the evil was a menace to the whole community—innocent and guilty alike.

Clandestine Prostitution.

The speaker then referred to clandestine prostitution as being a larger and more dangerous evil than the brothels. The latter may be controlled and even ultimately abolished, but clandestine prostitution can only be prevented by a vigorous public opinion bringing the light of publicity to bear upon it. He next referred to the anti-nautch movement which, he had thought, had finally put an end to the institution of nautch parties at marriage and festive occasions. He was astonished to learn that in Bombay sometime ago some educated men

realpatidar.com

held a nautch party and that this was not the first time that this was done. The supporters of this institution argued that music and dancing are fine arts which needed encouragement and that there was no harm in having nautch girls to sing and dance. The speaker said that the fine arts were deserving of great attention in national life, but that they should not be left to women of ill-fame but should be cultivated in their own homes and families, if they really valued them as they all should. Apart from that, no one had a right to derive pleasure from an institution which rested upon the degradation of a class of women. The speaker laid down that the one test in these matters was: whether we would like our own sisters and daughters, wives and mothers to be in the position of the nautch-girls. If any one said he would not mind, the speaker had nothing to say to him. If, on the other hand, they felt that they would mind it a great deal, then he asked them all to pray "Lead us not into temptation."

BOMBAY PROSTITUTION ACT.

Referring to the Bombay Prostitution Act, the Chairman said that he was a member of the Committee which framed the recommendations, and it was the intention of the Committee that the Act was primarily to be educative and preventive rather than punitive. It was, therefore, not attempted to make it comprehensive from the penal point of view. The speaker did not believe in sending people to jail as a method of social reform. Constructive work, such as that which Miss Dickinson was doing, rescue homes for girls, and the creation of a sound public opinion were what were most needed.—The Indian Daily Mail, Bombay.

COLOUR OF THE SKY AND THE SEA.

Professor C. V. Raman, D. Sc., F. R. S. delivered the first of his Adhar Chandra Mukherjee lectures on "Recent advances in molecular Physics" at the Asutosh Building some time back before a crowded and enthusiastic audience of University students, lecturers and the general public.

The lecturer took as his subject "The colour of the sky and the sea" and discussed in a popular way the origin of these interesting natural phenomena. Physicists now generally accept the explanation of the blue of the sky originally propounded by the late Lord Raleigh, namely, that the molecules of the air scatter the rays of the sun and thus become visible, the blue colour arising from the fact that the shorter waves forming the blue end of the spectrum move profusely than the longer waves forming the red end.

Professor Raman then showed two beautiful experiments illustrating how the colour of the sky and the colour of the setting sun related to each other. In one experiment, the progressive change of colour of the setting sun was imitated. In the second experiment an orange red sun appeared in a sky showing all the hues of sunset ranging from a reddy yellow to deep indigo blue.

Dealing with the colour of the sea, the lecturer explained why the views commonly held that this colour arises from reflected sky light or that it is due to an intrinsic colour of water are erroneous. In his recent travels Professor Raman has had opportunities of making observations in all the great oceans and in a great many inland seas and lakes. The colours shown by deep water show a wide range of variations, and can only be properly observed when the reflected light from the sky is absent or is cut off by special instruments. The beautiful blue shown in many cases is a characteristic of very clear transparent water relatively free from turbidity or suspended matter. In other cases, suspended matter is present and sometimes also material which fluoresces green under action of the sun rays. The dark blue colour of parts of the Bay of Bengal is almost entirely due to the scattering of light by the molecules of the water. When suspended particles are present, the colours as modified may range from greenish blue to green and even yellow or brown — The Servant, Calcutta.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Correction: In our article on "The Beggar Problem" last week the name of Mr. Starte, the Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer, was wrongly spelt as Mr. Strate.

Lord Reading Honoured: His Majesty the King has approved of the conferment of a Marquisate of the United Kingdom on the Earl of Reading.

An Honour Declined: The Mysore University Council has decided to confer the degree of Doctorate of Science on Sir M. Visveswarayya. But it is understood that Sir Visveswarayya has declined the honour.

Deshabandhu Memorial: The Chittaranjan Seva Sadan was opened on the 14th instant by Pandit Motilal Nehru at the residence of the late Deshabandhu C. R. Das.

A New Moslem Daily in Calcutta: It is announced that Sir Abdur Rahim is to be the Editor of the Moslem daily that is to be started under the auspices of the new Moslem Party in Calcutta.

Helping the Blind: A successful charity entertainment was held on the 19th instant at the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall in aid of the Happy Home for the Blind, Bombay. Many sympathisers of the cause were present on the occasion and a sum of about Rs. 2,500 was realised.

Emancipation of Slaves in Hukawng Valley: The Government of Burma have received a telegram from the Government of India stating that they have received with pleasure the news of the emancipation of all slaves in Hukawng Valley. They congratulate his Excellency the Governor and the officers concerned on the success attained.

The Currency Commission and U. S. A.: In a recent issue we commented adversely on the proposed visit of the Currency Commission to the U. S A. We are glad to see that the Currency commission has now given up that idea and has contented itself with hearing of witnesses from America.

Gandhi-Portrait in Madras Corporation: The Government of Madras have disallowed the unanimous resolution passed by the Corporation to hang up a portrait of Gandhiji in the hall of the Corporation. The District Congress Committee has protested against the action of the Government of Madras.

Women's Anti-Strike Demonstration: The largest demonstration of women in England since the days of the suffragettes was carried out under the auspices of the Women's Guild of the Empire on the 17th instant when 20,000 women marched from London to Albert Hall to participate in an anti-strike meeting. Resolutions were passed at Albert Hall denouncing the lock-outs and strikes that will be resorted to in case the negotiations between the mineowners and miners on the coal question prove futile.

Foreign Films In the Empire: The Federation of British Industries has drawn the attention of the President of the Board of Trade to the practical monopoly obtained by foreign film producing concerns in cinema programmes all over the Empire as very detrimental to British prestige and prejudicial to the interests of the Empire, especially the Dominions, as they contain large coloured populations. A hope is expressed that the subject will be placed on the agenda of the Imperial Conference.

A Munificent Gift: Mr. C. V. Venkataramana Iyengar, M. L. C., (Swarajist,) Madras, has made a gift of Rs. 2 lakhs for charitable purposes and has invested the gift in a trust which would provide an annual income of Rs. 10,000; 25 per cent. of this is to be set aside for temples and other religious purposes, 25 per cent. to go towards helping the poor, 25 per cent. for the helping of villages, and 25 per cent. to be spent on education, especially industrial education. Mr. Iyengar has also announced his intention of a donation for a Tamil journal.

Prohibition in Pudukotah: It is stated that, with a view to promote temperance, the Local Government have ordered the prohibition of the sale of liquor or toddy to persons below the age of 18 years and to women, and have further ordered that no shops with the exception of the shops in the town which can remain open till 8 p. m. should be opened before 10 a. m., and kept open after 6 p. m. The Government have also ordered the closure of some more shops this year.

Propaganda against Drink: We are glad to see that a campaign of anti-drink propaganda among the mill-hands of Ahmedabad has been inaugurated under the auspices of the Majur Mahajan. Considering how much of the money earned by the mill-hands goes to the drink shops, it need hardly be said that such a peaceful propaganda will go a long way in ridding the local mill-hands of this curse and improving their moral, material and social welfare.

Muslim Girls' Education: A variety entertainment was held last week in support of a scheme for the advancement of Muslim Girls' education of which Atya Begum was the moving spirit. The function was well attended by ladies belonging to various communities. Atya Begum said her scheme was designed to storm the walls of conservatism among the community and wean the girls from the path of superstition and ignorance. The entertainment was rendered exceedingly interesting and inspiring by the "tableaux vivantes" depicting ancient Indian Art. The frescoes of Bagh Cave 500 A. D., Ajanta, Ragni attracting peacocks and snakes, and Moghul Emperor and Empress were well received and encored. Brief speeches were made by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Mrs. Stockbridge and Mr. Mirza Ali Mahomed Khan congratulating Atya Begum on her philanthropic activities and wishing the movement every success. A sum of Rs. 2,000 was raised through donation and sale of tickets.

Indian Fabian Society: At a general meeting of the newly formed Indian Fabian Society held on Friday the 2nd inst. in the hall of the Servants of India Society of Madras, its organising Secretary, Mr. S. M. Michael, read the following message of sympathy he had received from Mr. J. Ramsay Macdonald:—"I am very much interested in the formation of a Fabian Society in India. Please accept my best wishes for the success of your Society." The meeting adopted a constitution and appointed the following office-bearers for this year:—President Dr. Besant, Vice-President Mr. N. M. Joshi M. L. A., General Secretaries, Messrs. S. M. Michael and Ernest Kirk. A strong working committee was also formed. The head-quarters of the Society was temporarily located at No. 9, Bazar Road, Royapetta, Madras, and it was resolved to organise branches in all parts of India. The object of the Society is "to carry on educative socialistic propaganda in India on lines of the Fabian Society in England".

Prostitution in Calcutta: In the House of Commons, replying to Mr. Cecil Wilson on the 19th instant, Earl Winterton said that as the Bengal Legislative Council had passed in 1923 a special measure, dealing with the control of brothels, he hoped that Mr. Wilson's statement that there were many hundreds of young girls between the ages of nine and thirteen at present in brothels in Calcutta was no longer accurate, though he had no definite information. Earl Birkenhead thought it would be inconsistent with the present Indian constitution, if he were to direct an All-India enquiry on the question of control of prostitution, the primary responsibility for which rested on the provinces. Moreover, he had no reason to think that the local governments and their legislatures were not fully alive to the necessity for vigilance.

Rights of the Depressed Classes to use Public Roads: Four persons, one Bhattadiripad, an Iyer, an Unni and a Nair, had recently filed a suit in the Alleppy District Court against the Dewan of Travancore and 13 others praying for a perpetual injunction restraining the entry of non-caste Hindus into the roads lying around the Sri Krishna Swami Temple at Ambalapuzha. The plaintiffs alleged among other things that the roads formed part of the precincts of the temple long since dedicated to the exclusive worship of the caste Hindus, that the entry of non-caste Hindus into the said roads was prohibited by immemorial custom and that the exclusive right was violated by non-caste Hindus with the connivance of the Government, the Commissioner and the Superintendent. The plaintiffs therefore prayed for an injunction. The defendants traversed the plea urged by plaintiffs. His Honour M. Bhaskara Menon, the District and Sessions Judge, before whom the application was argued, passed orders dismissing the petition with costs. The learned Judge has held that there was no prima facie case for the plaintiffs as they had no manner of proprietary or possessory rights over the temple, the premises or the roads in dispute. According to His Honour, there could be no sudden attack of the plaintiffs' rights as the alleged first entry was made about 8½ months ago. His Honour doubted how a Paradesa Brahmin (the 2nd plaintiff) could claim the right in the face of the statement in the plaint that the Devaswom had been dedicated to the exclusive worship of Keraleeya Brahmins. As it is conceded in the course of the argument that the said roads are being used by Christians, Mahomedans and other non-Hindus and that the non-caste Hindus by conversion can acquire the right of using them, His Honour holds the custom upon which the plaintiffs rely in support of their rights to be unreasonable and opposed to the sense of the public right and the enlightened view among the people.—The West Coast Spectator.

The Late Ganapati Sastri: By the death of Mahamahopadhyaya Dr. Thuravai Ganapati Sastri Ph.D., of Trivandrum, on the 3rd instant at the age of 66, we lose an all-round scholar of great eminence who was at once the pride of Travancore and an ornament to India. His discovery and edition of Bhasa's works, in recognition of which a doctorate was conferred upon him by the University of Tubingen, will stand as a brilliant landmark in the annals of Indian research and scholarship. He worked for nearly 45 years in the field of Sanskrit research, and we can get some idea of his achievements and contributions to oriental scholarship when it is remembered that he personally edited and published some 87 volumes covering over 20,000 printed pages, freshly discovered 43 unknown writers and their works, and recovered over 500 lost writings. Though not equipped with much English learning, his critical studies of Sanskrit classics reveal an instinctive grasp of the methods of modern research and scholarship. The title of Mahamahopadhyaya was conferred upon him during the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in recognition of his distinguished scholarship. We hope the Travancore Government or the University of Madras will take proper steps to perpetuate in a fitting manner the memory of such a brilliant scholar.

NOTES

Recrudescence of Calcutta Riots: After an interval of a few days, Hindu-Mahomedan riots again broke out in Calcutta and continued till almost the end of the week. Troops are reported to be patrolling the streets, and large numbers of both communities have left the city which is said to present a deserted appearance. The "riots" had nothing of the religious motive in them, except that the two belligerents belonged to the two communities. There was little regular fighting, but there were several cases of individuals being stabbed or beaten to death when they were found isolated in Hindu or Mahomedan localities. The Calcutta outbreak may be regarded as the blazing out of the smouldering embers of Hindu-Mahomedan differences since the break-up of the temporary alliance between the Congress and the Khilafat movements. The Hindus feel that the great sacrifices which their men made in the Khilafat cause, have not been appreciated by the Mahomedans, while the latter feel that they were used by Hindu politicians to play their Swaraj game and to alienate, in consequence, the sympathy and support of Government. This is but a proof of the danger of adopting short-cuts in solving long-standing social and racial differences. The old method of the Congress leaders was to keep the door open for all sects and communities while forcing their attentions upon none, trusting to the slow growth of mutual confidence under a broad national policy without reference to creed or caste. This is the true method, and sooner or later, it is the method to which all parties should revert—the sooner, the better.

Liberty of Conscience in China: A new policy in education has been inaugurated by the Chinese Government. In its "Regulations governing the regulations of educational constitutions by funds contributed from foreigners" published some time ago that Government has taken what will be universally regarded as a very important step in its educational policy. In China as in other countries and to a larger extent, there are educational institutions conducted and financed by foreign agency. It is to bring these institutions under control that the regulations are laid down. Briefly they are that (1) any such institution of whatever grade can make application for recognition; (2) its President or Principal must be Chinese, except where he (or she) is now a foreigner, when the Vice-President must be a Chinese; (3) more than half the Board of Managers must be Chinese; (4) its purpose shall not be religious proselytization; (5) the curriculum shall conform to the standards set by the Ministry of Education and shall not include religious courses among the required subjects. It is evident that the main principle underlying these regulations is to make educational institutions purely secular in character. To achieve the end, Confucianism, Buddhism, Christianity and Islam are all equally banned as compulsory subjects but they may be retained in the curricula of the schools and colleges only as optional subjects. More than others, these regulations will affect adversely the Christian educational institutions in China, which are mostly financed by missionary organisations of the West the raison d'etre of which is religious proselytisation. They are now faced by the immediate need to decide their course of action. Their decision will be awaited with interest by the world at large.

Dr. Cannan on the Gold Standard: In his statement of evidence before the Indian Currency Commission published in the Indian Daily Mail, Dr. Cannan takes a completely impartial view of the whole situation. Taking the interest of India as well as that of Great Britain and the West, he says that it would be best to have a gold standard for India. In the interest of India he favours the gold standard, firstly because it is knave-proof as well as fool-proof, and secondly because opinion in India is strongly in favour of it. Great Britain and the West are generally anxious that India should be prosperous, and they should not mind enduring any small inconvenience that would be borne by them all. Besides he says that it is to the advantage of the West that India should require more and more gold as otherwise there would be a glut of gold in Europe. Hence he believes that the gold standard countries would be benefitted by the introduction of a gold currency system in India. He does not consider that "if complete liberty of exchanging all silver coins and currency notes into gold coins were given at once all over India, there would be an enormous demand for gold coins, unless some ill-advised action created a distrust in the rupees and notes." Small cash is a necessity of civilised life, and taking into consideration the fact that the poorer the people, the larger the proportion of their total cash will be in coins of small value, Dr. Cannan does not see why there should be "a gold rush." The idea that there should be a rush to convert silver into gold is based on the belief that the silver coins that are now being hoarded and out of circulation would be brought out and converted into gold coins. But why, asks Dr Cannan, should they be converted? It is true that hoards in future will be of gold coins, but bringing out hoards of silver will be dangerous to the owners owing to the risk of publicity and robbery and the only gain is in the saving of space which is really quite negligible.

In conclusion Dr. Cannan indicates how the gold standard can gradually be introduced in India without unduly disturbing the economic life of the people. Silver rupees and notes redeemable in silver should be issued no more; rupees should continue to be unlimited legal tender and should be convertible into gold on demand. The coinage of gold ought to be made free immediately. Then beginning from the highest denominations notes should slowly be made redeemable in gold. This, if done without any flourish of trumpets, can be achieved in a year. The cost of these reforms, which lies in changing the metallic reserve into gold, would be about £33 millions. Dr Cannan protests strongly against any provision that the reserve shall not be allowed to fall below any stated ratio because that would only make a certain amount of gold useless and a reserve should be usable to the last penny. Dr. Cannan is deservedly held in high respect as a great authority on Indian Currency and his views which are in accordance with Indian opinion will, we hope, commend themselves to the members of the Currency Commission and the Government of India.

A New Book on Buddhism: We have much pleasure in welcoming "The Doctrine of the Buddha, the Religion of Reason" by Dr. George Grimm, published by the Offizin W. Drugulin, Leipzig. The German edition of the book has aroused the keenest interest among scholars and laymen, as evidenced by the fact that it has gone through fourteen editions since its first publication a few years ago. Dr Grimm has laid the English-reading world under a debt of gratitude by bringing out this English translation himself with the assistance of an English scholar. This is not a book on Buddhism, says the author, but about the Buddha doctrine by which he understands the original, genuine teaching of the Buddha as taught by the Buddha himself. Buddhism consists largely of independent developments this teaching had undergone during its historical career, and with it the author is not concerned. The two, he rightly says, are as different from each other as present-day Christian religious communions from the Christianity of Christ. He claims that his work amounts to a re-discovery of the old, genuine Buddha doctrine. The book is entirely a product of the spirit of the time. It breathes in every page a freshness and vigour of thought which makes it a valuable addition to modern religious literature as well as to Buddhist scholarship. It is priced 15 shillings, and copies are expected to be soon available for sale in India.

Hindu Conferences: As if in reply to the formation of a Moslem Party at Calcutta, a series of Hindu Conferences have been recently held in various provinces to organise the Hindu forces. The most notable among them were those held in the United Provinces and the Punjab. It is unfortunate that both Bhai Paramanand and Dr. Moonje, the Presidents of the two Conferences respectively, should instead of trying their best to bring about cordial relations between the two communities, dwell at length upon the differences between them. Bhai Paramanand spoke of an aggressive Hinduism to counteract aggressive Mahomedanism and Christianity, while Dr. Moonje raked up the Moplah rebellion and the Kohat tragedy as illustrative of the Mahomedan attitude to Hinduism. Both these leaders are doing a serious disservice to the country and their speeches are only calculated to fan still further the spirit of communalism which has exhibited itself in all its naked fury in the streets of Calcutta. But perhaps the most mischievous suggestion of all was that made by Mr. Kedarnath, Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Punjab Conference, for a retaliatory treatment of Moslems in provinces where the Hindus formed a majority owing to the alleged losing of ground by Hindus in the Punjab. The only thing upon which the Conferences can be congratulated is as regards their attitude towards untouchability and some other grave social and religious customs which are sapping the vitals of Hindu society. Both the U. P. and the Punjab Conferences endorsed the resolution of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha with regard to untouchability. The Punjab Conference in addition passed resolutions requesting Government to increase Hindi-knowing staffs in Government Service and provide facilities for the spread of education among the depressed classes, condemning the unjust policy of admitting students to colleges on communal considerations and restrictions for recruitment in the Army, and enjoining Hindus to start akharas for strengthening their physique and contribute funds for the protection of widows and orphans.

The Madras Government and Anti-Drink Propaganda: Mr C. Rajagopalacharya, the veteran Non-Co-operator of South India, has recently unearthed an order passed by the Local Self-Government Department, Madras, asking health officers not to carry on anti-drink propaganda. The health officers may teach people all about malaria and such like things and the means of taking preventive measures against them, but about the effects of drinking toddy and arrack on the health and strength of the people, they should not even open their mouth. The motive underlying this policy is of course not difficult to understand. If health officers continue to carry on propaganda against the evils of drink, there is no doubt that it will result in a considerable fall in the excise revenue which contributes a substantial portion to the coffers of Government. But why then continue to pay lip-service to total prohibition as the ultimate goal of excise policy? This order coupled with the milk-and-water resolution on prohibition which the Ministry recently accepted on behalf of the Government, is a sufficient condemnation of the attitude of the Justice Party to a question which intimately affects the health and well-being of the masses whom it poses to represent. By the way, the National Congress should as a part of its prohibition propaganda require that its members should take the pledge of total abstinence.

Tax on Betting: A tax on betting is one of the prominent features of the British Budget which was recently introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Churchill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Bombay Government can now point with pride that if it has erred at all, it has erred in good company. The betting tax promises to be the most controversial feature in this year's Budget and it is opposed by the churches and book-makers, though from different points of view. The churches oppose it on moral grounds while the book-makers and racing-men oppose it on the ground that the backer could not afford to pay a tax which would mean the betting public losing thrice as much. Women also do not lag behind and, led by Miss Wilkinson, member of the House of Commons, they are organising protest meetings against the retrograde moral step. In spite of this opposition, situated as England now is with the coal question still unsolved, the chances are that Mr. Churchill can rest assured of a victory with the help of his Conservative majority.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MAY 1, 1926.

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A Hopeful Change.

The sudden and sensible change which has come over the situation relating to the position of Indians in South Africa, is of happy augury not only to the future relations between the two great sub-continents but for the cause of reason, understanding and friendly negotiation in disputes affecting nations and communities. The position had at one time during the last few months seemed to have gone almost beyond the resources of Indian and South African statesmanship. The causes of the sudden lifting of the clouds which threatened the very existence of Indians in South Africa, are many and we are not yet in a position to appraise all of them. The first step was taken by the Imperial Citizenship Association when it requested Mr. C. F. Andrews to go once more to South Africa to put heart into Indians there and to assure them of the whole-hearted support of the Indian people. Mr. Andrews readily undertook the mission, though not with much hope of success so far as the South African Whites' attitude to the Indian question was concerned. But with superb courage and faith in the righteousness of his cause he set to work as soon as he landed in South Africa to convey to the Europeans there some idea of the background of Indian culture and civilization, as exemplified particularly in the lives and teachings of Rabindra Nath Tagore and Mahatma Gandhi. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu's visit two years ago had given South Africa a new vision of contemporary India, as had Gokhale's visit fifteen years ago. The South African European had known India only as a land of coolies and shrewd traders. He had to be told that these coolies and traders were of the same breed as the poet, the scholar, the statesman and the orator. We attach the greatest importance to this among the causes which have brought about the changed situation a noteworthy feature of which is the earnest desire expressed by South African statesmen and the South African Press for friendly relations between the two countries.

Next, and only next in importance to this increased appreciation of India and her culture and civilisation in South Africa, is the patient and far-seeing statesmanship of the late Viceroy of India, Lord Reading, who in the darkest hour never lost faith in the efficacy of negotiation and conference. The South African Government almost rudely rejected his repeated plea for a conference between representatives of the two Governments and countries, which had been first suggested by Mr. Thomas when, as Colonial Secretary in the Ramsay Macdonald Ministry, he visited South Africa, and which had been subsequently endorsed by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu when she went to that country. Lord Reading employed all the vast resources of his forensic and political experience to persuade the Union Government to accept the proposal, but he was bluntly told that the question being one which concerned the internal affairs of the Union, the Government of South Africa cannot admit the legitimacy of the right claimed by the Government of India to intervene on behalf of a section of the population of that country. This argument was itself the most convincing condemnation of the attitude of the Union Government towards the Indians in that Dominion. The policy of their anti-Indian legislation had been avowed to be the elimination of Indians who were declared to be an alien element in South Africa. But for purposes of the argument against the intervention of the Government of India, South African Indians were claimed as an integral part of the population of that Colony. Lord Reading gently reminded the Union Government that 60 per cent. of their Indian subjects were born in South Africa and that most of the remaining 40 per cent. had acquired a South African domicile by long residence, and that it would be an act which it would be difficult to justify at the bar of civilised opinion to deprive these people of their means of earning an honourable livelihood and of becoming self-respecting and useful citizens of South Africa. The answer was that the question, as it appeared to the South African Whites, was not an ethical one but it was a matter of self-preservation of the Europeans, and on such a matter there was no room for further argument. Lord Reading thereupon requested permission to send a deputation from India to investigate how far the allegation that Indians competed unfairly with Europeans was well-founded. This the Union Government could not well refuse, and the deputation was sent, and it has been a great factor in producing the change of situation.

At about the same time as the Government of India deputation sailed from this country, a South African Indian deputation left that country for India to place the views of South African Indians before the people and the Government of India. It was headed by Dr. Abdur Rahman, a Cape Malay leader of distinction, who threw himself heart and soul into the cause of Indians, which is only a phase of the problem of the white and coloured races of the world. His earnestness, eloquence and mastery of facts produced a great impression in this country. Even Lord Reading's cautious steps were somewhat accelerated as the result of the personal interviews which the late Viceroy accorded to the South African deputation and its leader. General Hertzog, the Union Prime Minister, has thought it necessary to declare publicly that Dr. Abdur Rahman's deputation had absolutely no share in influencing the decision of his Government to accede to the request of a Round Table Conference to settle the Indian problem on an equitable and permanent basis. That itself shows that the deputation had much more than a small part in bringing about the changed outlook which has led to the changed situation. Lastly we ought not to omit to pay a tribute to the courage and sense of justice of the Union Government which, when it found that the question could not be solved so easily as it intended, did not allow any petty consideration of prestige or consistency to stand in the way of its acting upon its convictions. The result is that the feeling of hostility between the two countries has given place to one of mutual respect and desire to appreciate each other's difficulties. The Conference is to meet some months hence, and we hope that the statement that it is to meet in India will prove to be well-founded. The South African delegates—we hope the Prime Minister him elf will be one of them—will receive a warm welcome and everything will be done to make them at home during their stay in India. As for the Indian delegates, Mahatma Gandhi, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, His Highness the Aga Khan, Mr. C. F. Andrews and Mr. J. B. Petit on behalf of the Imperial Citizenship Association, should have a place in the conference in addition to the official representatives of the Government of India, who will probably be headed by Sir Mahomed Habibullah who, as Member in charge of the emigration portfolio, has a large share in the success which has attended the negotiations with the Union Government.

A MODEL JAIL

In these days when jail administration in India is far from being satisfactory and is anything but conducive to the reformation of the criminal, which has been accepted on all hands as the primary goal of all prison reform, it is with relief that we turn to the humanising conditions prevalent in the Central Jail in one of the most important of our Native States. Rao Saheb C. Ramaswamy Iyengar, B.A., has contributed an interesting article to a recent number of the Vedanta Kesari on his impressions of his recent visit to the Bangalore Central Jail. Through the kindness of the Indian Superintendent, Mr. Iyengar was shown round the various cells and he had thus every opportunity of studying things at first-hand. The most striking feature in the whole institution that struck him was the broad sympathy that marked every one of the transactions there. It is noteworthy that of all the criminals in the jail, he could not find even one prisoner imprisoned for the sake of sedition, a fact which offers a vivid contrast to the state of things prevailing in British India and which is at once eloquent of the deep loyalty and affection with which the person and the throne of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore are regarded by his subjects. Thus, such a one as a political prisoner is unknown to the State. Even with regard to criminals, the policy of the State has been to wean the unfortunates away from their old life of sin and crime and make them better men and women. In ninety per cent of the cases, it will be found that the crimes are the result of poverty, starvation or a momentary lapse or weakness and the Superintendent, realising this, tries to teach every one of the criminals admitted into the jail some art or craft suited to his intelligence and his ordinary habits, so that when he goes out of its portals he may have some honest way of eking out his livelihood. The improvements made as a result of this wise policy are satisfactory in most cases which is well evidenced by the fact that only a very small fraction of the old criminals are found to come back to the Jail while the rest have presumably turned out honest, industrious and law-abiding citizens.

The moral and material improvement of the criminals is sought to be effected in various ways. For the juveniles there is a regular drill to improve their physique and lay teachers are also employed to train their intellect. Nor is this all. Lectures on temperance and the evils of drinking and religious and moral discourses in Tamil, Kanarese, Urdu and other vernaculars are now and then held to bring home to their minds the happiness of a virtuous and good life. For the grown-up criminals, there is always one industry taught and each is allowed to choose that which is suited to his liking and tastes. For instance, cloth weaving and carpentry are taught to those who have an inclination to learn them and there are also sewing machines for tailors, smithy-shops for gold and silver-smiths, and tools for the manufacture of rattan articles. And in all these strict attention is paid to the fact that the religious susceptibilities of any one are not in any way wounded at all. Nor is religious education which is the only thing calculated to fill the minds of prisoners with noble thoughts and ideals, in any way neglected. As the prison population consists of people from various castes and communities, religious preachers of various denominations are allowed to hold classes and impart to them the hope and consolation of religion. There are separate priests for Hindus, Christians, Mahomedans and Jains. Swami Somananda of the Ramakrishna Mission is in charge of the Hindus. One other remarkable feature about the institution is that proper rewards are offered to industry and good conduct. Thus, if a prisoner behaves well and is industrious, he is very often promoted to be a Night Watchman or a work Overseer or a Warder Guard. Again, such a well-behaved man is given ordinary clothing like any other man and not that which is specially given to a prisoner and, in course of time, his sentence is often remitted. Another good thing about the Jail is that prisoners are now and then given the privilege of receiving visits from their near and dear relatives and, when a prisoner has been more than usually industrious, he is given some money payment which he may remit to his relatives as a sign that he is still trying to do his bit for them. A library is provided for the more intellectual among the prisoners and the more literate persons are allowed to teach their neighbours during their leisure hours. The most patient and sympathetic attention is paid to the complaints and grievances of prisoners, and they are freely allowed to write appeals to higher authorities either to remit or minimise the sentences passed on them. And last, but not least in importance, in this 'House of Discipline' as Mr. Iyengar calls the Jail, the meals served are not very much different from what they are used to take in ordinary life. These are only a few of the humanising and refining influences at work in softening the rigours of jail life which Mr. Iyengar mentions, and it reflects no small credit upon the administration of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore. Success in this direction is in no small measure due to the energy and ability of the man on the spot, the Indian Superintendent, who by his love and sympathy, has won the affections of even the most desperate murderer.

AN ALL-ROUND PROGRAM.

( By Mr. S. D. Nadkarni. )

III.—Notes on the Items.

On the item Educational and General—4. [ English with a phonetically reformed graphic-system, to be the Federal language, and also the medium of international intercourse for India. ]

The Swiss are a nation, and one of the oldest in Europe; yet many of our 'educated' countrymen will be surprised to learn that there is no such language as 'Swiss' in Switzerland, any more than there is a language called 'Indian' in India, as there is Italian in Italy or German in Germany. The fact is that Switzerland is a country distributed over three language-areas. German is the literary language in the north and claims by far the greater part of the Swiss population, while French and Italian are the languages current in the west and the south respectively. But, be it noted, all three languages are on an equal footing in all Federal matters, and this language-parity is scrupulously maintained. Thus, in the Federal Council, each deputy may address the house in either German, French or Italian and there are no interpreters: everybody is expected to understand what is said. Every Federal law is published simultaneously in all three languages,—post-cards, bank-notes etc., have their instructions etc., printed in German, French and Italian, and so on.

[As for the inscriptions on coins and postage-stamps,—since Switzerland is slightly differently named in the three vernaculars and it is impossible to accommodate all the three forms of the modern name on small coins and stamps, the Swiss get out of it by calling their country by its (neutral) Latin name Helvetia! But what about the language of army-commands during Federal operations? ]

Now that way of observing strict impartiality as amongst a country's several tongues is impossible for India with her 12 vernaculars including Singhalese instead of 3. Therefore we can only have a neutral medium for our Federal affairs,—such a medium as we could use also for our international affairs. Let us here in a way take a lesson from the Swiss who are similarly situated to us, being both multilingual and bi-credal,—and as they have not imposed German as the Federal (or national) language on all the Swiss, although it happens to be the vernacular of the vast majority of them, let us also not do so with our Hindustani, which is certainly not the vernacular of the vast majority of Indians-and-Ceylonese, but might at best claim (its two literary forms, Hindi and Urdu, being taken together as one language) the greatest number of people of all the several vernaculars separately. (That is to say, the number of Hindustani-speakers and understanders is not greater than the number belonging to all other vernaculars put together, as the German-speaking Swiss outnumber all other Swiss, but it is only greater—tho' by far—than the number belonging to any other single vernacular in India-and-Ceylon.)

Now let us examine more closely the claims of Hindustani, which has been seriously proposed for adoption as the pan-Indian language for some years now. As a colloquial medium, in however variant forms and degrees of purity, Hindustani no doubt has a vogue over the greater part of India-and-Ceylon. But to show that Hindustani even in this aspect is yet far from enjoying that universality of vogue which would truly entitle it to the name of the lingua franca of the country, it is enough to point out that outside the Hindustani area proper the vogue of Hindustani as a conversational medium between persons of different vernaculars is very little in Bengal and Assam, still less in the South of the Peninsula which comprises the Dravidian language-areas, and practically non-existent in Ceylon (?),—in all of which parts English has already taken the place which Hindustani occupies as a lingua franca (in however corrupt or varying forms) in the remaining non-Hindustani parts of India. Next, on its literary and cultural side this proposed pan-Indian tongue is as yet a hypothetical medium waiting to be evolved as a via media between the Sanskrit-leaning Hindi on the one hand and the Perso-Arabic-leaning Urdu on the other, with two scripts (instead of one), so different as to be written from different directions.

[It would be a nice idea to think of a mode of writing which would combine Nagri and Urdu in one and the same piece of writing, by using the two scripts for alternate lines,—as indeed one Musalman countryman has seriously proposed to do,—so as to make a sort of Boustrophedon ('oxen's ploughing'), doubtless very economical of the writer's and reader's manual and ocular movements, tho' rather taxing on their mental energy! And the printer and the typist of course may be neglected!]

Now we know that English is rapidly gaining recognition, if it has not already done so, as the chief international tongue of diplomacy as well as of commerce. Therefore, even if Hindustani were made the pan-Indian tongue, as it is proposed to do, we could not dispense with English, but would still have to cultivate it for purposes of world-intercourse—cultural, diplomatic and commercial as well; and thus non-Hindustani citizens will be burdened with the necessity of cultivating three languages,—viz., (1) their own Provincial vernacular, (2) Hindustani as the national or Federal language ( with 2 scripts ? ), and (3) English as the international medium. But economy of national energy demands that languages whose knowledge is indispensable as equipment for the full exercise of national citizenship should be as few as possible. The imposition, therefore, of three languages where we could do with two would, if it were possible, entail a sheer waste of national energy. But even supposing that English could be dispensed with, and that the utility, sufficiency and the practicability of the adoption of Hindustani as the pan-Indian tongue were indisputable,—still it would be undesirable, because to recognise one vernacular as the Federal tongue out of several which are prevalent in the country and ought to be co-equal in status, as the Swiss tongues are, would be militating against the democratic principle of "Equal opportunities to all" since the non-Hindustani states of the Union would be burdened with the necessity of cultivating ( at least ) two tongues,—one their own and the other the Federal tongue,—while the Hindustani state or states would have the advantage of both tongues coinciding in its or their case.

But English is a neutral language whose vogue already is not quite insignificant and is daily growing as the medium of educated intercourse throughout the land ( as witness myself writing this in English, tho' knowing Hindustani well enough ! )—and it can serve at once our Federal and international purposes. For these reasons, we Indians-and-Ceylonese can do worse than fix upon the English language ( in its less exacting and more economical form than the present, because of its reformed graphic-system, dealt with below) as our medium for both national and international purposes.

[When about two years ago H. H. the Aga Khan and the Rt. Hon'ble Syed Ameer Ali expostulated with the Turkish authorities at Angora on their action in abolishing the Ottoman Khilafat in a now famous letter addressed to them, the writers of it—one an international figure in his own way, and the other a jurist and Islamic scholar, and both no mean linguists presumably—employed for their purpose—not Turkish, their addressees' tongue,—nor Arabic, Islam's sacred tongue,—nor Persian, the classical tongue of the eastern Muslims,—nor Hindustani ( Urdu ), the writers' own 'national' tongue,—nor French, Europe's and the Levant's diplomatic tongue,—none of these likely ones, all or most of which they must be presumed to know, but the English medium only ! Why ? Apparently because they deemed those other media or their command over them not adequate to express all that they wished to convey to the Turks on the subject of the Khilafat as well or effectively as they could do in English. ]

Of course, if an artificial tongue were scientifically formed on a purely a-priori basis ( unlike Esperanto, Ido etc., which are constructed from certain natural languages,—viz., the modern European ones,—and thus inevitably have failed to be impartial to all of the world's languages), and if it had for its graphic-medium a form of 'Visible Speech', the alphabet whereof should not only be perfect phonetically, but have its letters arranged in a natural or scientific order, such as the Nāgarī boasts, ( unlike the Roman alphabet which is as unscientifically arranged as it is defective phonetically ),—then that would be the ideal international ( as well as Federal ) medium for us. But pending the realisation and adoption of this logical perfection by the world, neither Esperanto nor Ido, but English will best occupy (or rather continue to occupy) that place which it is practically the worthiest to occupy, now and perhaps for a long time to come. For Britain may perish like Rome, but English must survive it at least as long as Latin did the fall of Rome.

For any now to continue to dote on Hindi or Urdu or Hindustani as the destined and proper pan-Indian tongue, only because it is an Indian (swadeshi) tongue,—preferring it to English in the face of such considerations as I have set forth, will, I hope, be allowed by all candid readers to be nothing better than unenlightened 'patrioteering' sentiment.

[Apparently, a neutral place like a neutral language could not be had as the seat of the Federal government and legislature ! But would it be a way out of the difficulty, if each of the Provincial capitals by rotation were made the national capital for one year or other period ? It would be a fine idea indeed, did it not seem at first sight rather ludicrously impractical !]

I have proposed that we adopt English for the purposes named, with its spelling reformed. For, as a great and versatile British authority has put it: "We cannot much longer put up with the time-wasting nonsense of the non-correspondence between the use of letters and the sounds they are intended to represent". ( Sir Harry H. Johnston in the Review of Reviews., August 1916.) The stupendous amount of energy which is now wasted by learners and teachers in mastering and getting mastered the current 'system' of English spelling would be released for more fruitful purposes, if only we substituted a simple phonetic system for the present so-called system which has been proved to be really a negation of all law and order, a mass of unreason and caprice held together by the sheer inertia of a conservatism at once cumbrous and quaintly ostentatious.

In the transition period from the old to the new, or pending the universal adoption of the new, the current spelling will have to be taught of course,—but the amount of acquaintance with it that will be required of our students during that period need be no more than what would enable them just to recognise matter printed or (less often) written in the old spelling,—just as scholars now do with Chaucerian and other obsolete spellings. To be able to reproduce the present lawless spelling correctly in one's own writing is far more difficult, and that would and should be obviated here in India.

THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT AND THE PANCHAMAS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I am sending you herewith a long letter, which is almost an appeal, signed by a number of Panchamas or Adi-Dravidas in No. 13, North or Vada Eluppai, Cheyyar Taluq, North Arcot District (South India).

[It runs as follows: Some three years ago, we put in a darkasth application for Government poramboke of 25.88 acres comprised in Revision-Survey number 437-1 in the village but, we beg to state we have not so far received any reply from the authorities concerned.

This is, therefore, our second application for the same poramboke mentioned in para 1 and in the final disposal of the same, we beg Government should duly consider the following:

(a) Though this poramboke was set apart for grazing, yet it no longer serves the purpose for which it was at first intended, for the whole land is now thickly overgrown with bushes and shrubs of the most undesirable type.

(b) We, Panchamas, are landless labourers and as men occupying the lowest rung of the social ladder, we have priority of claim to Government support.

(c) It is more in consonance with the oft-expressed solicitude of the Government for the elevation of the Depressed Classes in India to grant this just demand. We, therefore, look up to the Government for social uplift and economic betterment.]

The letter deals with their darkasth application for Government poramboke of 25.88 acres comprised in Revision-Survey number 437-1 in the above village. It states inter alia that their first darkasth application put in some three years ago did not evoke even a reply and that such a rebuff is hardly in consonance with the oft-expressed solicitude of the Government for the elevation of the Depressed Classes in India. It, therefore, concludes with a prayer to Government that this (second) application at least should be duly considered and favourably disposed of and that a way should be opened for their early social uplift and economic betterment.

In this connection, it is not too much to observe that the Panchamas or Adi-Dravidas, as men occupying the lowest rung of the social ladder, have a priority claim to Government support and though it is a pity that Government gave the cold shoulder at first, yet it should now sufficiently make ample amends for the same by bestowing on them the full 25.88 acres for their perpetual possession and enjoyment.

May I request through your columns all the sympathisers and well-wishers of the depressed classes here to do their bit for this down-trodden men? Mr. Veerian, M.L.C., Madras, I beg to state, can do a lot for them.

North Eluppai, Natteray P. O., Yours etc.,
(Via) Arcot, April 19, 1926. E. GOVINDAN.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS AND THEIR SOCIO-ECONOMIC SIGNIFICANCE.

The following are extracts from an article on the above subject contributed by Mr. G. Satyanarayana Murti, M. A., Professor of Economics, Madura College, Madura, to the February number of the Mysore Economic Journal:

The decennial census reports and reports of the several ethnographic surveys disclose a mass of details about the numerous local customs regarding marriage. A close analysis of the available information establishes the following facts, however offensive some of them might be to the zealous reformers and revivalists. No generalization is possible about the marriage laws and customs; the Shastric conception of marriage is practically dead. "Hindu Law permits polygamy and custom sanctions polyandry as it was at one time common amongst the Nairs and is still a veiled custom amongst them while it is openly practised by the low caste people in South India." (Gour). Widow marriage is inconsistent with the Hindu theory of sacrament but the prohibition by Manusmriti is confined only to the twice-born castes and even amongst them widow remarriages are becoming more common owing to the activities of the reformers and widows' homes and above all the Act XV of 1856 removing all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows. Marriage is generally by purchase—the custom of Varasulkam involves payment for the husband and that of Kanyasulkam payment for the wife. Infant marriages are both customary and common, the average age for marriage being 8 to 12 years with all sorts of provincial variations, but there is a tendency in reformed circles towards post-puberty marriages. Inter-caste marriages, though once permitted within certain limits, have long since fallen into desuetude, but they are, however, freely performed in the Punjab where there is a great dearth of females and the bonds of custom do not seem to be tight; some Indians to-day want the legislature to legalize inter-caste marriages, remove all legal disabilities consequent upon the present situation of Hindu Law of Marriage and make it practically a contract as in the Western countries; but inter-sub-caste marriages are everywhere legal (supported by Privy Council decisions) though not equally popular in all castes and sub-castes.

With regard to the prohibited degrees of marriage according to the ancient Hindu Law the texts of Manu, Vasishta, Vishnu, Yajnavalkya, Narada, etc., are all conflicting, many of them too wide and none of general application. The net result of the Shastric rules as to the prohibited degree of relationship for marriage (the objections to marriages between Sapindas, Sagotras, Samanapravaras, etc.) is to render ineligible no less than 2100 relations as against the relations with whom marriage is prohibited amongst the Christian nations n general or the English rules of prohibited marriage degrees as given in a statute of the times of Henry VIII. The customary law of marriage applicable to dwijas reduces within very narrow limits the prohibition of intermarriage between collaterals. The relations prohibited to be taken in marriage by a man are his sister, father's sister, mother's sister, brother's daughter, mother's sister's daughter and father's brother's daughter. Writing on this subject of Hindu marriage, Cunningham remarks, "the marriage of a man with his sister's daughter or mother's brother's daughter or father's sister's daughter is usual in all classes even among Brahmins." But among the Andhra Brahmins I know a man is prohibited by custom from marrying his father's sister's daughter. Amongst both the Tamil and the Telugu Brahmins custom sanctions the marriage of a man with his mother's brother's daughter. Baudhayana and Brihaspathi mention some examples of laxity in the law of prohibited degrees of marriage. Some current customs present worse examples. We even hear of the validity of the marriage of a man with the daughter of his wife's sister or the sister of his step-mother or a paternal uncle's wife's sister. This is analogically tantamount to a man marrying his own daughter or mother—nothing short of an incestuous marriage. History shows, however, the horrible absence of prohibition against incestuous marriages in ancient Law. Abraham had espoused his own daughter while in Egypt as in the case of Cleopatra and her younger brother, uterine brothers and sisters validly married; Ancient Athens and Rome had similar peculiar practices. Among the Kallans in our land, a man can marry the daughter of his father's sister or step-mother. Curiously enough marriage is permitted amongst the Maravers between the children of brothers. Amongst the Pallavans of Malabar, even brothers and sisters are said to marry. Amongst the Tottiyars, it is customary with women after marriage to cohabit with their husband's brothers and near relatives. The Kallars of the Madura District allow a woman to have simultaneously 10 or 8 husbands who are all held to be the fathers jointly and severally of any children that may be born of her. Peculiar Kaliyuga Draupatis indeed! Amongst the Garos, a man can marry his widowed mother-in-law. The polyandry generally practised in some parts of Northern India is of the fraternal type, all the brothers in a family having usually one joint wife but distant relations and even persons belonging to different families agree to share a wife in partnership. The husband visiting the wife has to leave his shoes or cap at the door which is notice to the other husbands that the wife is engaged (The Punjab Census, 1912, Part I). "Among the Vellalers of Karoor, there is a peculiar custom," says Nelson, "of fathers getting adult women as wives for their infant sons and themselves cohabiting with those women and begetting on their bodies children who are affiliated to their infant husbands." Singularly enough some Malabar marriage customs admit of promiscuous cohabitation and so parentage is not generally ascertainable in the male line and inheritance runs, therefore, in the female line. The origin of this practice of polyandry and of this rule of descent termed Marumakatayam or nepotism in the female line is attributed to Parasurama and the settlers of Malabar, but the truth seems to be that it is a relic of primitive antiquity. In a system of promiscuous intercourse like that in Malabar, the ordinary state of widowhood is necessarily unknown. The law of Canara called the Aliya Santana law of marriage is similar to that in Malabar and the High Court of Madras held that those sections of the Indian Penal Code providing for the punishment of offences against marriage do not cover the cohabitation of the man and woman under the Aliya Santana.

I venture to suggest some socio-economic considerations which should actuate the minds of our social reformers and revivalists in effecting some sound changes in our marriage customs and observances. Shastric and superstitious arguments apart, those who advocate widow remarriage and inter-caste marriage amongst classes and castes into which these reforms have not yet widely penetrated should remember that economists already complain of (and statistics also bear unmistakeable testimony to) the growing pressure of population on the means of subsistence in our country which is still overwhelmingly agriculturist and poor. Universalization of widow and inter-caste marriages would tend to quicken the rate of increase of population which is not an unmixed economic blessing It is a well-known doctrine associated with the name of Malthus that the fecundity of the human race is such that the people unless subject to certain checks will multiply at a rapid rate with no equal pace in the rate of increase of means of subsistence. A foresight of the difficulties attending the rearing of a family acts as a preventive check far more in England and Wales than in our country where begetting sons after entering into the vivaha-samskara is a religious duty for most people.

There is a gradual marked tendency now to postpone marriage coupled with a similar tendency at the earlier productive ages. Pre-puberty intercourse and prolonged lactation have an important bearing on the actual fertility of women; the former reduces child-bearing capacity while the latter besides diminishing the conceptivity rate among women leads more or less to the practice of abstention from intercourse. Cohabitation at or soon after puberty tends to reduce population partly by lowering the fertility of women and partly by increasing the death rate of young wives. Again the study of the variation of the number of children per family in the Punjab according to the age of the wife at marriage admits "the conclusion that the marriages in which the woman is below 15 or above 30 are relatively infertile". (The Punjab Census Report, Vol. I, 1921). The Census Superintendent for Baroda remarked that large numbers of "child wives march from the nuptial bed to the funeral pile. Nervous debility, consumption and uterine diseases create havoc among them." The leaders of our society ever busy with programmes of social amelioration should remember that early marriages though they lead to higher conceptions of right conduct are injurious to the health and happiness of our young women and increase rather than diminish the tendency towards an excessive birth-rate. Statistics show that the birth-rate in England and Wales has fallen from 35·4 per thousand in 1880 to 25·4 per thousand in 1920; but in India except among small sections of the community statistics reveal no general tendency for the birth-rate to fall. That is why most professors of economics advocate that one effective remedy for poverty in India lies in birth-control and the Indians realizing their responsibility in the matter of addition to the species. Varnasramites and social reformers unless influenced by economic considerations of the sort urged above in their zeal for reform or revival do irreparable havoc to the country.

Whatever might be the Shastric vigour of the anti-widow-remarriage propaganda, it is an undisputed fact that a good deal of public opinion seems to be in favour of widow remarriage as borne out by 60 per cent of Hindu widows of all castes and creeds marrying again and begetting children. From the statistics published by the Vidhva Vivaha Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, it can be seen that over 20 per cent. of the remarried widows are Brahmins who roughly come to about 20 per thousand of the Indian population; even Hindu widows of more than 30 years of age are said to have remarried.

Each of the countless sub-castes amongst the four traditional castes shuts itself very often against others of the same main castes so far as inter-marriage and even inter-dining sometimes as in Shraddhas are concerned. Let the stalwart Varnashrama leaders in our society remember that inter-sub-caste marriages are prohibited neither by the Smrithis nor by the decisions of the Indian courts of justice; and yet they seem to have done precious little to remove the popular discredit to such marriages still supreme in several parts of our land. Varnashramite Conferences and Matadhikarees should, in the interests of social rejuvenation, lose no time in successfully educating public opinion on the desirability of an unqualified sanction of inter-sub-caste marriages whatever might be their prejudices against inter-caste marriages.

Two pernicious marriage customs prevalent to more or less extent in South India are those of Kanyasulkam and Varasulkam. The former was until recently very virulent amongst the Andhras but thanks to the self-less labours of Telugu social reformers like the late Rao Bahadur K. Veeresalingam Pantulu Garu and others, the nasty custom of impoverishing the bridegroom or his people by taking an inordinate bride-price or Kanyasulkam is rapidly dying out to-day though even now some instances of Kanyasulkam are found here and there. Asura marriages and the bride-price connected therewith are in unmistakeable terms condemned by ou ancient Smrithikaras. The equally dangerous and the modern fashionable custom of Varasulkam or the bridegroom taking a large Varadakshina from the bride's parents so as almost to impoverish them to the verge of bankruptcy is more virulent to-day amongst the Tamilians than among the Telugus.

THE FIRST AMERICAN HEALTH CONGRESS.

For the first time in the history of public health in America those who are doing the work itself will have a chance to meet together and view it as a whole when the American Health Congress convenes in Atlantic City, May 17—22. This Congress has been the dream of the National Health Council, 370, Seventh Avenue, New York City, since its formation in 1921 and will reveal the vast strides in co-ordination of effort and co-operation that the Council has brought about for its member organizations during the last five years.

Included in the membership and on the staffs of these participating organizations are the leading authorities of the country in every phase of public health—tuberculosis and cancer control, prevention of blindness, social and mental hygiene, public health, nursing, the control of preventable diseases, the study and care of heart disease, and positive health education for both children and adults. This means that the programmes will not only show the accomplishments of public health workers up to the present, but will also forecast the plans for the future. It is possible that a public health programme for a decade may result from the meeting of specialists in so many fields.

To address the opening session of the American Health Congress, Sir Arthur Newsholme, who has been highly influential in the development of public health work in England and who has also a close knowledge of the American public health situation, is visiting this country. Professor C. E. A. Winslow, President of the American Public Health Association, will address one of the general sessions of the Congress. "Is Public Health Improving the Race?" is the piquant title of the address to be delivered by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, President of the Stanford University. It is especially fortunate that this American Health Congress will hear of the international phases of health work from Dr. George E. Vincent, President of the Rockefeller Foundation. Many other renowned speakers will complete the well-arranged programme.

Meeting at the same time, in Atlantic City, the three national nursing organizations—the American Nurses Association, the National League of Nursing Education, and the National Organization of Public Health Nursing, will hold their biennial convention; the American Child Health Association and the Conference of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America, will gather at this time for their annual meetings. The member organizations taking part are: American Child Health Association; American Heart Association; American Public Health Association; American Red Cross; American Social Hygiene Association; American Society for the control of Cancer; Conference of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America; National Committee for Mental Hygiene; National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness; National Organization for Public Health Nursing; National Tuberculosis Association; United States Children's Bureau; United States Public Health Service; Women's Foundation for Health. This means that the field of public health is completely covered in the general and special sessions. It is of special interest that the General Federation of Women's Clubs will hold its meeting immediately following the American Health Congress.

Exhibit space has already been taken by commercial and non-commercial groups, forming one of the most educational health displays that this country has ever seen.

Special rail-road rates from all parts of the country have been secured and already the assurance is that there will be at least 7,000 in attendance.

MALAVIYA CASTE DISPUTE.

An interesting case of dispute between the Malaviya castes is going on in Allahabad. Pandit Satnarain Malaviya recently filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, against Pandit Ramkant and several other Malaviyas claiming damages for some defamatory statement alleged to have been made by the defendants. The plaintiff's case was that at a meeting of the Malaviya community a resolution was passed excommunicating those who gave their daughters in marriage outside the community and further, excommunicating those who had social intercourse with such persons, which resolution was supported by the plaintiff himself, that the defendants who were not panches, took upon themselves to inform other members of the community that the plaintiff had violated that resolution and had thus rendered himself liable to excommunication inasmuch as he had social intercourse with a certain woman of the community who had herself had social intercourse with a certain man of the community who had given his daughter in marriage outside the community. The plaintiff contended that this allegation of social intercourse with the woman was not only untrue but was made by the defendants maliciously with intent to injure him and not honestly with intent to maintain the purity and good discipline of the brotherhood. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not within his jurisdiction, as well as on the ground that there was no cause of action, as mere offering of food to any person, whether a person of the caste or a person outcasted or a person of another caste or a person of the lowest caste or a Non-Hindu, according to the general ideals of Hindus, did not involve any contamination. The District Judge, before whom an appeal was filed, in remanding the case for trial on its merits, made some interesting remarks. The District Judge observed that it mattered not whether the resolution would or would not seem absurd in the eyes of Hindus generally and that the parties to the case having agreed that certain conduct was reprehensive and must be punished with expulsion from the caste, it appeared to him to be clearly defamatory for the defendants themselves maliciously to report to the community in general the false assertion that the plaintiff had been guilty of conduct outraging its resolution. It also appeared to him that what the plaintiff was accused of doing was not merely throwing food to the woman as one might throw food to a dog, but entertaining her in the ordinary sense of the term which the brotherhood would recognise as an infringement of the resolution, and he held, therefore, that the plaintiff had a cause of action. Referring to the question whether Civil Courts had jurisdiction to set aside excommunication decrees of a Panchayat, the learned District Judge observed that though the Civil Courts could not interfere with decrees of excommunication passed by a Panchayat, even where they were expressly malicious, he could not see that it followed that statements made in a Panchayat on the face of them defamatory and proved to be made with express malice, could not be sued upon in the Civil Courts, and moreover, as the present case raised the issue whether the defendants even imagined themselves to constitute a Panchayat, perfectly aware as they were that they enjoyed no such authority, he held that the suit was within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge.

CRIMINAL TRIBES SETTLEMENT.

Need for Better Conditions.

Mr. Jhabwalla who has specially interested himself in the amelioration of the condition of the Mang Garudis of Bombay, better known as the criminal tribes, has on behalf of the Purity Mission Society frequently visited the different Mang Garudi quarters in Bombay and has now represented to Government a strong protest against the condition in which these unfortunate beings are kept. He has summarily laid down the following noteworthy points for immediate redress as regards the Mang settlement at Dharavi which he says is in a disgraceful plight.

1. There is a sheer dearth of trees on and about the settlement so that the poor men have to roast themselves during the day and will swim during the monsoon.

2. There is great need for some facility to cross the streamlet adjoining the railway line beyond which every day the people have to go for their usual avocations. During the monsoon, I am sure, the people will find it a regular hardship to cross. People have complained bitterly about it.

3. Some regular pursuit ought to be taught to both men and women to enable them to fall back upon in days of unemployment, for otherwise there is no means for the poor to live. I am strongly of opinion that unemployment is one of the dire calamities among them which must be prompting the members of the tribe as such to follow dishonourable pursuits.

4. The dispensary located in the colony ought to be open during the hot weather.

5. The school of the young should be better regulated.

6. The present housing arrangements are in a disgracefully sad order and I am told during the monsoon Malaria is highly prevalent among the men sweeping off a large majority of them. Therefore before the break of monsoon their housing arrangements should be bettered.

7. The school walls should be decorated with Nature study, moral sayings and charts.

JAT PAT TORAK MANDAL, LAHORE.

The Secretary, Jat Pat Torak Mandal, Lahore, writes:

A society was started in December 1922, with the object of abolishing caste-system among the Hindus. The booklet "Madhu Vina" is a report of this mandal for the last three years, from 1923 to 1925. During this period the Mandal has been able to enlist about 500 members from nearly all the provinces of India. In addition to numerous unimportant inter-caste marriages there have been celebrated about a dozen and a half inter-marriages of note among the persons of so-called high and low castes (vide p. 35). To break caste is not an ordinary thing. Even the greatest social reformers have been able to do very little practical work in this direction. Therefore the work which the Mandal has been able to do through intercaste marriages is not really so little as it appears from the surface. The Mandal has distributed tracts and pamphlets in Hindi and Urdu in large numbers and written many articles in papers on this baneful system. It has performed the marriages of many newly converted girls with Hindu young men. The Mandal has been publishing a monthly paper in Hindi for its propaganda work.

It has held five extraordinary meetings on different important occasions at Lahore, Hardwar, and Muttra, under the presidentship of famous men like Swami Shraddanandji, Narayan Swamiji, Dr. Kalyan Das Desai of Bombay, Pt. Indra Vidya, Wachaspati and Dr. Khan Chand, M.D. It has slowly passed through the stage of ridicule to that of serious thought. The famous patriot, Shriman Bhai Parmanandji, was the President during the last three years, and Dr. Khan Chand Deva, M.D. is the President for the current year. Pt. Bhumanandji is the one permanent and paid preacher, but there are seven more honorary preachers (vide p. 35). The Mandal has never appealed to the public for funds. All the expenses have been defrayed by private collection, and the Mandal is highly indebted to L. Tirath Ram of Chak Jhumra who gave a donation of about two thousand rupees to the society. The Mandal is very hopeful and is making progress beyond expectations Attention is drawn to Mr. S.E. Stokes' letter ( p. 20) and a quotation from the census report (p. 23), the views of L. Hardayal and Swami Satya Deva, ten reasons why the caste-system should be abolished and opinions received from different places are given in the first part of the booklet. Every Hindu who takes a vow to marry himself or his sons and daughters out of his caste can be a member of the Mandal on paying Rs. 2 as annual subscription.

BHARGAVA SUDHARAK SABHA.

The public will be pleased to know that the Bhargavas, a small sub-sect of Brahmins consisting of about 5,000 persons of whom not less than 99 per cent. are educated and well-cultured, have formed a Sudharak Sabha, which held its first sittings at Ajmer in the Easter Holidays and in view of their decreasing number has passed amongst others the following important resolutions :—1. Resolved that besides the marriage of akshata yoni widows, who should in future be considered as virgins, the marriage of such other widows who have no issues and who are willing to get themselves married be considered valid. 2. Resolved that Bhargava males or females can get themselves married, with the permission of the Executive Committee of this Sudharak Sabha amongst any such Brahmin sub-castes as have Guna Karma Swabhav akin to their own, and who do not take meat or wine. 3. Resolved that marriageable ages of girls and boys be fixed at least at 15 and 21 respectively and that the custom of Gona which is neither in accordance with the Shastras nor necessary be done away with. 4. Resolved that no Bhargava more than 30 years old can marry a virgin girl. It is expected that other Brahmin communities will follow the lead so ably taken by this advanced community.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Dyarchy Suspended in C. P.: It is notified that the transfer of all Transferred Subjects in the Central Provinces is suspended from 20th April 1926 to 31st January, 1927.

Bombay's New Chief Justice: Sir Ambersen B. Marten, LL.D., has been appointed Chief Justice of Bombay in succession to Sir Norman Macleod, retired.

Agricultural Convention in Rome: It is understood that India will be represented at the forthcoming International Agricultural Convention in Rome by Mr. Henderson, Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India, and Mr. Strickland, Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Punjab.

Mahatma Gandhi to Attend the World Students' Conference: The World Students' Conference, which is to hold its first session since the world war in Finland early in August next, has invited Mahatma Gandhi to be present as a distinguished visitor. Mahatma Gandhi, while accepting the invitation, has informed the organisers that he could not change his dress or diet and would prefer not to make any speeches at the Conference. The final decision as to his departure to Finland has not yet been made.

Vidhwa Ashram at Aligarh: We are glad to learn that a Vidhwa Samrakshini Sabha is established at Aligarh for the protection of Hindu widows, with Rai Sahib Lala Brij Lal, retired Deputy Collector, as President, and Dr. Chandra Mohan Mathur, Municipal Commissioner as Secretary. Provision has been made for enabling widows to follow suitable industrial pursuits. Widows desiring to marry will be afforded due facilities for securing fit persons as their husbands. A widow has been defined as a woman whose husband is dead or whose husband has forsaken her or whose husband has become unfit for certain reasons.

The N. M. Wadia Charities: The statement of income and charity expenditure made by the Trustees of the N. M. Wadia Charities for the year 1924-25, shows that the total income derived from various sources was Rs. 4,47,017-3-10 and the sum expended on charity amounted to Rs. 3,29.916-12-5. The expenditure was distributed as follows :—Marriage of Poor Maids Rs. 6,610-0-0; Navjote of Parsi Boys and Girls Rs. 2,130; Maintenance and Education of Orphans Rs. 9,336, Hospitals Rs. 40,021-15-0, Relief of Poor and Distress Rs. 86,135-1-0, Natural Calamities Rs. 11,929-8-0, Care and protection of animals Rs. 30,000-0-0, Education Rs. 79,788-2-7, Ambalee Development Rs. 44,483-10-7, Miscellaneous and Unspecified Charities Rs. 19,482-7-3, Total Rs. 3,29,916-12-5.

Women's Education in Mysore: The Special Committee appointed by the Mysore University Senate which went into the question of further development of womens' education in the State, has now submitted a report, which, weighing well the various retarding circumstances, recommends the immediate constitution of several boards for women's higher education in important centres for an effective propaganda and the provision of better facilities for home education. The other suggestions are increased scholarships for girls and a special deputation to foreign countries to study the system of organising women's schools and hostels.

Untouchables' Revolt: During the course of an address delivered at the Untouchables' Conference (Achchut Sabha) at Allahabad, which was held recently, the President said they were grateful to the Government for its acknowledging their political entity as a class and restoring to them the right that had been usurped by the Hindus. Complaining of the paucity of representation on the Councils and local bodies, he said the Hindus who sat in the Assembly as their nominal representatives, far from being the guardians of their interests, were the very men whose oppression they could no longer tolerate. They wanted complete separation in every thing from the Hindus, Muslims and Christians, for in that alone they saw their salvation.

Reduction in Marriage Expenses: It is stated that besides the promotion of co-operative credit, some other methods are also being tried by the Punjab Government officials with a view to improving the social and economic well-being of Indian villagers. In this direction it is interesting to learn that the efforts of the Deputy Commissioner, Rawalpindi, have been attended with remarkable success. During the past year he held meetings of various tribes in his district to impress them with the desirability of reducing expenditure on marriage and funeral ceremonies to proper dimensions with the result that Lanjhuhar of Maira and Mator and Ghakkars of the two localities now spend Rs. 10 on a marriage. It is stated one Ghakkar Zaildar of a very old family has broken all records by reducing the expenses of his second marriage to Rs. 7 without losing any prestige whatsoever.

NOTES

The late Mr. E. R. Menon: It is with very deep sorrow that we record the death on Wednesday at the Yamunabai Nair Hospital of Mr. E. R. Menon who for seven strenuous years assisted in the conduct and management of this paper. In January last he joined the staff of the Indian Daily Mail where, it was hoped, he would have better prospects. He had an attack of pneumonia about three weeks ago, and was removed to the Hospital. Every attention was paid to the patient and on Tuesday he was considered so completely cured that he was told that he could leave the Hospital the next day. But that evening he had high fever and became unconscious and remained unconscious to the end which came the next day when he was to have taken his discharge from the Hospital. It is sad to think of his death at the early age of about 35. His energy and resourcefulness, his affectionate devotion, and his high principles, earned for him the respect and friendship of all with whom he came in contact. He was a good and ready writer, a generous friend and a hard worker. Whether well or ill, in fair weather or foul, he could always be depended upon to be at his post of duty. It is to be feared that the strain of the daily paper was too much for him. The lot of a sub-editor of a daily paper is one of the hardest that can be thought of. It is one of daily, hourly grind, and he is always working against time. We have long felt the need of a sort of club for Bombay journalists to which they can resort for relaxation and refreshment during their rare hours of leisure, where the sub-editor on finishing his night duties at about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning may have a couple of hours of sleep and rest. We trust that something may be done in this direction soon. If statistics were collected, it would be found that the number of cases of break-down or premature death among journalists is proportionately greater than in any other of the professions. We wish to convey our deep sympathy to Mr. Menon's relatives.

The British General Strike: For the first time in the history of Labour organization in Great Britain, there is in progress a General Strike. Hitherto strikes have been confined to particular industries concerned in a dispute. But the present strike involves all the vital trades without which national life in a highly industrialised country like Britain cannot go on. The dispute arose in the coal industry and when attempts at a settlement acceptable to owners and workers broke down, a General Strike was called by the Central Council of the Federated Labour Unions, and it has been in force since midnight on Tuesday. The international character of Labour organization has called forth the sympathy and support of workers in other countries for the British workers. Government have under their emergency powers organized special agencies for carrying on the essential trades. There are reports of riots and disorders, and it is noteworthy that though they have lasted some days now, the Police and the troops called out have so far not resorted to firing. India has been the butt of British ridicule for her communal quarrels, but it is difficult to see how class quarrels which are nowadays chronic in Europe and of which the General Strike is but an acute symptom, are more reputable or less calculated to injure national unity. The strikers and Government will have to come to terms in a few days, as Trades Union Funds are not inexhaustible and the strain upon the security services is too great to be safely continued for any length of time. But the General Strike must make a radical change in British industry and politics. The General Strike can be traced to the policy adopted by the present Government of bringing about a reduction of prices and wages by a stringent control on the currency output. Prices have responded to the policy, to some extent, but wages cannot be reduced without the wage-earners feeling the pinch, and the present struggle is one for and against the lowering of the wage-level. The wealthier section of the community will have to bear the direct and indirect losses on account of the Strike, but it would rather do this than agree to the maintenance of the present level of wages, though the latter in the long run may be more economical, and more conducive to harmonious relations between the classes.

The Madras Libel Case: We sympathise with Rao Bahadur O. Kandasami Chettiar on the result of the libel case brought by him against the Raja of Panagal, Chief Minister in Madras. Mr. Kandasami presided at a meeting of the depressed classes at Chidambaram some years ago and in his address he sharply criticised the Non-Brahmin Ministers and their Party for having failed to do their duty by the untouchables and for having generally given the go-by to the social reforms which, he holds, its founders had more in mind than political power in starting the Non-Brahmin movement. The Raja of Panagal thought it necessary to counteract the effect of this speech and shortly after in a public speech he referred pointedly to hirelings who traduced his Party. The reference was obvious and Mr. Kandasami very ill-advisedly, we think, launched the present suit. After a protracted course, the case was decided on Wednesday, technically in favour of the plaintiff with one pie damages and no costs. From the brief telegraphic message, it appears that the Judge held that the case ought never to have been brought into court, that it was a trumpery matter, and that the plaintiff had lost

nothing by the strictures of the defendant Minister. But the utter insignificance of the amount awarded—it is the smallest coin of the realm, which defendant's counsel suggested the Court should award if it should find that there was a libel—may be understood to mean, in view of the line taken by the defence, that Mr. Kandasami's character as a disinterested critic was not above reproach. The full text of the judgment may require revision of this view, but we wish to take the earliest opportunity as one of the oldest friends and fellow-workers of Mr. Kandasami, to protest that this would be very unjust to him. He would have done well to have kept clear of politicians with whom he has little in common, but we have not the least doubt that his speech at Chidambaram was, as he claimed, intended in the interests of the Non-Brahmin Party. It was a warning to it that unless it looked to the inside of the platter equally with the outside, it may come to grief even as an instrument of political warfare. If the Raja of Panagal did not understand it in that sense, it is the Raja's lack of perspective and Mr. Kandasami is not to blame for it. Mr. Kandasami's prescience has been vindicated by the march of events, and the next elections may still further confirm his foreboding.

Drawbacks of Present-day Education: It is seldom that we find a Minister criticising in strong terms the system of education that he has to administer. The Hon. Sir Syed Mahomed Fakhruddin, Minister of Education, Bihar, is perhaps an exception to this rule. In opening the new hostel building of the Arrab Zila School, he pointedly referred to some drawbacks of the present-day education. Education of the present day, he confessed, whatever else it might have done, had not solved the problem of India. He referred in particular to the deplorable fact that there is more cordiality and fellow-feeling between illiterate villagers than between the best products of schools and colleges. What the Minister evidently refers to here is the lack of team-work and co-operation between educated men. No doubt men may differ and honest differences of opinion are a healthy sign of education, but to the extent that educated men are not able to combine together for common purposes, our educational system should be adjudged a failure. A second evil to which the Minister referred is that the educational institutions are often the nurseries of communal feeling. This is obviouly due to the habit of thinking communally that is inculcated in the young by communal institutions and communal newspapers, and we agree with him that the education which does not teach people their duties to their neighbours and toleration to the religious beliefs and practices of others, as sincerly held as their own, and does not instil into them respect for the life and property of others, is defective. Another of the evils of present-day education to which he referred is that it sharpens intellect without moulding character, emphasises individuality without producing harmony and encourages competition without eliciting co-operation, due to the concentration on the curriculum to the neglect of the moral and social side of education. But, as he pointed out, this is to some extent being rectified now by the introduction of religious and moral instruction in our schools and colleges, but only the right kind of teachers imbued with a spirit of broad-mindedness and able to impress upon their pupils the essential unity underlying all religions, can produce satisfactory results. Sir Fakhruddin's suggestion for the starting of well-conducted hostels so that the future citizens may go out in life with a will for peaceful relations with neighbours, a spirit of toleration for other men's beliefs and a desire for co-operation in the common objects of the country, deserves the earnest consideration of all educational institutions in the country.

Social Evil in Madras: Following Bombay, Madras also held a public meeting last week under the presidentship of the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri to draw the attention of the Government to the necessity of taking steps to suppress brothels and the immoral traffic in women and girls. The causes that led to this demonstration are exactly the same as those in Bombay. Two striking cases of the growth of the vice have recently come to the knowledge of the public, one in which a man was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment for stabbing a girl who attempted to escape from a brothel, and the other in which a woman brothel-keeper was sentenced to six months for having kept under her control an orphan girl of 15 with the knowledge that she would be employed for immoral purposes. In Bombay at least we have the Prostitution Act to deal with open soliciting, but that too is absent in Madras and it is, therefore, all the more necessary for Government to take prompt steps to check this vice. The Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri pointed out the necessity for complete suppression and not merely the regulation of brothels. This, however, cannot be effected without rescue homes and a resolution was passed calling upon the Government to start and maintain a rescue home in the city for taking up the victims of the brothels, to train them in the proper atmosphere and equip them for a better life. In this connection we have to commend to the public the excellent work that is being done by the Yuvathi Saranalayam, the Rescue Home, conducted by Yamini Purna Tilakamma, for the uplift of the Devadasi community. The annual report of the Saranalayam which recently celebrated its second anniversary, showed that it stands much in need of financial support without which its existence itself is in jeopardy, and we hope the public of Madras will not be slow to appreciate the good work that the Saranalayam is doing for the uplift of fallen women.

Mr. Sastri Honoured: Eloquent tributes were paid to the life and work of the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri on the occasion of the presentation of a souveneir to him in recognition of the valuable lectures known as the Kamala lectures which he re-delivered under the auspices of the Madras University. Surely, it is no exaggeration to say that to only a few can be given the high position which Mr. Sastri has come to occupy, and it is but fitting that the Madras University should have taken this opportunity of appreciating the services rendered by one of its greatest alumni. The fact that men of all parties participated in the function, shows how highly Mr. Sastri is held in public esteem irrespective of his political opinions. Mr. Sastri has for some time past been taking rest owing to ill-health, and we are glad to note a remark in his speech that reports of his retirement from public life are premature.

The Bombay Sakyamuni Vihar Fund: We have been asked by the Joint Hon. Secretary, the Buddha Society, to announce that the appeal regarding the Bombay Sakyamuni Vihar Fund, published in our issue dated the 3rd April, has been issued under the authority of the Buddha Society, and that contributions should be either sent to the President, Buddha Society, Nair Building, Lamington Road, or to Mr. G. B. Trivedi, the Hon. Treasurer of the Fund, Navsari Chambers, Outram Road, Fort, Bombay.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MAY 8, 1926.

THE BROKEN PACT.

The formula which was agreed to a fortnight ago between the Swarajist leaders, Pandit Motilal Nehru and Lala Lajpat Rai, on the one side, and the leaders of the Responsive Co-operationists, Messrs. Jayakar, Kelkar and others, on the other, as a basis of re-union, has not been sanctioned by the All-India Congress Committee. It was, in fact, not placed before it at all, though the Committee was called specifically to consider it. So sure were the leaders that the Pact would be adopted that they had called meetings of their respective parties just before the Congress Committee's meeting to approve of it prior to its submission for the approval of the Congress Committee. The Responsivists met and adopted the Pact, but in the Swarajist Party it encountered such strong opposition that Pandit Motilal Nehru threw it up on the ground that his interpretation of its terms did not agree with that placed upon them by the Responsivist leaders. The Pact is quite a simple one permitting of acceptances of Ministerships in Provinces if there was sufficient assurance of freedom, resources and control of services for them in the administration of Transferred Subjects. The Swarajist Press which opposed the Pact as well as the Congress journals which supported it, interpreted it in substantially the same way. Lala Lajpat Rai who with Pandit Motilal signed the Pact on the Swarajist side, understood it in the identical sense, as evidenced by the comments of his weekly journal, the People. No one, so far as we know, has supported the interpretation put upon it, since the opposition to it in his Party manifested itself, by Pandit Motilal. The All-India Congress Committee consisting of a majority of Swarajists, would not have passed the Pact on his interpretation, or he would certainly have introduced and had it adopted by the Committee, instead of giving it up altogether. The substitute resolution which he wanted to propose was altogether an independent draft containing much matter extraneous to the Pact. The Swaraj Party and the All-India Congress Committee have so often allowed their leaders to make decisions for them that the opposition to that course on this occasion may surprise some people. There is, however, a simple explanation. The General Elections take place in September or October, and the endorsement of the Pact would have seriously upset the arrangements come to with regard to the Congress candidates to be nominated for several constituencies. The interest of some of these candidates would be jeopardised if the Responsive Co-operationists could also stand as Congress candidates.

Pandit Motilal is by no means lacking in political courage and he is besides a proud man who will not submit to be dictated to by his followers. The reason of his volte face is probably that he felt that the Swaraj Party could not hold together if Swaraj candidates for the Councils could not claim the exclusive sanction of the Congress for themselves. The Pandit, we think, is mistaken. The confirmation of the Pact would at once have brought back to the Swarajist side some of the most capable and respected Congressmen, and it would also have paved the way for the larger re-union of all political parties which every one admits would be a great gain to the country. Except the Pandit himself and one or two others whom it is difficult to specify, the Swaraj Party at present has few outstanding personalities in it, and several of its Council members and candidates can only be described as political strap-hangers. Mr. Satyamurthi like a second Pitt is reported to have exclaimed: "We alone can save the country." If that be so, the country must indeed be in a bad way. One satisfactory feature of the All-India Congress Committee meeting at Sabarmati is the attendance of several leading men of the Indian National Party and the courteous hearing accorded to them. Among them were Sir Moropant Joshi, late Member of the Central Provinces Executive Council, Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, late Minister of Education in Bombay, Mr. N. M. Joshi of the Servants of India Society, Mr. B. S. Kamat, President of the Poona Liberal Association, Mr. D. G. Dalvi, Secretary of the Western India Liberal Association and Mr. Chagla, Joint Secretary of the Indian Nationalist Party. Sir Moropant rightly judged of the result of their presence at the Congress Committee meeting when he told the Times of India correspondent after it was over, that they fulfilled two objects by going to Sabarmati, but had failed in the third. They had responded to the President's invitation which was the first step towards unity, and they had, he felt, established a better understanding between the two parties so that in future all misunderstandings and recriminations would be avoided. They had been disappointed in their hope that the door would be opened for further negotiations. It was his impression that the question of a union would not assume shape until after the elections. The question of immediate interest is, what the Responsivists propose to do now that their hopes of rejoining the Swarajists have been so cruelly dashed to the ground. They will have to decide at once whether they would join the Indian National Party which seems to stand face to face with the Congress Party in a relation of greater sympathy as a result of the Sabarmati meeting. We think that it is to their best interests and to those of the country that now that their old comrades have rudely repelled their advances, to associate themselves with the National Party which, for its part, will be greatly strengthened by their joining it. Since the above was in type, the Executive Committee of the Responsive Co-operationists has met and decided to work with the Indian National Party. This was, indeed, inevitable, as the two Parties have hardly any differences between them of principle or methods. Indian political parties are at last demarcating themselves on rational and intelligible lines, which must be of great help to the electorates in choosing their representatives.

THE NON-BRAHMIN CONFERENCE.

The first Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Conference was held here last Saturday under the presidentship of Mr. D. R. Patil, M. L. C. The one remarkable feature about it is that it was refreshingly free from the communal rancour and hymn of hate which usually characterise such conferences, and the addresses of both the President and the Chairman of the Reception Committee, extracts from which are published elsewhere, amply testify to this. At one time, however, it seemed as though the Conference would end in a fiasco owing to the misdirected enthusiasm of a section of the district delegates who, it seems, were prepared even to go to the length of allying themselves with Mahomedans against Brahmins, but finally the dissentients bowed to the will of the Chair and then everything went on well. We have always held that the Non-Brahmin movement, rightly conducted, has great potentialities in it. It can, for instance, do much to ameliorate the condition of the masses by removing some of the worst evils which are eating into their vitals. But the movement, as conducted in Madras and to a lesser extent in Maharashtra, has lost sight of the great ideals and principles which it should set before it, and has degenerated into a party of mere job-hunters and office-seekers with no thought at all for the masses whom it poses to represent. If there is one lesson which the Bombay Non-Brahmins have to learn from the failure of the Non-Brahmin movement in Madras, it is this, that mere calumny of Brahmins will not pay, but that real and constructive work alone among the masses will entitle them to their lasting gratitude. For this reason, we are glad to see that the presidential address of Mr. Patil was free from the narrow communalistic or vindictive spirit which spoils such utterances and is full of practical constructive suggestions for the amelioration of the dumb, the ignorant and the down-trodden masses which he declared to be the chief aspiration of the Non-Brahmin movement. Mr. Patil repudiated that the movement is based upon hatred towards Brahmins and declared that it hates hatred. He laid stress on the necessity of a good organisation for Non-Brahmins to undertake a huge propaganda for spreading the creed of the Party throughout the Presidency. For this purpose he laid down a comprehensive programme which included among other things the formation of Village, Taluka and District Committees under the controlling guidance of a Provincial Committee and the enrolling of proper members inspired by a missionary spirit and endowed with oratorical powers for spreading the gospel of the Party. Such a programme as that sketched out by Mr. Patil can alone bring the masses into touch with the objects, ideals and aspirations of the Non-Brahmin movement. No doubt, he realises the immensity of the task before him owing to the difficulty of getting adequate finance and proper leaders at the outset, but despite these difficulties, he is confident that the task is capable of fulfilment though it will require some time for its success.

Mr. Patil truly said that the real advancement and prosperity of the Non-Brahmin movement depends upon the Non-Brahmins themselves. It is notorious that more than the Brahmins, the Non-Brahmins present the sad spectacle of a house divided, with thousands of castes and sub-castes in their midst, and unless there is real unity between them, the Non-Brahmins cannot hope to be a powerful force in the body politic. Mr. Patil's suggestion for the starting of two newspapers, one an English weekly and another a Marathi daily, for educating the masses in matters political, social and religious and for correctly appraising the Government of the legitimate aspirations of the Non-Brahmins, is worthy of consideration. Mr. Patil also showed a warm interest in the elevation of the condition of the depressed classes which is indeed highly deplorable. "Their present condition," he said, "constitutes a grave blot on our social arrangements." He also criticised in severe terms the evil custom of untouchability which is a blot on the Hindu society and made a strong appeal to his community to purge itself of this sin of pollution. The attitude which Mr. Patil adopts towards the Reforms is fair and reasonable. He realises that the Reforms are inadequate, unsatisfactory and disappointing, that dyarchy is unworkable and that provincial autonomy should be immediately given to the Provinces, but he still recognises that there are many directions in which real progress can be made within the four corners of the Act itself. Mr. D. S. Yande, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, also made the strongest plea for social reform among the community. The abolition of the caste system, of polygamy and of infant marriages, interdining and prohibition, these are some of the urgent social reforms which he wanted the community to take up. The resolutions passed by the Conference are all non-controversial and are in consonance with public opinion. Among them may be mentioned the demand for the encouragement of cottage industries, swadeshi and khaddar, the introduction of compulsory primary education and compulsory military education in Universities, prohibition of liquor traffic in the Presidency, the lowering of the provincial electoral franchise to Rs. 3 and legislation on religious endowments on the model of Madras.

AN ALL-ROUND PROGRAM.

IV.—Notes on the Items.

On the item Educational and General.—5. [The medium of instruction for teachers and of expression for the taught to be the vernacular of their Province 'necessarily' in the lower stages of national education and 'as far as possible' in the higher stages, where English may be substituted optionally for or used partly with the vernacular according to the needs of the subjects.—English (with the reformed spelling) being taught as a 'compulsory' "second" language'—its teaching beginning with the middle-school course and being continued up to the point where the general course (whether secondary or collegiate) is left for a special course (i.e., a technical or 'professional' one).]

Unlike India which is a dependency with her no less than 12 (including Singhalese) more-or-less-developed literary vernaculars (besides a number of non-literary or undeveloped dialects),—Japan is an independent nation and practically uni-lingual. Yet English has been a compulsory 'second language' in Japan almost from the beginning of her career as a modern nation. In the higher and technical branches of her educational system, Japanese students read up their subjects largely from books in foreign languages, esp. English,—and imported (or visiting) foreign savants also lecture in their foreign tongues, esp. English, to those students, who have acquired a sufficient knowledge of English and other foreign modern languages to be able to follow the lecturers and imbibe the knowledge imparted through those foreign media, esp. English, on various subjects scientific and humanistic; but they are spared the further handicap (imposed on our students) of being required to express themselves in, or have their knowledge of those subjects tested through, that foreign medium. Obviously, more than half the trouble of the foreign medium in education as it prevails in India to-day is due to the fact that students have not only to master their subjects through a foreign tongue whether from teachers or from books, but are forced to bestow an equal or even greater amount of their attention, time and energy on how to express their information in the correct style and 'orthography' of that foreign tongue. For it is one thing to pick up a language sufficiently to be able to understand what is spoken or written in that language, and it is another and a much more difficult thing to master the same language sufficiently to be able correctly to express oneself in speech and writing in that language. Thus if the study and knowledge of the foreign medium of English to the former degree of proficiency is a felt necessity in independent and uni-lingual Japan, much more is it a necessity for dependent and multi-lingual India—and it must be so even under Swaraj when it is attained.

In fine, what we ought to object to in our education is not so much the foreign medium of instruction for teachers (and books) as the compulsory foreign medium of expression for the taught. The former may be optionally or partly employed, but the latter rarely or never imposed,—if we have the cause of our nation's education truly at heart.

Now, as regards the question of adapting our vernaculars to the requirements of modern science etc.,—let us like the Japanese (?) enrich them by free borrowings from the English terminology (which is largely also the European, American and Japanese (?) terminology). Let us not be fastidious in that respect or have puritanical fears about 'hybridising' our vernaculars,—though already they are all, like other modern languages, 'hybrid' more or less but sure enough. There is the other way beloved of the purists—of coining terms from Sanskritic and Perso-Arabic elements to correspond (as a rule, only derivationally) with the respective modern European terms—and thus creating terminological mouthfuls differently for the different vernaculars. Not only has this method no regard for uniformity of terminology as amongst the several vernaculars; and often-times in the same vernacular,—different terms being coined by different writers, and even by the same writer differently on different occasions as they arise, to express the same technical thing, in their vernacular writings on scientific, political and other subjects ;—but even were it otherwise, that is to say, even were a co-ordination of all efforts in that line to succeed in evolving a common vernacular terminology distinct from the European or English, then that new-fangled terminology would be an additional though avoidable burden to our unavoidable bi-lingualism (of English plus the respective vernacular)—since it would entail needless diversion of attention and energy to master two sets of terminology, viz., the pseudo-vernacular and the established European. Therefore let us strengthen our vernaculars only by borrowing freely of the latter, unswayed by the weak sentimental fears of the linguistic puritans amongst us.

[ Since writing this, I have noticed that the Hon. Sir T. N. Sivagnanam Pillai in his presidential address to the 'Tamil University' Conference held at Trichinopoly on the 23rd January last raised this question and answered it in a way which (I am glad) is identical with mine. His remarks which were necessarily confined to Tamil, but are equally applicable to all our vernaculars, may be slightly adapted as follows: 'In the matter of translation of scientific books from English into our vernaculars I would suggest that it would be profitable to transliterate the technical terms into the latter. The irreducible minimum of scientific terminology is common to almost all international learning in the West...It will not be altogether impossible to invent corresponding vernacular terms...But in order to preserve uniformity it will be advisable to transliterate them into the vernacular...As English alone will serve under existing conditions as the key to higher or international scientific knowledge, and since, although text-books can be produced in the vernacular, the standard works of reference will be more easily available in English, it will obviously save trouble if we import the irreducible minimum of scientific nomenclature into each of our vernaculars.' ]

On the item Educational and General.—6. [ (a) A common decimal or metric system of weights, measures and money to replace the present uneconomical, irrational, and diverse systems in use all over the country. (b) The Western calendar and mode of reckoning of time to be observed in all State transactions. ]

This item needs little explanation. The accomplishment of part (a) in particular will bring about uniformity in the matters concerned and save a good deal of our citizens' time and energy to be utilized for better purposes, just as spelling-reform is expected to do. Much the same is the object of part (b) of the item. This part has been included rather for formal completeness of the scheme than as something yet to be accomplished,—for it stands accomplished already. But it may help to turn towards the light the gaze of those amongst us who may yet be nursing their own antiquated particularism in this matter as in others.

THE PROBLEM OF THE NON-KHALSA TERRITORIES.

As a preliminary to their eventual absorption in a full Swarajic democracy (to come possibly in the distant future only), and for the due fulfilment of the object of the linguistic-area scheme—viz., to bring as far as possible all linguistically allied people together under the same administration in order to develop the vernaculars as a means of social and national progress,—the populations of the Feudatory States and Foreign Settlements in India should be brought under the jurisdiction for purposes of education of those khalsa linguistic Provinces to which they would have naturally belonged but for political accidents of the past. Thus, under this scheme, the Haidarabad State (or the Nizam's Dominions) would be divided up into its three language-areas—viz., Telugu, Marathi and Kanarese,—which should come within the educational 'sphere of influence' of (respectively) Andhra, Maharashtra and Karnataka; the Portuguese territory of Goa would come under the educational jurisdiction of Maharashtra; and so on.

(N.B.—Those in the 'Dominions' whose mother-tongue is Hindustani, and likewise all other linguistic minorities belonging to or resident in the Provinces or their 'spheres of influence' formed on the linguistic basis shall as far as possible and at their desire be provided with special schools teaching through their respective natural medium of expression,—just as there are 'Urdu' schools to-day outside the Hindustani area proper in khalsa territory.)

In cases where under this scheme a Feudatory State's territory or its part might be assigned as an educational 'sphere of influence' to one of two or more Provinces belonging to the same language-area as the State territory, consideration may be given in the first place to the size of the population whose educational interests could be conveniently managed by any one of those Provinces, and in the next place to geographical neighbourhood and facilities of communication.

Of course, the governments of the Feudatory States and Foreign Settlements must be made to pay for the expenses of the education therein conducted or controlled by the educational departments of the khalsa Provinces,—due representation of the former on the latter being also provided.

CONCLUSION.

I have endeavoured to place before readers a program (with its rationale) which commonsense seems to indicate as the only one by which Indians could realise a worthy nationhood. It is my firm belief which I would humbly ask my readers to share or try to refute if they are so inclined, that the plan sketched above is the only one on which the structure of an India united, free, happy and progressive may be founded, reared and maintained. You may add to it elements of greater strength and beauty—economic buttresses and gables, constitutional wings and approaches,—but you may not safely take anything away from it. I, therefore, earnestly wish that all our public workers will accept the plan in its entirety, and that if all cannot work towards the fulfilment of the whole of it directly, they will at least take care that no step or policy of theirs shall either set back or counteract the realisation of that scheme in any respect.

INDIAN SOCIAL LIFE AND MODERN URDU POETRY.

(BY MR. MOHAN SINGH, M.A.)

IV

Perhaps I may allow the dean
Had too much satire in his vein;
And seem'd determin'd not to starve it,
Because no age could more deserve it.
Yet malice was never his aim;
He lashed the vice but spar'd the name:
No individual could resent,
Where thousands equally were meant;
His satire points at no defect
But what all mortals may correct;
For he abhorred that senseless tribe—
Who call it humour when they gibe.
As with a moral view designed
To cure the vices of mankind,
His vein, ironically grave,
He shamed the fool, and lashed the knave.
To steal a hint was never known,
But what he writ was all his own.

—(Verses on the Death of Dr. Swift.)

And therefore if, notwithstanding all I have said, it shall still be thought necessary to have a bill brought in for repealing Christianity, I would humbly offer an amendment that, instead of the word Christianity, may be put religion in general; which I conceive will much better answer all the good ends proposed by projectors of it.—(The Argument against abolishing Christianity in England).

Art holds the mirror up to Nature. Nature does not include the hill and the dale, the dawn and the dusk, the star and the herring alone. It includes human Nature as well. In the mirror of the lyrist, we see longings and ideals; we see fixed up in form, precise and charming, the chaotic wishes and emotions of ours. Of how great an advantage that is! The ideal, the first concern of the traveller on the path of Life, is fixed in shape, colour, proportion for him. He has found the Star; let him now reach it in its blessed light.

But that is not enough. Having decided on the goal, having set our foot on the road to it, we constantly need another aid for fixing in measure our distances covered. To come back to my original metaphor we need another type of mirror that should show us our foibles, vices reflected in the nature of our achievements. The first mirror inspires us, infuses courage into our failing hearts; the second controls us, damps the devilish activity in us, warns us off the byeways into the highways. How necessary is it? As necessary as the spur is verily the bridle.

The satirist, the wit it is, who supplies the second mirror, the mileage metre, the warning-board. The politician, the educationist, the priest—they make history; the satirist pens the running commentary on it. He who runs may read. It is a commentary by the contemporaries themselves; hence its immense value in the present and the future.

This commentary is needed at all periods, specially so in periods of transition or decadence. Indeed, the period of history most productive of satire—says an American Reviewer of Dr. Huge Walker's recent work "English Satire and Satirists"—has rarely corresponded to the crest of the waves of human progress. When the most graceful genius of romance flourishes, satire hides its head. It is most at home in times that are most palpably "out of joint," flashing forth most brightly in the darkness of embittered controversy. It implies the pillory. It requires some object to pelt with its barbs.

It implies the pillory! It requires some object to pelt with its barbs! Indeed so, cries the subject of this article, Syed Akbar Hussain Akbar; these times I lived in were out of joint; they badly needed pillorying; I somehow or other got it into my head to play the Dean. Was it my English education that stirred me to the playing of it? Or was it the inspiring or jolting social ride in the company of the Addisons and Steeles and Goldsmiths and Popes and Arbuthnots of the Oudh Punch? I shall not say which. But there it was, and see how well I did it!

Formidable indeed is this list of the objects Akbar's barbs pelted. Persian poetry has only two poor innoxious things for pillorying. The Sheikh with his big turban, bigger rosary, biggest shoes, pretending to be "dry," celibate and faithful but universally accused of having designs on the red fairy in the bottle and the pretty wine-server, and of bartering away this world's pleasures, fleeting and mostly out of reach for him, for the next world's perpetual and ticketed joys. Second, the unfortunate patron of arts who has wittingly or unwittingly incurred the wrath of the artist. To these two Urdu poetry has added the Brahman and the Bania. Vide Sauda's higvasor satires. By Akbar's time the name of such fit targets had become legion.

The first and foremost of the preys is the Babu, vain, shallow, snobbish, exotic, invertebrate. Akbar had no mercy for this new product of "the happy mingling of the east and the west." He had as little patience with the modern Leader. You all know what he is. Hypocrite and outlandishly frank, cowardly and bold, selfish and selfless by turns, he is one of the most pitiable creatures. Between themselves the ass of a public and the Roller of a Government keep the poor misguided fool d—l all his life. Third comes the Purdah-less girl glorified by the new Reformer. This forward, shameless, saucy, sirenish....

Now, Sir, you need not turn up your noses at these epithets; nor need you call him unchivalrous. Akbar was a Mohammedan first and last; never mind his graduation, his judgeship, his social circumstances. He did not like your modernism. He detested the Indian ape for the aping was confined to the surface, glossy characteristics of the westerner. Upon the work of the expression of his hatred, he brought to bear an intensely keen intellect. Master of the craft that he was, taking shelter under cover of the topical, the humorous, he used his newly imported English words and old traditional diction and metres to such a wonderful effect that each couplet acted as a lash under the impact of which the wretched object first winced, then shuddered, then finally became numbed. Every line, nay every word, told.

In satiric verse he stands alone with no one before or after, and upsets my pet theory that, given sufficient time and material, one should be able to trace the literary lineage of any so-called most original work. He is not alone but unique. His uniqueness lies in his comprehensive response to the countless acts done about him. His mirror reflects faithfully and effectively the follies and vagrancies of such mixed company as The Reuter Agency, The Kaiser, The Currency Policy of the Government, The canned Milk, The Educationist, The Sheikh, Lord Curzon etc.

Never was the folly of "things in general," which made a certain General sick according to the latest storyette going the round of the press, condemned more convincingly than in Akbar. I wish Mahatma Gandhi's Home-Rule were interspersed with suitable quotations from Akbar.

I must add that our satirist did sometimes overdo his part. He overseasons and thereby justly exposes himself to the charge of misanthropy. Damn by all means if you so will the anglicised Muslim as did the venerable Samuel Butler "the Frenchified Englishman" but then, in the excess of zeal, damn not thing after thing of the Westerner till nothing is left to consign to the nether regions. To substitute religion in general for Christianity! To substitute civilization for westernism or Babuism.

In the matter of a consistent, disciplined, moderate attitude of true Indian Nationalism towards the Western civilization, Ratan Nath Sarshar scores over Akbar. Sarshar wrote his four volumes in prose and showed that Dickens and Shaw could be combined in one. In his case satire—a somewhat pungent seasoning—is used in moderation and therefore it adds piquancy to his fantastic romance. It is a legitimate embellishment. It is not his chief modus operandi; therefore it loses not in effect, nor becomes definitely unsavoury. Much more than Akbar had he that genuine love of humanity that forms the basis of all great literature.

Satire, says Joseph Hall writing in the 17th century, should be like the porcupine, that shoots sharp quills out in each angry line. A love of virtue should light the flame of satire, says Cowper a century later. One should never rail to gratify one's spleen. Langland's ideal was that of Cowper's. He railed against the sins of the day from his sense of sorrow for the failings of humanity and of responsibility in helping society to overcome them.

Study Akbar and see for yourself how far Akbar comes up to this ideal.

MONOGAMY FLOUTED.

A valued friend writes :—

At Binaga, a village near Karwar, on the 28th of April last, there took place a marriage which is reminiscent rather of 'the bad old times' than these so-called days of progress and enlightenment. This is a case of polygamy occurring in a section of society where it was least expected. The bridegroom is a young man of 29, a graduate pleader of Honavar, by name L. H. Prabhu. He has a wife living, whom he has deserted for some years past, without anything like a sufficient cause and notwithstanding the efforts of an orthodox Swami (spiritual head) of his community to make them live together. The bride is a daughter, of about 17 and tolerably well-educated, of an educated person in Government service in the Co-operative department,— M.A. Varti being the latter's name. Considering the position and the educated character of the parties, it is no wonder that the marriage has caused a sensation in and about Karwar and especially in the social circles of the community (the Gaud Sarasvats) to which the parties belong. For, until this marriage occurred, the community could congratulate itself upon the fact that monogamy had been firmly established in its midst, and opinion in the community was so strong against polygamy that within its educated section at least resort to it was unthinkable during the last decade and a half. But the present case has given a rude shock, and set the public-spirited amongst the Sarasvats to think if education and public opinion are by themselves sufficient safe-guards against such lapses, and whether it is not high time to fortify them by legislation, as the Parsis have done and as the Sindh Hindus are taking steps to do.

This reform is really over-due; and no humane or sane-minded person would object to it if he were to give some earnest thought to the condition of the superseded Hindu wife—a 'grass-widow'—whose fate, under the age-long law of her fold, is (in a way) worse than that of a widow pure and simple ; for the latter (of whatever caste) has at least a chance and a hope of re-marriage under the kindlier dispensation vouchsafed to her by Vidyasagar of blessed memory,—but the 'grass-widow' has to pass her days in a state of humiliation, exposed to the taunts and suspicions of the uncharitably-minded. We have to thank ourselves if in these circumstances she is tempted to release herself from a dead matrimonial tie by leaving her ancestral fold and embracing an alien faith. Here is scope for work for those Sangathanists who are not averse to putting their own house in order as the best means of realising their aims.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL NON-BRAHMIN CONFERENCE.

The first session of the Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Conference was opened on the 4th instant at 4-30 p.m. in the Damodar Thakersay Hall, Parel, under the presidentship of Mr. D. R. Patil, M. L. C.

Reception Chairman's Speech.

In the course of his speech welcoming the delegates' Mr. D. S. Yande, Chairman of the Reception Committee' said that the objects of the Conference are political emancipation, unity and peace with sister communities, securing seats in the Councils, local-boards and municipalities, organising workmen and the removal of untouchability. He then traced the history of Bombay from its earliest times and showed how Non-Brahmins were one of the most prosperous sections of the population, but lost it on account of internecine quarrels. With a view to bring about social reform he suggested removal of caste-system, inter-dining as often as possible, marriages based on compatibility of temper without reference to caste, prohibition of all marriages of boys below 19 and girls below 15 by leaders of the community, putting a stop to extravagance on marriage occasions, reform in marriage ceremonials, abandoning of the practice of the distribution of liquor at public dinners, forbidding of polygamy, removal of prohibition of widow remarriage wherever existing and propaganda for decrease of the use of drugs and drinks.

Presidential Address.

The following are extracts from the presidential address delivered by Mr. D. R. Patil.

A deep and critical study of our movement will satisfy our Brahmin friends that our movement is not based upon hatred but that it hates hatred. Mutual understanding will bring about mutual co-operation and that will be the happiest, the most glorious and the most auspicious day when all the sons of India will be friendly towards one another and will be sincerely animated by feelings of affection for the masses.

Let me seriously inform my Brahmin friends who see hatred in our movement that our movement did not and does not aim at the hatred of Brahmins. In the words of the Hon. Rajah of Panagal I should like to tell them that "it is not we that wish to create hatred. It is not we that desire to foment strife. It is not we that are anxious to create divisions and if we could by any means promote peace and concord we shall not lag behind. We are ready to grasp the hand of fellowship if it is extended to us provided there is a distinct change in the angle of vision, provided the mentality of these people (Brahmins) is altered and all are prepared to meet on a common footing of equality, anxious to promote the welfare of the masses and eager to cast away the monopoly of the ages."

Need of Organisation.

We ought to feel the necessity of good organisation because the antagonists of our movement are trying their level best to misinterpret and misrepresent our movement in order to belittle it. They have taken up the abominable and insidious work of depreciating the high, the noble, the lofty aims and aspirations of our movement which is directed towards the amelioration of the dumb, ignorant and down-trodden masses. Taking into consideration the strong forces we have to combat, it is highly essential that we should lose no time in embarking upon our regular work of organisation.

Our organisation must begin with villages; and Village, Taluka and District Committees must be formed under the controlling guidance of a Provincial Committee of

our Presidency and thus we must begin our work on systematic lines. To make our work a success we shall have to undertake a huge propaganda for spreading the creed of our Party throughout the whole Presidency. The preaching of the gospel of our Party will have to be entrusted to and performed by a set of persons carefully chosen for the purpose. The persons to be so selected must have the good of the movement at their heart. And they must be willing and ready to put up with some inconveniences and if need be to undergo some sacrifice. They must be persons inspired by missionary spirit and endowed with oratorical powers. I do realise that the task is stupendous and difficult and that there are several obstacles to its fulfilment. Perhaps capable and spirited men in sufficient numbers may not be forthcoming at the outset. The problem of finance would also present a serious and formidable question. Some other unforeseen difficulties are also likely to spring up. But despite such and other difficulties, the task is capable of fulfilment though it is true that it will require some time for its success.

Appeal for Unity.

The real advancement and prosperity of our Non-Brahmin movement depends upon the Non-Brahmins themselves. We must sink our differences and try to stand united in the various activities of our movement. I have already told you that our organisation must begin with the villages. We shall have to admit that there are so many quarrels, dissensions and differences of opinion among various communities of our own. Dissensions have already caused a lot of harm to us and they will cause more harm still, if they are allowed to continue. In future, Non-Brahmins will indeed be a formidable power provided they are free from the pest of disunion. It is needless, gentlemen, for me to tell you that "United we stand and divided we fall" and further I need not tell you that in Kali Yuga "Union is strength." No good work can be achieved without unity. To secure unity we want educated leaders actuated by an intense love of the public good to create and stimulate feelings of affection and goodwill between our various communities. They must educate the people so as to make them realise the real importance and the desirable effect of unity. We want leaders who are above self-aggrandisement and feel a sincere desire to promote the welfare of the masses. We form the major portion of the population of this Presidency, and the electoral strength is in our favour. Therefore if we are not divided and if we act with feelings af co-operation towards one another then we are sure to capture the various institutions of local self-government. Now the most important question of immediate attention is the Council elections that are drawing near and which will be held in the month of coming November. There is no doubt that our Party in the Council of our Presidency ought to be a powerful body. If we want to become a real power in the Bombay Legislative Council we must forget all our differences and try our utmost to secure as many seats as possible in the Bombay Legislative Council. Unity and strenuous work are the two factors upon which we must rivet our attention. Let us gird up our loins and embark upon a vigorous propaganda of arousing the masses to the necessity and desirability of electing men of our Party in a large number.

Education of Masses.

The agency of Newspapers plays an important part in educating the masses in matters political, social and religious. In any way we have to do our best in the circulation of our journals on as liberal a basis as possible. The educative value of journalism cannot be over-estimated. I should like to bring to your notice, gentlemen, that one English weekly paper and one daily Marathi paper are the urgent necessity of the day. Through the medium of the English weekly paper, Government will be in a better position to understand and appreciate our legitimate aspirations.

The Working Classes.

The condition of working classes is very unhappy and it deserves attention at the hands of those who feed on their labours. Capitalists treat the labouring classes not as men but as machines. This state of things naturally inclines the employee to regard his employer as a hard and selfish tyrant. To my mind the employer and the employee ought to be friends and allies as their interest is mutual.

Drinking Evil.

I here appeal to the working classes in Bombay that the money they earn by their hard labour should be utilised by them with the strictest possible economy. Many of them are unfortunately in the habit of drinking liquor which is also greatly responsible for their impoverished condition. I earnestly appeal to them to keep themselves away from the drinking evil as the evil habit of drinking does little good and exposes the drunkard to loss, misery and ridicule. Drinking impoverishes a man and involves him in debt.

Depressed Classes.

Our movement aims at the elevation of the masses. The depressed classes form an integral portion of the masses. So it is the duty of every one of us to improve their position which is deplorable indeed. Their present condition constitutes a grave blot on our social arrangements. For the welfare of these classes, it is very necessary that what is possible for us to do for them must be done for them. We must not neglect to improve their social status. Their very touch is regarded as pollution. This is deeply revolting to our sense of justice when they are human beings like ourselves. They have brains to think and hearts to feel like our own. When we touch lower animals we do not feel any sense of pollution. But we see pollution in the touch of these persons. When any such person embraces Islam or becomes a convert to Christianity, we do not feel the least hesitation in shaking hands with him and the idea of pollution is absent from our mind as if either Islam or Christianity has the magic power of removing pollution. No sensible man can say that this is a satisfactory state of things. The sooner we purge ourselves of the sin of pollution, the better.

Reforms.

My experience of the Council has convinced me that the grant of Provincial Autonomy is quite necessary if the people were to reap full advantage of the reforms. The British Parliament, when they granted the first instalment of the reforms to the people of this country, naturally relied upon the people to offer their co-operation and good-will in working the reforms and this expectation of theirs was the key-note of the constitution of the Government created under the Reforms Act.

I do maintain that the reforms are inadequate, disappointing and unsatisfactory. But that does not mean that they are incapable of doing some good to the people. If we carefully analyse the work of our local Legislature since the reforms, we have to recognise that, by passing the City and District Municipalities Acts, the District Local Boards Act and the Primary Education Act, it has laid the foundation of true democracy for the masses in the districts by affording genuine political training for public life.

No doubt Dyarchy is a great obstacle to the real progress of the country. Unless and until this system is radically modified, we cannot hope to do much for the people. Nevertheless there is no royal road to Swaraj except by working the constitutional machinery provided by the Reforms Act.

CONCLUSION.

There has been wide-spread misconception about the nature, scope and object of our Non-Brahmin movement. Ours is indeed a movement of the real amelioration of the masses. Our opponents in the so-called higher classes are by temperament and tradition incapable of grasping the inner meaning of this mass movement. Their domestic upbringing, mental equipment and social environment have given them a distinct bias in favour of class interests and they will use their utmost efforts by creating divisions in our own ranks. We are handicapped by our numerous disabilities. Let us, therefore, work towards that end with our united efforts and with great vigour and energy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Two Lady Graduates: We are glad to see that at the last B. A. examination of the Allahabad University two lady students, Miss Shyam Kumari Nehru, daughter of Pandit Shyamlal Nehru and Shrimati Usha Nehru, and Miss Chandrawati Sukla, have come out successful, the former in the first division and the latter in the third division. Miss Shyam Kumari Nehru is the second lady graduate of the Allahabad University who obtains a first class in the degree examination, the first being Miss Asha Adhikari, M. A., a Professor in Crosthwaite University College and the eldest daughter of Prof. Phani Bhushan Adhikari, head of the Philosophy department of the Hindu University of Benares.

Gwalior Races Closed: The Maharani Regent of Gwalior in closing the State race-course, has set a commendable example to other States. Horse-racing in England and elsewhere, apart from the excitement in betting which it offers, is valued much as a kind of sport; but many of our Maharajas and Rajakumars have no interest in the sport of racing, but only like the excitement of betting. The late Maharaja Scindia was one of them. It is said that the race-course is closed owing to the starting of a race-course in Kolhapur and the heavy drain which the up-keep of the race-course involves to the exchequer of Gwalior. But whatever that may be, this wise act of the Maharani will not only result in a considerable saving of money but will also save many a poor individual and family from ruin.

A Reform Marriage: A reform marriage according to Brahmo rites between Srimathi Leelavathi. (daughter of Mr. V. Balasundaram Mudaliar, Retired Manager, P. W. Secretariat, Mysore Government and Secretary, Bangalore Cantonment Brahmo Samaj) and Sriman S. Vairavanathan, B. A., (son of Mr. M. Subbaraya Pillai, Tashildar, Sivaganga Estate, and brother of Captain S. Kumaraswami Pillai, Civil Surgeon, Vizianagaram) was celebrated amidst a large gathering of friends and relatives at "Taj Mahal," Ulsoor Road, Bangalore, on Friday last, the 30th April 1926, when Dewan Bahadur Sir R. Venkata Ratnam Naidu (Vice-Chancellor, Madras University) officiated as Minister and Mr. V. Chinnaswamy Mudaliar (Non-official Registrar) registered the marriage under Act III of 1872.

Delegate to International Women Suffrage Alliance: Mrs A. Rukmani Lakshmipathi, B.A., Secretary of the Bharata Stri Mahamandalam and an Honorary Secretary of the Andhra Ayurvedic Pharmacy Ltd., is proceeding to Europe per S.S. "Oronsay" which has sailed from Colombo on the 5th May as one of the delegates of the Women's Indian Association, Madras, to the 9th session of the Congress of International Women Suffrage Alliance, which meets from the 28th May to the 5th June 1926 at Paris. The following will be among the important questions to be discussed by the Congress:—"Woman Suffrage," "Woman Labour," "Traffic in Woman" and "Nationality." The last session of this Congress, which meets once in three years, was held in Geneva. Mrs. Rukmani Lakshmipathi is a grand-daughter of Rajah T. Rama Rao and sister of Capt. Rajan, I.M.S.

Uplift of the Depressed Classes: The Tilak School of Politics, Lahore, has started an Achhutodhar Mandal aiming at ameliorating the conditions of the depressed classes. The Mandal's immediate programme chiefly consists of undertaking co-operative work and organising a service Bureau for the better training and employment of the people of the depressed classes as domestic servants, assistants, artisans and factory workers. Special attention is proposed to be paid to sweepers of the municipalities and small towns, some members of the Tilak Schools having already done pioneer work at Batala, where they have organised a welfare centre for them. While admitting the importance of religious work being pursued by the Arya Samaj and like bodies the Mandal would confine itself to the uplift of the untouchables, educationally, economically and socially.

Female Education in the Punjab: A Conference on female education in the Punjab was held on the 27th April, Lahore, under the presidency of Shaikh Abdul Qadir, under the auspices of the Punjab Social Reform Association. A representative gathering was present and discussion took place on the question of female education in the Punjab in which a large number of prominent educated ladies and gentlemen took part. Resolutions were passed urging upon the Government the necessity of providing a much larger proportion of public funds for extension and improvement of female education in the province and the need of appointing a representative committee to investigate the whole question of womens' and girls' education in the Punjab and that a committee be invited to suggest methods of creating schools, and of adapting the existing schools and curricula to meet the considered wishes of the people.

Jail Reform in the Punjab: The Bande Mataram understands that the Punjab Government is contemplating the introduction of various reforms in the present jail administration of the province in pursuance of certain recommendations of the Punjab Jails Enquiry Committee, whose report it has been considering for some time past. The reforms, it is understood, include the abolition of the existing posts of jailor, deputy jailor and assistant jailor and the creation instead of deputy and assistant superintendents. Unlike the present incumbents, these new officers would be required to possess better educational qualifications and would receive higher emoluments than those of the existing jailors and their assistants. Only such would be recruited for the new jobs as are of good reputation. The paper further understands that orders have already been issued for discontinuing some of the present prison labours, namely, the drawing of water from the wells. Among the new recommendations proposed are arrangements for recreation for prisoners and the starting of separate kitchens for Hindus and Mussalmans. To carry out these reforms an additional Inspector-General of Prisons is proposed to be appointed.

The Law of Concubinage: Whether a concubine in order to be entitled for maintenance should reside at the same house with the paramour, his wife and the regular members of the family, formed the subject of an important decision by the Privy Council on the appeal preferred by Bainagubai Manglorkar for maintenance from the estate of Vasanji Thakar, her paramour. The trial judge decreed in her favour, but the High Court set aside the judgment and hence the above appeal. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, consisting of Lord Blansburgh, Lord Darling, Lord Salve Sen, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali which heard the appeal, decided to advise his Majesty the King that the decree of the Bombay High Court be set aside and the judgment of the trial judge be restored and costs of all parties be paid from the estate. Lord Darling delivering judgment said that the real question was whether to belong to the family the concubine must reside at the same house with the man, his wife and the regular members of his family. Their Lordships expressed the opinion that such common residence was now unnecessary, whatever the case, when the concubine was a slave of the household. The decision of their Lordships, though it should be welcomed from one point of view in that it makes concubinage a more expensive affair, cannot however be held to expound the correct principles of Hindu Law.

Annual Meeting of Marwari Library: The annual meeting of the Marwari Library, Delhi, was held last evening (March 17th) in the Hindu Mahasabha pandal. Seth Ghanishyamdass Birla, the great philanthropist, was voted to the chair. The Secretary read out the progress report of the Library. The financial position of the library was very weak and it was under debt of ten thousand. The Secretary thanked the donors and specially the local municipality for its annual aid. Seth Lakhshmi Narain, Gododia, announced a donation of Rs. 1,000 to the library. Some more donations of minor values were also announced. Then Seth Ghanishyamdass requested Lalaji to deliver his lecture. Lalaji delivered a very impressive lecture. " Be brave, if you want to live on earth " was the general theme of Lalaji's lecture. He said that no nation could lead an honourable life on earth, unless it had the power to defend its wealth, its women and honour. No nation which had not the power to defend its religion and temples could be called religious. The honour of a society was not only in wealth, or education, but also depended on its bodily strength to defend its self-respect. I wish you " to become so strong, that no opponent should dare to look down upon your women, wealth and honour. Remember nobody has a right to be called a man if he cannot defend his self-respect." Referring to the Government support, Lalaji said that when Government required money for war bonds, it folded its hands before the Banias, but when the question of enlisting Aggarwalas in police and army arose, the Government would say, " Oh they belong to non-martial classes." Lalaji said: " In ancient times our women also used to remain armed and they defended their honour in time of danger. Time has come again when not only men but every woman should put on arms so that no rowdy might dare to look at her." Seth Ghanishyamdass Birla thanked Lalaji and requested the audience to act up to Lalaji's advice.—The Tribune, Lahore.

The Tamil Nationality of Jesus Christ: The Tirupathur correspondent of the Hindu, Madras, wrote to that paper under date March 16th: Under the auspices of the Saraswati Vilas Free Reading Room, a lecture was delivered by Mr. M. S. Ramaswami Iyer, B A., M.R.A.S., Deputy Superintendent of Police, Vellore, on Sunday, the 14th instant, at 4 p.m., on the Tamil Nationality of Jesus Christ, with Mr. K.S. Ganesha Iyer, B.A., B.L., the District Munsiff, in the chair. The meeting was well attended and the subject being very illuminating was listened to with rapt attention by many Christians to whom the interpretations of the Biblical names were surprising. Mr. Ramaswami Iyer explained the various garbs of the apostles, the similarity in the modus operandi of baptism, the sacred thread, the veshti-like attire of the disciples, the method of weeping over the dead, the dandam (stick) in the hand of Christ, the flowing locks of hair, the mark on the forehead, the curious emblems, to wit, the eagle, the cock [cf., Seval (cock) of the God Subramania], the lion, and exhibited pictures and photos taken from the Vatican, and published in authorised books illustrative of the customs and manners, thoughts and modes of ancient Babylon, holding synthetical coincidence with those obtaining in South India. The philological explanation of the various terms, viz., Samuel, Paul, John, which till now, have baffled the wit of European scholars, was very edifying, and the meaning became clear only when the words were traced to the fountain-source, the Tamil country. His arguments in favour of a Tamil Nationality for the Lord Jesus Christ were quite convincing based as they were on careful research, amidst his arduous task as a Police officer. The meeting lasted for three hours and the Chairman warmly complimented the learned officer for the rich menu he furnished to the educated audience. After the proposal of vote of thanks to the lecturer and the chair, by Mr. T. M. Sundaram Iyer, Municipal Councillor and Vice-President of the Reading Room, they were profusely garlanded and the meeting came to a close.

NOTES

Mr. Keynes on the Gold Exchange Standard: The oral evidence given by Mr. Keynes, the famous English economist, before the Royal Commission on Currency, a summary of which appeared in a recent issue of the Indian Daily Mail, is the exact reverse of that given by Dr. Cannan. While Dr. Cannan put forward a vigorous plea for the Gold Standard, Mr. Keynes advises the Royal Commission that it would do well to do nothing. Mr. Keynes is well-known for his book, "The Economic Consequences of the Peace" and he is also the author of a book on Indian Currency and Finance published some years back in which he has advocated the Gold Exchange Standard and apparently he sees no reason to change his opinion since then. His objections to the Gold Standard are based on four grounds: the effect on the international value of gold, the strain on the London Money Market, the effect on the international position of silver, and the financial cost to India. He does not, however, set much store by the first and second, but it is the last two objections which he considers as of overwhelming importance. Mr. Keynes is of opinion that both externally and internally the effect of a Gold Standard will be disastrous. Externally, silver, owing to lesser demand from India which is a predominantly silver-using country, will considerably depreciate in terms of gold, while internally "India would by her own act have depreciated by perhaps 50 per cent the predominant store of value of her own people." There is indeed considerable force in this objection, but we do not see why, if other countries have found it possible to change from a Silver to a Gold Standard without much trouble, India also should not do the same. Moreover, currency now-a-days has become more a matter of sentiment and if Indian sentiment genuinely demands a Gold Standard, we cannot understand why it should be refused. We are glad to see that Mr. Keynes himself conceded the necessity "to placate Indian opinion than to thwart it even though Indian opinion is misguided." Mr. Keynes estimates that the change to the Gold Standard would cost India about £. 67 million which expenditure he considers might be usefully spent in a hundred better ways. We quite appreciate his advice, but he forgets that the Indian Currency system as at present existing easily lends itself to manipulation by Government which has only been prolific of blunders in the past. Surely, Indian opinion will be prepared to sacrifice any amount of money for securing an automatic currency free from the machinations and manipulations of Government.

Presidential Address to the U. P. Muslim Local Boards Conference: The address which Khan Bahadur Habiz Hidaryat Hussain delivered as President of the second session of the Muslim Local Boards Conference held recently at Philibit, but for some statements to which exception will have to be taken, was on the whole a moderate presentation of the Muslim case and contained sound words of advice to members of his community. He asked his Muslin brethren not to forget the hard logic of facts that they are in the minority and that, subject to certain restrictions, they have to accommodate themselves to the majority. He at the same time appealed to his Hindu brethren to realize the responsibilities of a majority. He emphasized that while Hindu-Muslim unity could best be achieved by mutual tolerance and good-will, it could not be attained by the common hatred of a third party and that a unity based on such slippery and treacherous ground can have no stable basis and should be despised, a fact which needs to be emphasised in view of recent utterances indulged in by a section of people that it mattered not Hindus and Muslims fought with one another, provided they hated the foreign element more. Mr. Hussain declared that "separate communal representation is the very bane of democracy, it is an outlawry upon people's prerogatives" and yet, curiously, a few sentences afterwards, he said that "the circumstances of the country existing at present not only warrant the extension of separate representation of the community but render a still further extension of the same indispensable." As the Leader points out, this is how the Muslims are hugging a thing which is essentially evil. The Indian Christians and Sikhs have already realised the futility of communal representation; why not the Mahomedans in the Punjab who are in a majority there give it up? Mr. Hussain claimed that Urdu is the mother-tongue of both Hindus and Muslims. How extravagant this claim is, may be seen from the fact that in almost all the provinces it is not the mother-tongue of the masses and even in the United Provinces it is not the mother-tongue of the Hindu masses who form the large majority. Mr. Hussain had some strong words to say about the Islamia Schools where, he said, "instruction is of a low order, where discipline is lax and where encouragement to either master or pupil is at a discount." This is a sufficient condemnation of the instruction imparted through denominational institutions, and we hope his co-religionists will take this to heart and educate their children in mixed schools.

Removal of Sex-Disqualification: The Government of India is to be congratulated on the amendment which it has recently issued to the electoral rules of all the legislative bodies in India, both Central and Provincial, empowering them to remove the ban against women being elected or nominated members of a legislative body. Under the old rules, the Provincial Councils could only pass a resolution enabling women or any class of women to become electors, but under the new rules they can, after a month's notice, pass a resolution removing the ban against women being elected or nominated members of a legislative body. The Assembly and the Council of State also can pass similar resolutions and in the case of Ajmer-Merwara and Delhi the Assembly is given the power to put women there on an equal footing with those in other constituencies in India. The thanks of the public are due to the Women's Association which organised an agitation for the removal of sex-disqualification in respect of women standing as candidates for the various legislatures and placed its views strongly before the Muddiman Committee and obtained a favourable verdict from that body, and to Mr. B.Das, its ever-vigilant champion in the Legislative Assembly, who by frequent questions drew the attention of the Government to the urgency of coming to a decision on the matter. The amendment of the electoral rules at the present moment is very timely coming as it does upon the eve of fresh elections, and it now rests upon the public to send suitable women representatives to the legislatures.

Compulsory Military Training: We print elsewhere in our issue a message to the volunteers of India from Miss Miriam Keeler, Secretary, New England Fellowship of Youth for Peace, Boston, U.S.A., specially sent to the Volunteer, Hubli (Karnatak), the monthly so ably conducted by Dr. N.S. Hardikar to support the volunteer movement in every healthy form in India. Enthusiasts of compulsory military training for students in our Universities will do well to take note of the terrible reaction that has taken place in America as a result of the introduction of compulsory military training in Universities. Miss Keeler speaks of the revolt of the American youth against the servile obedience which military training teaches. "In college after college," she says, "the students are protesting against compulsory drill, writing articles against it, voting to abolish it, staging demonstrations against it, and, in some cases, refusing to take part in it". The so-called effect of military training in developing the physique has also been exploded. The opinions of the gymnasium director and the Commission on Military Training which Miss Keeler quotes on this point, speak for themselves. The opposition of students to compulsory military training is based not only upon the principle of compulsion involved in it, but also owing to their repugnance to a training which breeds the war mentality. We have always held that while military training has got its own good effects, it should be purely voluntary and not compulsory.

Uplift of the Bhils: We are glad to see that increasing interest is being evinced by our leaders towards the elevation of the Bhils and other aboriginal tribes. They have been long neglected on the score of their being "non-Hindus" and "Animists," but latterly the educated classes, whose conscience has been already awakened towards the depressed classes, are coming to feel the urgency of fulfilling their duty towards these tribes also. The Christian Missionaries were, of course, the first in the field, but during the last three years, that veteran social worker of the Servants of India Society, Mr. Amritalal Thakkar, has done no small welfare work among them. The great curses of these tribes are addiction to drink and lack of education secluded as they are in their far-off hills. But into these fastnesses of ignorance, Mr. Thakkar has wonderfully succeeded in bringing the light of knowledge and education. The opening of a temple in their midst recently by Swami Shankaracharya in order to concentrate their attention upon some form of religion, is yet another monument to the energy and work of Mr. Thakkar.

Working of Factories: The report on the working of the Factories Act during the year 1924, shows considerable progress. The number of factories rose from 5984 in 1923 to 6406; and the factory population also rose from 1,409,173 in 1923 to 1,455,592. The number of women employed increased from 2,21,045 in 1923 to 2,35,332, due to some extent, it is said, to restrictions placed on child labour. During the year under report a welcome step was taken in excluding children under 12 years of age and, in Bombay, by a notification of the Local Government, the employment of children of six years of age and upwards in dangerous conditions in hand-match factories was stopped. The number of children employed fell from 74,620 in 1923 to 72,531. There was a considerable fall in their number in the cotton, spinning and weaving mills, but the jute mills, however, show no material diminution in the employment of children, and it is stated that several prosecutions are reported to have been instituted on account of irregular employment of women and children in this industry, the result of which will be looked forward to with interest. A disquieting feature of the year under report was the large number of accidents and convictions for contravention in respect of the Factories Act, figures for both of which represented a large increase over the normal figures in recent years.

All-India Depressed Classes Leaders' Conference: The presidential address delivered by Rao Bahadur M.C. Raja to the Depressed Classes Leaders' Conference recently held at Nagpur, except for some sound suggestions which he made to the members of his community such as the need for elementary education and the necessity of cultivating clean and tidy habits and abstaining from drink and drugs, was from first to last characterised by an attitude of praise to the beneficent rule of the British Government in India and of hostility to other classes. This is hardly the right attitude to adopt. The depressed classes cannot always hope to get on by getting crumbs from the Government. It cannot be gainsaid for a moment that a wonderful awakening has come over even the most conservative and orthodox people in the country towards the recognition of the legitimate rights and aspirations of their depressed classes brethren and, such being the case, it will be wise on the part of depressed class leaders not to alienate but to cultivate their affections.

A Muslim's Benefaction to the Ramakrishna Mission: We learn from the Madras papers that Khan Bahadur Munju Meah Sahab Bahadur, an enlightened Muslim citizen of Cuddapah, is the Vice-President and a life-member of the Shri Ramakrishna Samaj at Cuddapah. The Khan Bahadur has spent already nearly Rs. 2,000 in connection with the building of the institution and proposes to spend something more on it. It is but rarely that we meet with such cases of sympathy and broad-mindedness either among Hindus or Muslims and it affords a pleasant contrast to the narrow communalism and religious bigotry which are the order of the day.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, MAY 15, 1926.

THE MADRAS LIBEL CASE.

It is not easy to fix the impression left on the mind by a perusal of the full text of the judgment of Mr. Justice Beasley in the libel suit brought by Rao Bahadur O. Kandasami Chettiar against the Raja of Panagal, Chief Minister to the Governor of Madras. The facts of the case are briefly these. The Rao Bahadur made a speech in September 1922 at Chidambaram at the first Adi-Dravida Congress. In that speech (we are quoting from the judgment) the plaintiff had pointed out inter alia how the Non-Brahmin movement which had been started as a democratic movement and carried on with the support of the Adi-Dravidas, was developing under its leaders into an oligarchic movement and that during the Pulianthope disturbances the Non-Brahmin Party leaders took the side of the caste-Hindus as against the Adi-Dravidas and by abolishing the posts of Assistant Labour Commissioners, the Non-Brahmin Party strengthened the position of the caste-Hindus and Mirasdars in relation to the depressed classes generally; and he advised the Adi-Dravidas to organise themselves as an independent party. On the 1st October following, the defendant Raja spoke on the occasion of a school function at Tenneri and said in the course of his observations: "It is however unfortunate that our political opponents and sometimes their employers should try to misrepresent the aims and activities of our party. It so happens that in political warfare, particularly, when that warfare is carried on on unscrupulous lines, such misrepresentations are of frequent occurrence. Only the other day at Chidambaram attacks of the vilest kind were made against the party. Leave alone the slanderous language that was on that occasion employed." He further said: "I have already admonished you against the wily attempts of pretended friends and pseudo-philanthropists and their paid emissaries. Beware of them. They try to mislead you by misrepresentation. Have always your eyes about you. Entrust your cause to the leadership of those who are free from selfish motives."

This is the usual small change of hustings oratory, and most men accustomed to the rough and tumble of politics would have ignored the Raja's outburst as not worth serious notice. But Mr. Kandasami was only a casual visitor in the political arena and he thought it necessary to vindicate his reputation against the aspersions implied in the Raja's speech in a Court of Law. Those who do not know Mr. Kandasami's life-long devotion to social reform, must feel, as the Judge says, "that the suit seems to have originated in the plaintiff's gross over-estimation of his own importance and virtue, and of his services to the Non-Brahmin Party and his position in the political world generally." Those who know Mr. Kandasami and his zealous interest in every movement of social and moral reform from the early nineties, however, will attribute his action in launching the suit to a sensitive temperament which implicitly expects others to do unto it as it would do to them.

The Judge held that the defendant's words in a single respect were defamatory, though just so. His lordship's words are: "To call any one a pretended friend and pseudo-philanthropist is not in my view defamatory at all, but to call him a paid emissary of a party opposed to that to which he is supposed to belong, is in my view defamatory though just so." The Judge says that Mr. Kandasami's speech at Chidambaram was of the most provocative kind and could not be left unanswered. We respectfully suggest that to call your critic a hireling is not a conclusive or proper answer for a responsible Minister to give to the charge that his Party had derogated from some of its fundamental principles. The Judge holds that the defence plea of "fair comment" fails. "For a plea of fair comment to be raised at all," his lordship observes, "it is necessary first of all that certain facts should be truly stated and that there should be a comment which is fair on those facts." If the Raja of Panagal had, as the Judge has done in his judgment, begun by quoting the passages in Mr. Kandasami's speech which were objectionable from his point of view, he would have found that the epithets by which he sought to discredit the critic, were not relevant as an answer to them. The learned Judge also finds that the defendant does not succeed in his plea of justification. Thus, in his lordship's view, there was defamation though only just defamatory, and both the pleas of justification and fair comment fail. But the plaintiff's claim for damages, says the Judge, is not supported by any proof of actual loss. "It is usual," says his lordship, "to give the Court some assistance by evidence in estimating what those damages are. It is open to the plaintiff to give evidence to show that he has been shunned or lost the esteem and respect of his friends and so on. The plaintiff has not chosen to give any evidence whatsoever with regard to that". The general public has the good sense to take vituperative oratory at its true value, and we do not think Mr. Chettiar lost a single friend on account of the Raja's declamation at the somewhat inappropriate occasion of opening a school for children. Still, says the Judge, the law presumes that some damages will join in the ordinary course of things from the mere invasion of the plaintiff's absolute right of reputation; and his reason for rating them at the smallest coin of the realm, namely, a single pie, is, that the cross-examination of the plaintiff by the defendant's counsel brought out facts which impugned his credit.

The defendant's charge against Mr. Kandasami was that he was a paid emissary in the pay of the political opponents of the Ministerial Non-Brahmin Party. The Raja of Panagal could not produce any proof of this allegation. "The utmost that the defendant has succeeded in doing here," says the Judge, "is to raise an inference which might be possibly drawn from the facts and that in my view is not sufficient and it follows therefore that the defendant does not succeed in his plea of

justification." What are these facts and how do they suggest the inference to which the Judge refers? The defendant alleged that Mr. Kandasami was disappointed (1) because he was not selected as one of the Party's candidates to the Legislative Council, (2) that Mr. Kandasami wanted to be appointed Publicity Officer and was disappointed at not getting it and (3) that Mr. Kandasami wanted that his daughter should get preferment in the Educational Service, and was disappointed that nothing was done for her. In connection with this attempt to make out that Mr. Kandasami's Chidambaram speech was the outcome of his personal disappointment, there is one fact which the Judge could not take note of but which it is impossible for a publicist to overlook. This is not the first occasion in which a Madras Minister has sought to discredit a member of his own Non-Brahmin Party who ventured to criticise the Ministers, by alleging that the critic and the criticism were inspired by personal disappointment. Mr. C. R. Reddy sometime back was sought to be put down on a similar ground, but Mr. Reddy could not be suppressed, and he has recently been nominated to the office of Vice-Chancellor of the new Andhra University. This, we take it, is a tacit acknowledgment that the attempt made to discredit him as a disappointed place-hunter was unjust and ill-founded. Rao Bahadur Kandasami was not so unimportant or insignificant a member of the Party as the Judge seems to have inferred from the proceedings in this case. He was offered a nomination to the Legislative Assembly, a far more important position than membership of the Provincial Council; the Raja of Panagal admitted that he tried to get the place of Publicity Officer for him, but failed as the post was in the gift of the Reserved half of the Government; and there was no question that Miss Kandasami, a graduate in Science and in Teaching, was fully qualified for the promotion which, it was alleged, was sought for her. It is only fair to say that Mr. Kandasami denied having asked for the Publicity Officership for himself or promotion for his daughter, and it is on record that he refused the nomination offered to the Legislative Assembly. The Raja of Panagal would, according to his own showing, have been glad to secure for his Party the benefit of Mr. Kandasami's adherence if he could have done so. We venture to say that it is rather grotesque after this to set up a high standard of disinterestedness in party politics and to turn round and accuse your adversary of having tried to poison the springs of public life. If inferences count, they must count against both sides. On the whole, however, it is safer to rely on proved facts and these, as the Judge has observed, do not justify the plea either of justification or of fair comment, which was put forward in defence of a comment which the Judge had no hesitation in holding to be defamatory.

THE DECCAN EDUCATION SOCIETY.

It is a distinctive feature of Bombay that much of the education that is imparted in the Presidency is done by private enterprise. The initiative taken by the several existing societies in matters educational has elicited admiration in many quarters, and not long ago the Governor of Bombay, H. E. Sir Leslie Wilson, held up these bands of selfless workers as examples for others to follow. The Deccan Education Society which has recently issued its report for the year 1924–1925 was one of the first Societies, if not the first, to take up the work of education. The Society's report is one uniform record of progress and achievement. Its activities are many and varied, and are not confined to Poona. Besides conducting the Fergusson and Willingdon Colleges and two English High Schools, one in Poona and the other at Satara, it is successfully maintaining two Marathi Schools, the one at Poona serving as a model to the neighbouring schools in the locality. The steady increase in the number of students in all these institutions testifies to their popularity. There has also been an appreciable increase in the number of lady-students attending the Fergusson College, as also in that of the resident lady-students; the accommodation provided for them proving insufficient, the Principal's bungalow is being utilised for the purpose. It has been felt that addition to residential accommodation for lady-students is overdue and a new scheme has been taken in hand which is expected to meet with success. The Society has realised the importance of residential quarters for students and every institution conducted by it is provided with them. The institutions have all maintained their efficiency and have earned good opinions from the several Inspectors.

The Deccan Education Society's institutions are not sectarian in character and specially encourage students of the backward classes, irrespective of cast or creed, by granting remissions of fees when such students are found too poor to pay. This is borne out by the number of Tables annexed to the report, which give analyses of students according to caste and religion and occupations of their parents and guardians, the places from which they hail and other interesting details. Poona, being the stronghold of the Brahmins, it is but natural that caste students should preponderate, but a good number of Mahomedan, Christian and Depressed Classes have also availed themselves of the educational facilities afforded by these institutions. The report also shows an increasing tendency among students to remain unmarried during their days of pupilage. This redounds to the credit of the parents who see the wisdom of allowing their children freedom in their pursuit of knowledge, and also conforms to the ancient ideals of education. Indians, the students in particular, have often been accused of attaching too much importance to examinations with a view to get a comfortable place in the world. It is pertinent to ask, what is it that prompts men of high educational attainments who would easily have shone in any other walk of life to devote themselves to the sorry trade of schoolmasters, if not a genuine love of knowledge and the desire to light the torch of learning in the innermost recesses of darkness and ignorance? The only parallel that presents itself is the work of the Jesuits and other Christian orders in the cause of education, but the motive underlying it is religious advancement. No one would grudge the meed of praise which the Society deservedly merits for its splendid work. There are quite a number of these Societies carrying on their work of education independent of each other. How far it is feasible to co-ordinate their services is a matter worthy of consideration.

AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS IN INDIA.

The Review of Agricultural Operations in India 1924-25 by Dr. D. Clouston, Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India, just issued, is a valuable document of about 160 pages which deals with the activities of the Agricultural Department during the

realpatidar.com

year under review and which incidentally throws a flood of light on the vast potentialities that exist in this country for the development of agriculture. It is specially valuable in view of the announcement of a Royal Commission on Agriculture and the interest evinced by the new Viceroy in agriculture. The Indian agriculturist being a man of small means who cannot afford to dabble in experiments, the question of the suitability of crops to local conditions becomes a matter of paramount importance and, realising this, the Agricultural Department from the very beginning took up the study of the staple crops and placed at the hands of the cultivator improved varieties by the processes of isolation of pure strains, selection from indigeneous breeds, the introduction and acclimatization of foreign types, hybridization etc. The fact that the Indian peasant readily took advantage of the improved crops upon which Dr. Clouston himself congratulates him, is sufficient to show that he is after all not so very conservative and unprogressive as he is often represented to be. Though the present area under improved crops is only three per cent of the whole cultivated area, it is estimated that the annual value of the agricultural crops of the country has been enhanced by nearly seven crores of rupees, of which one crore has been added in a single year. In the Punjab alone, it is said, the introduction of improved varieties of wheat and cotton has been the means of adding five crores of rupees to the farming profits of these cultivators. Several varieties of rice which can yield 3 maunds per acre more than the original types and of Coimbatore sugarcanes which in some cases have given an outturn of 100 per cent, have been isolated, evolved and propagated. The replacement of the country wheats by higher-yielding varieties of better grain quality is proceeding rapidly and the quality of the varieties evolved at Pusa can be judged from the fact that there is a wide demand for them from countries as wide apart as Rhodesia, New South Wales and Ukrain. Considerable advance has also been made in regard to jute and other fibres, tobacco, oil-seeds etc.

The cottons have also received considerable attention from the provincial departments and ever since the inception of the Indian Central Cotton Committee, research has been co-ordinated and stimulated by the establishment of the Institute of Plant Industry at Indore and cotton breeding stations in the provinces and by grants-in-aid for researches on diseases and pests. The Cotton Committee continues to devote attention to the improvement of marketing, the prevention of malpractices and to the general interests of the cotton industry, and in its Research Laboratory a study is being made of certain of the measurable characters of the cotton fibre and their bearing on spinning value in order to provide the cotton-breeder with more definite information as to which fibre characters are commercially important. The Committee has provided for training Indian youths by awarding scholarships and it is to be hoped that in course of time facilities will be given to students to prosecute their research in foreign countries. The fruit industry which has a promising field before it, is unfortunately neglected except for some work done by a few isolated workers. The reason seems to be the lack of trained specialists and the Review observes that a thorough investigation of the economics of fruit-growing as a subsidiary industry is very necessary, because it will not only serve as an additional occupation to the small holders but also attract a large number of the unemployed educated classes. Lack of fodder is one of the great difficulties of the Indian agriculturist and the Agricultural Department has tried to meet this want by the introduction of the Egyptian clover and the possibilities of grasses and other plants as food for cattle are being investigated. The introduction of high-yielding crops necessitates that the fertility of the soil should not only be preserved but also increased. Unfortunately, in this country, a large part of farmyard manure is being used as fuel and a large portion of oil-cakes, bones and other manure is being exported. With a view to improve soil fertility, soil surveys have been undertaken and problems concerning soil acidity, soil drainage, soil moisture, soil aeration, movements of nitrates, nitrogen fixation and the influence of manures and fertilizers, are under investigation. Even water-hyacinth is no longer regarded as a pest to be destroyed, but as capable of being converted into valuable manure for jute and rice. To combat the ravages of disease and insect pests which play a lot of havoc on the crops, disease-resisting varieties have been evolved and preventive and remedial measures are also being taken. Spraying is becoming popular.

In Indian agriculture cattle play an important part, and with a view to their better breeding much attention is being paid to selective breeding, cross-breeding and the growing and storing of suitable fodders for them. It is to be hoped that the Central Cattle Bureau at Bangalore will do much towards stimulating and co-ordinating efforts made towards cattle improvement in the country. Owing to financial stringency and paucity of staff, it is stated, sheep-breeding has not received much attention from the Department and the hair stuff produced by our country breeds of sheep is suitable only for the manufacture of coarse blankets. The year under report was, unfortunately, one of recrudescence of rinderpest in an intense form which resulted in large cattle mortality and the Veterinary Department and the Imperial Institute of Veterinary Research at Muktesar did much to save cattle life. The benefits of the application of mechanical engineering and the Co-operative movement to agriculture have also been brought home to the people by the Agricultural Department by demonstrating implements and machines in the villages, by displaying them at agricultural shows and ploughing contests and by organizing their sale through Co-operative Societies. The success which has attended Government's efforts in this direction is reflected in the increased demand for iron implements for all purposes and in the satisfactory working of the cotton sale societies in Bombay, of irrigation and milk societies in Bengal and of societies for the consolidation of holdings and clearance of silt in the Punjab. It is regrettable to see that the net expenditure on agricultural development is not even equal to the subsidy which the Government of India has to pay to the Steel Industry and it is to be hoped that under the aegis of the new Viceroy more money will be set apart for this Department as a result of the recommendations of the Royal Commission.

ABOLISH THE CASTE SYSTEM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

We have at length arrived—it is a melancholy truth which can no longer be concealed—at that crisis when nothing but speedy and effective social reforms can save us from national extinction. To save our national existence from utter ruin, our first duty is to abolish the caste-system and proclaim with lofty enthusiasm to our people that we are all equal.

The caste-system destroys the spirit of nationality and the peculiar general character of it, as every one knows, is the dismemberment of the people and the consequent absence of unity in the nation. We have at present in India little national feeling and our clannish feeling has made any true national effort impossible. In India the spirit and habit of freedom reside in an incomparably small number, while in England it extends in a manner through the entire nation.

Social reform has been entirely forgotten by our national leaders. They have yet to come to the front with a long list of improvements in social liberty. Our leaders have no social outlook beyond the industrial and educational spheres. They have suffered our poor brethren to remain ignorant and illiterate and they are powerless to work out their own salvation.

A fatal lethargy has overtaken us, attended, as it is but natural, with a prevailing disposition to treat plans of social reform with contempt. We have become more proud of our ancestors when we have ceased to resemble them. A degenerate people repose on the merits of their forefathers and look back upon their ancestors to hide their shame.

To avert the calamities that await us, the disposition of the upper classes must be repressed to lift up the majority of the people. It is impossible to retract from the brink of a precipice, but wœ to the nation which sleeps upon it.

Calcutta, May 4, 1926. Yours etc., AMRITALAL MAJUMDAR.

A PROSTITUTE'S REPLY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The following is the translation of a reply in Marathi given by a prostitute whom the writer had tried to reclaim :—

"You call us prostitutes, loose, shameful women. We hate you, you men, who have condemned us. You have imprisoned us, you have never given us chances in life, you have made us 'women' after all. It is you who now sympathise with our lot. We cannot be deceived by treacherous men. My mother was leading the life of a prostitute. She was a very good woman. Prostitution was forced upon her. She was a very faithful wife. But her husband used to beat her. She mutely suffered all the harsh treatment accorded to her One day her husband brought in the house his keep. And the cruel man drove her out. Woman is always meek and suffering, but when the worst happens and when her tolerating capacity reaches its maximum, she turns wild and then even Heaven cannot bring her back to the normal. Well from that time my mother began to lead this sort of life not only for existence but for taking vengeance on men. She used to cry, but none pitied her except myself. However, as the days rolled on, she began to forget the past. She has taught me to scorn men, treat them like dogs, deceive them whenever they would fall in my snare and make them beggars. Now you talk of reclaiming us How can you do that ? Are you going to send us to work-houses ? Are you going to fetter us again into that worst form of wedlock ? Marriage is a humbug. It is no longer a sacred thing. If men do not understand the promises they make before the Fire-god, if they treat women as life-slaves, then marriage is an institution planned and devised by men to purchase women for the satisfaction of their passions. We marry God and not men. Do you teach us to go again into the purdah imprisonment and the dogged life ? We are free women like free men. And we enjoy life. We are also doing a great public service. You men have got the habit of doing nothing and only talking loudly. We are doing public service silently. Consider the crowds of vagabonds, so-called bachelors, and the dregs of your class who have been held in check by us. Reclaim us and these locusts will fall upon the society. Do you still think to reclaim us ?"

The reply will open the eyes of our public men.

525, Budhwar Peth, Poona, 4-5-26. Yours etc., K. T. DANGE.

TO THE VOLUNTEERS OF INDIA.

The following are extracts from a message sent to the Volunteers of India by Miss Miriam Keeler, Secretary, New England Fellow-ship of Youth for Peace, Boston, U. S. A. :—

The youth of the world are watching the youth of India, hoping that by acting in accordance with the teachings of Gandhi, India will accomplish a new thing in human history. The founder of Christianity, Jesus, taught the use of love and kindness in personal relations. For nearly 2000 years "Christian" individuals have tried to practise love, and the "Christian" nations have fought to attain their desires, just or unjust, by force. Here and there some-one has protested, but his voice has hardly been heard. It remained for Gandhi with his millions of disciples, to demonstrate the use of love and good-will in national affairs.

Moral courage and spiritual wisdom to lead a nation in the paths of love can only be attained by rigorous study, discipline, self-sacrifice—as Gandhi won them. In calling on the youth of India, therefore, to organize and train themselves, the Volunteer published in Hubli, (Karnatak) is taking the right path. What qualities should this training develop ? First of all, leadership. There are always plenty to follow. Presumably your society, like the Fellowship of Youth in America, is small in numbers and resources, and can scarcely hope to reach directly more than a few thousand youths. Our greatest opportunity, therefore, is to train leaders who shall go out among the masses to carry inspiration and awakening.

Other qualities needed are the ability to co-operate with others, a sense of humour so that one can lose without bitterness and laugh at oneself as well as at other people. There must be a will to service, eagerness and fire, else nothing can be done. Nothing real can be accomplished by force and compulsion, as the philosopher knows. The volunteers will be useless unless they are true volunteers—willing doers. Can you imagine a volunteer by conscription? It is a contradiction in terms, and conscripts are no more than poor, passive instruments of another's will.

Skill in some profession or trade is another thing that the youth of India need. The ability to earn a living by doing something useful and doing it well, whether it be cotton-spinning, teaching, or something else, is indispensable. It gives self-reliance, poise and independence.

Here in America we have had experience with various kinds of training for youth. There is, what perhaps occurs to us first, military training. This is compulsory in 83 colleges and universities, and in many public high schools. Military training has little if any value in developing the physique. The former gymnasium director at Harvard University says: "After taking the most favourable view possible of military drill as a physical exercise, we are led to conclude that its constrained positions and closely localised movements do not afford the essential requisites for developing the muscles and improving the respiration and circulation and thereby improving the general health and condition of the system." This is in substance the conclusion of every physical director whose opinion I have heard.

Then what does military training do? It teaches unthinking obedience and it accustoms the mind to the idea of killing. But unthinking obedience is a very different thing from the ability to co-operate. It means fulfilling commands without reasoning about them. Men in this condition may obey you or your enemy whoever shouts the loudest or offers most pay. This is clearly not the kind of training we want for our youth. "Military drill kills interest and spirit in boys; it becomes wearisome and monotonous," one Commission on Military Training reports. Nor do we want youth to accept unquestioningly the idea that sometime when some-one tells them to, they are going to put on uniform and start killing other young men in war. There are people in America—militarists—who want just this. And it is to defeat their purpose that we are trying to rid our youth of military training. You in India have laid hold of a better method than violence; you will not wish to cultivate the war mind-set. Against the servile obedience which military training teaches, American youth is in revolt. In college after college, the students are protesting against compulsory drill, writing articles against it, voting to abolish it, staging demonstrations against it, and, in some cases, refusing to take part in it.

What form, then, shall the training of youth take? There are two forms which supplement each other, both of which are more suitable to your purpose and ours. The first is physical education—the systematic training of the body to physical efficiency and co-ordination by scientific exercises which develop all the muscles and the health of the organs together with instruction in sanitation and hygiene, healthful habits of daily life.

The second form is athletic sports. These fall into two classes, the first including those sports in which individual superiority alone counts, such as running, jumping, swimming—and in which I note the youth of India are already doing much, to judge by the account of the swimming races. The other class includes all games requiring team-work—base ball, football, basket ball, field hockey, tennis. With the possible exception of football, which is brutal, these are invaluable. To begin with, they are great fun. Boys and girls, too, need no urging to spend all their spare time at these games, and at the same time keep to the strictest sort of regime in regard to food and sleep in order to increase their efficiency. In some American colleges, captains of the athletic teams are the most honoured men in college. These sports also develop exactly the qualities we need. Team-work is another name for co-operation. Each man learns his place, and advances, not his own interests, but those of his team. An instant response to others, complete subordination of self, as well as physical skill, are needed for success. Obedience is there too—but not to arbitrary commands; it is obedience to the rules of the game, in some cases interpreted through a leader. Honour is one of the requirements of sports. No good team would win a game by cheating or under false pretences. And the other team is simply the opposition, not the enemy. The team plays to win; but if it loses it cheers the other team any-how. Without overdeveloping and professionalizing sports as some American universities have done, the youth of India can well use them for their own purposes.

You will doubtless find other methods in addition of training along the right lines. But let us not be led astray by the superficial precision of military unit. The world is looking to India to organize for peace not war. And when you have accomplished this great thing, there will be many to follow.

THE PROBLEM OF THE BRITISH COAL INDUSTRY.*

In an article on the above head published in the April 7th issue of the New Republic, U.S.A., Mr. R. H. Tawney, anticipating the trouble that was brewing in Great Britain wrote as follows:—

The British practice of making fifty bites at a cherry, while protesting all the time that there is no intention of doing anything so vulgar as swallow it, has its disadvantages. But, provided the patient takes the medicine, it is reasonable that he should be allowed to choose the label on the bottle, and, in view of the prejudices of their fellow-countryman, the Commissioners were probably prudent in protesting that they are not as these bold bad men who deal in nationalization. The public ownership of minerals, and the municipal distribution of coal are, at least, a beginning of the necessary

*Since this article was written a general strike was declared and called off on wednesday last as a preliminary to negotiations with Government. The miners' strike however, continues.

reorganization. Amalgamation of collieries under the pressure of a state department, though a lengthy, and probably a costly process, at least drives in the thin end of a trenchant wedge. To such proposals the existing interests might reply in the classical lines:

"It's all very well to dissemble your love,
But why did you kick me downstairs?"

Reorganization must, in any case, be a matter of time. What is more exciting at the moment is the situation in the next six weeks. The subsidy, unless extended, finishes at the end of April and the Commission emphatically recommends its termination at that date. How, in that case, is the industry to pay its way? The Commission rejected, for reasons of unquestionable cogency, the owners' proposal for longer hours, and proposed, as its own immediate solution, a reduction in wages, to be borne by the miners as a sacrifice on the understanding that the various measures of reorganization recommended shall be undertaken without delay. The latter proviso somewhat softens, no doubt, the suggestion for a reduction. But all the elements of a crisis, such as occurred last August, are in being. The miners argue that for seven years they have pressed for improvements in the organization of the industry, that their criticisms have been confirmed by one inquiry after another, and that it is monstrously unfair to make them pay for the refusal of successive governments to carry improvements into effect. The mine-owners want a reduction of wages, but hate the reforms which the Commission urges, should accompany it. The government naturally does not want to continue paying the subsidy, but it wants a stoppage still less, for a stoppage would probably cost more than the subsidy itself. Some Conservatives are indignant at the coquetting with Socialism which they seem to discern in the Report, while the trade union movement is alarmed at the threat to wages.

To prophesy the upshot of it all would be rash. What a good many people feel, however, is that in terminating the subsidy now, the government would be making the worst of both worlds. It has paid it for six months, without getting anything for it. Is it prudent to stop it at the very moment when it may be used as a lever to reorganize the industry? If Mr. Baldwin inclines to the view that it is not, will the die-hards of his party stand it? To him, at least, the situation must be a nightmare. It is not, however, Mr. Baldwin who is to blame, but an earlier occupant of his office, who allowed the patient to relapse into a condition in which the only alleviation of his sufferings is monthly injections of morphia. In this, as in some other matters, the country is likely to pay for the antics of that cheerful architect of mischief, Mr. Lloyd George.

MR. PAL ON COMMUNAL UNITY.

Speaking recently at the Calcutta Parliament Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal warned the British Government against the danger of utilising the Hindu-Moslem dispute for the preservation of the existing political and administrative order in this country by exploiting the religious and communal differences between the two communities. In an impressive speech he pointed out that it was to the interest of the British Government that steps should be taken to effectively put down the elements of political and social disorder. The only solution of this dispute in Mr. Pal's opinion lay in the expansion of civic freedom and in the appreciation of the higher culture of the two communities.

Moving his resolution that the House recommends to the Government that in the interest of the British Empire and for the protection of the very large financial commitment of the British people in India as well as for the preservation of peace, order and settled government in this country, immediate steps should be taken to effectively put down the elements of political and social disorder exploiting the religious and communal differences between the two great Indian communities. Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal said that they had been told for many years past that as long as they had communal differences in India, so long it would be hopeless for them to desire anything like self-government or responsible government. That was one side. He wished to present the other side and that was that as long as this problem of Hindu-Moslem unity was not solved, so long it was impossible to reasonably hope for the continuance of British connection in India. While admitting that a settlement of this question was necessary for the purpose of nation-building in this country, Mr. Pal wanted to emphasise the point that it was to the interest of the British people that this problem must be solved. The speaker was of opinion that a solution of this problem was not absolutely necessary for the attainment of Swaraj. Swaraj would come to the Indian people either by constitutional means or by an armed revolt or revolution and in neither case was it essentially necessary that the two great Indian communities should cease to fight with one another. The speaker pointed out that though the Hindus and the Mahomedans had been fighting for the last fifty years, it did not prevent British statesmanship from helping India by slow degrees towards the goal of self-government. In this connection he traced the history of constitutional progress in India from the time of Lord Dufferin up to the time of the Montagu-Chelmsford announcement, and observed that this problem of Hindu-Moslem unity was not seriously considered by British statesmen when it was to their own interest to do something to advance India towards Swaraj. How else could we explain, said he, the grant of constitutional freedom to India, slow though it was, when the two communities were fighting each other for the last half a century? When the British people found it to their interests that reforms should be delayed or stopped, they brought out this bogey of Hindu-Moslem difference.

Whether they were to get Swaraj by peaceful and legitimate means or by an armed revolt or revolution, the plain fact remained, that a settlement of this dispute was not absolutely necessary. For, if the Mahomedans were strong enough, they would not wait for the weaker Hindus to join them in their fight against the strong British nor would the Hindus ask the Mahomedans to come to their help if they could muster up sufficient courage to wrest Swaraj from the British people. India's advance towards Swaraj would not be determined by their mutual fight but would be determined by a consideration of the British interest. The speaker therefore took the opportunity to warn the British Government

THE SOUTH AFRICAN SITUATION.

We publish in this issue the text of the correspondence that took place between the Government of India and the Union Government which finally culminated in both parties agreeing to a Round Table Conference to settle their points of difference. To this happy consummation the Government of India, the Paddison Deputation and Mr. C. F. Andrews have all contributed in a great measure. We have already dealt with this hopeful change that has come over the South African situation in our leading article in the Reformer of the 1st May and we shall only emphasise some points here. The Union Government, it will be remembered, for long refused to accede to the proposal of a Round Table Conference owing to the inability of the Government of India to agree that the object of the Conference should be to discuss methods with a view to effect a considerable reduction of the Indian population and to explore the possibilities of more effective repatriation. Instead of this, the Government of India have now accepted the Union Government's condition of "safeguarding the maintenance of Western standards of life by just and legitimate means." But much depends upon the way in which this clause is interpreted. If it is meant by this that Western standards of life can be maintained only by diminishing the facilities for trade and the number of Asiatics, there can be no hope of agreement between the two countries. The only interpretation to which India will be a consenting party will be that put upon it by Mahatma Gandhi, with which Mr. C. F. Andrews is in agreement, namely, "the reasonable sanitary and economic laws of common applicability, ensuring on the part of all a standard of life in keeping with hygienic and sanitary requirements, and regulation of all business in conformity with the European standard." The remedy, of course, lies in the hands of the Whites themselves. As the Hindu rightly remarks: "Abolish the ghetto system and allow Indians to build houses in the best portions of towns on terms of equality; pay them better and do not exclude them, as the Colour Bar Bill does, from the remunerative occupations; provide their children with educational facilities; allow them to travel in tram cars, to use public libraries, to live in first class hotels, on terms which are extended to Europeans. If these are done, and they are given the rights of citizens, the standard of life among Indians is bound to rise." Scarcely has the Anti-Asiatic Bill been held in abeyance before the other obnoxious Bill which was submitted to the joint sitting of both the Houses of the S. African Legislature has been passed into law. It has been again and again pointed out by Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. Andrews that the Colour Bar Bill is in fact more objectionable in its provisions than the Anti-Asiatic Bill and that if a Conference between South Africa and India is at all to take place, it is not to deal with the Anti-Asiatic Bill alone but with the Colour Bar Bill, the Liquor Law Amendment Bill and such like colour legislation. And now that the Colour Bar Bill has been passed, there are only two courses open for the Government of India to prevent its operation, namely, to urge the Governor-General in S. Africa to withhold his assent to it or to reserve it for the consideration of the British Government. We hope the Government of India will make a move in this matter without further delay.

WELCOME TO MR. ANDREWS.

The citizens of Bombay accorded a very cordial and rousing reception to their "Ambassador of Peace", the Rev. C. F. Andrews, on Saturday the 1st inst., on his return from South Africa after the successful termination of his mission, at a public meeting held at the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall, under the joint auspices of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, the Bombay Committee of the Indian National Party and two other public bodies.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad presided at the meeting. The meeting was fully representative and on the platform were seated prominent leaders of different political parties in the country, such as Dr. Annie Besant, Mr. B. G. Horniman, the Hon. Mr. V. J. Patel, Messrs. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, K. Natarajan, D. G. Dalvi, Shaukat Ali, Jamnadas Mehta, J. K. Mehta, N. M. Joshi, Kenneth Saunders, M. R. Jayakar and Kanji Dwarkadas.

MR. ANDREWS' REPLY.

After the Chairman had made some introductory remarks, Mr. C. F. Andrews made the following statement:—

"I am more tired than I can possibly tell you and a tired man finds it very hard to think clearly. Even to-day, I have been faced for the first time with most vitally important issues and have been asked to give my considered opinion about them immediately on arrival. As one who is a very bad sailor, subject to constant sea-sickness, even this voyage has not given me time when I could give my best thoughts on paper; therefore I must ask you to forgive me to-night if I read my speech, and also deal with the larger and broader issues of the whole subject rather than with the details.

S. AFRICAN MINISTER'S STATEMENT.

May I say, however, at once that I fully realise the importance of the issue that Mahatma Gandhi has raised in the last number of Young India? To-morrow I hope to see him and to talk over the matter through and through with him, from beginning to end. In such matters, so much depends upon the personalities with whom one has to do in South Africa and the person in South Africa behind the phrase. Now it is easy for me to picture Doctor Malan and General Hertzog actually using that phrase about 'safe-guarding Western standards of life by just and legitimate means'; and I have often heard them talking about these very things. Mahatmaji has also known South Africa better than any Indian living; and he also knows intimately the chief actors in the South African Indian drama to-day. Therefore, let the Indian public wait a little while and not be too anxious about what I have said in a tired mood to the Press to-day; and I will promise, when we have had, our full talk, to give to the public my very best and most carefully considered opinion. My

realpatidar.com

a suggested formula was a very simple one. It was a open conference with no commitments and no ervations on either side.' I wanted every subject either side, where there were difficulties felt, to be n to full and free discussion. But even taking the mula offered, namely, 'safeguarding Western stand- s of life by just and legitimate means', I think I can derstand its meaning in the minds of both General rtzog and Dr. Malan, with whom I have had hours conversation on these very subjects. Let me say, hout committing myself too hastily, that my first pression and interpretation on the words was quite initely, that very second alternative which Mahatma ndhi puts forward, namely, ( to quote his words) 'the ionable sanitary and economic laws of common ap- cability, ensuring on the part of all a standard of life keeping with hygienic and sanitary requirements, and gulation of all business in conformity with the ropean standard'. That is certainly my own impres- on of their meaning after a few hours' hurried and terrupted thinking.

Anti-Asiatic Bills.

Let me pass on. We have to remember that the siatic Bill which has been postponed is not the only ill discriminating against Indians that has been ought before the present Parliament There is also e Colour Bar Bill which in the long run seems to me be still more humiliating and insulting to Indians an the Asiatic Bill itself. We have to fight this ill now with all our might and try to defeat it, for it ppears, to an exceedingly large number of people in outh Africa and an even larger number of people out- ide South Africa, neither 'just' nor 'legitimate' to ake away from a skilled person the right to exercise he skill of his hands,—the skill which God himself as given him,—simply because the pigment of his skin s not the exact colour of my own. I know the reasons hat are brought forward and the arguments used,— hat the white man cannot compete with the coloured nan and that in open competition the white man will go to the wall and the coloured man will be sweated. But what if the coloured man agrees to observe the ygienic and sanitary requirements of the European nd to live in every sense of the word a 'decent' life ? s he still to be debarred from a mechanical, skilled ccupation under a Colour Bar Bill merely because of his race and birth, without any regard to his worth and skill and merit ?

Not God's Law.

We are fighting this Bill constitutionally every step of the way; and if it is ever unfortunately passed, we shall go on struggling still to get it repealed because we cannot believe that is God's law. Its very name of Colour Bar Bill revolts us, because we cannot believe that God who causes His sun to shine upon all his children ever meant them to be deprived of their birth- right of manual skill and intelligence which He Himself has given them.—(Cheers.).

I am glad to say that the news I heard unofficially before I left South Africa was very slightly more reas- suring; and that there is still just a hope that this Bill also may be postponed pending a further enquiry into its economic necessity or otherwise. But this may be only rumour, and we must be prepared for the worst; and if the Bill is passed, then for a long uphill constitutional fight to get it off the Statute Book, if (God forbid!) it ever gets there ?

A Frank Statement.

But to return from this subject, which is one of very great importance to India, to the main broad issue, I want to say very clearly and frankly that I trust General Hertzog and Doctor Malan. May I put a very great deal in a very small compass ? May I say the truth that if we had not trusted them and found them trustworthy, they would not have trusted us and found us trustworthy (Cheers). In which case, the Asiatic Bill would have been put through the Senate as well as the Assembly be- fore to-day. They trusted us implicitly, when we said that this Bill was felt as insulting and humiliating to India. Other people told them not to trust us. Other people told them that they knew India far better than we did, and that no one cared a straw about the Bill in India except some agitators. General Hertzog and Dr. Malan put the question pointedly to us, asking us, 'Is this true ?' And we answered: 'No, it is not true.'

Implicit Trust.

They trusted our word implicitly. They did not want a long argument. They looked in our faces and saw that we were honest men, speaking the truth. They spoke to us—both of them—General Hertzog said to me —and I can see his earnest face as he said it—"Mr. Andrews, the last thing in the world I want to do is to insult and humiliate a great and neighbouring people like the Indian people. I want to be just and fair to them." He said those very words to me.

I can almost remember every word he said. When I went to Dr. Malan, he said the same thing of his own accord in his own way. I was able to look in his face and the face of General Hertzog just as they looked at mine, and I read truth there. I trusted them, and we all trusted them and said to them: "If that is so, then as honourable men, ought we not to talk it over ?"

There is the whole matter of the negotiations in a very small compass. We did not commit ourselves in any way whatever. As I have said, I wanted the talk to be absolutely open, with no commitments and no reservations on either side. We have not quite got that formula, but we have got the next best thing. As Ma- hatmaji has very truly said: "Mr. Andrews is not a politician or a diplomatist." I am very glad that I am not, for I should make a very bad one if ever I tried to become such a person. But one thing gives me confi- dence and trust and hope, namely, faith, unbounded faith, in God and His will; and the prayer, 'Thy Will be done on earth' is in my heart every day, every hour (Cheers). And if ever I see the same faith written in the looks of others when they speak to me and look into my eyes, then I want to do just the very same thing to them that I want them to do to me, namely, to trust them. There- fore, we have trusted implicitly these two Dutch states- men, as honourable men, because we have seen them, met them, spoken with them and looked into their faces. The one thing I want to do, on my return, is to convey that trust to all I may be able to reach either by my word, or by my pen in India." (Applause).

With a hearty vote of thanks proposed by Mr. K. Natarajan to the Rev. C. F. Andrews, the meeting came to a close.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE INDIAN AND SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENTS.

The following is the text of correspondence which preceded the announcement regarding the agreement of the Union Government to a Conference to come to an amicable solution of the Indian question :—

Telegram to the Governor-General in South Africa, Cape Town, dated Delhi, 20th February 1926 :—

"The Government of India understand from records which they have received that the Minister of Interior, in his speech, moving that the Areas Reservation Bill be referred to the Select Committee before the second reading, stated that the Government of India has been informed by the Union Government that while they were not opposed in principle to a Round Table Conference, discussions must include the question of ways and means required to make the scheme of voluntary repatriation of Indians more effective. Had the Government of India agreed to this point being included in the Agenda, a Round Table Conference would have been held, but as we did not see our way to agree to discussion of this parti- cular point, the Union Government could not agree to the Conference If Dr. Malan has been correctly re- ported, we fear that there has been some misunder- standing regarding our attitude on this point. In our telegram, dated 9th October, we made it clear that a Conference, of which the main object was to expedite Indian repatriation, was not contemplated by us. We nevertheless indicated that we were prepared to discuss the working of the existing system of voluntary repatriation and maintained the same attitude in subsequent communications. We have never refused to include the question of repatriation as above described within the scope of the discussion of the proposed Conference. We are as anxious as ever to participate in a Round Table Conference which would include the repatriation question limited, as above stated, within its scope. We should be very grateful if the Minister of Interior would take an early opportunity of dispelling the misconception to which we learn his speech may have given rise. We understand that "Cape Times" in a leading article on the 28th February has already taken the point that the attitude of the Government of India in refusing to discuss voluntary repatriation has made the holding of the Conference impossible. We are most anxious to secure an unprejudiced reception for the statement which our representatives will shortly make before the Select Committee and are confident that Your Excellency's Ministers will understand our desire to remove any misapprehension which might possibly prejudice public opinion against the case which they will present."

REPLY FROM SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT.

Telegram from the Governor-General of South Africa, Cape Town, dated 10th (Received on the 11th) March 1926 :—

"Your telegram dated 20th February. My Ministers desire to state that in their opinion no discrepancies exist between the statements of the Minister of the Interior in the Assembly to which you refer and the actual course of negotiations as revealed in the published correspondence. Reference to my telegrams dated 16th June and 24th September 1925 must in their view remove all possible doubts. It was clearly the attitude of the Union Government that no conference however restricted in scope, was possible unless some definite prospect was held out beforehand that it would result in a considerable reduction of the Indian population. They further clearly intimated that they welcomed tentative and provisional proposals to this effect and that their attitude with regard to the holding of a conference would eventually depend upon the nature and practicability of any repatriation scheme offered as a basis for further discussions at such a conference. They even went so far as to suggest the particular form of additional inducements which with the assistance and co-operation of Government of India might be offered to Indians as a part of such repatriation scheme besides agreeing to the inclusion of at least one other important aspect of Indian problem which has been put forward by your Government within the range of the proposed conference. It was only after the Government of India had intimated in your telegram of 9th October 1925, that they did not intend to explore the possibilities of more effective repatriation with the object of bringing about a considerable reduction of the Indian population but wished merely to confine themselves to helpful suggestions in connection with the existing repatriation (scheme) that further attempts on the part of the Union Government to arrive at a satisfactory basis for a Conference were dropped. My Ministers accept the assurance expressed in the second paragraph of your telegram that the real attitude of the Government of India has been misunderstood by them. They also note that according to Your Excellency's telegram dated the 26th November, 1925, it was clearly the intention of the Government to put forward definite proposals in connection with repatriation after they considered the report of their deputation to the Union. Under these circumstances my Ministers wish to assure the Government of India that provided they could be made to feel that they have the necessary assurance of the probability that the problem will really and effectively be solved through the instrumentality of a conference, thus affording them a real basis for consenting to a Round Table Conference, they are prepared to take such steps as are still at their disposal to keep the door open for a further consideration of the question. They trust that the Government of India will realize that the progress of the Bill through Parliament cannot be held up unless such action can be clearly justified to Parliament and in the eyes of the people of South Africa by the nature and adequacy of the assurance given and therefore unless the Ministers are enabled to point to some very definite and substantial prospective results to be anticipated from the proposed conference, they cannot contemplate the possibility of agreeing at this stage to the holding of such a conference. The Government of India will, therefore, understand that the assistance, so far offered by them in connection with the system of repatriation at present obtaining for the purpose of formulating a satisfactory basis for a conference is altogether inadequate.

INDIAN GOVERNMENT'S REPLY.

Telegram to the Governor-General of South Africa, Cape Town, dated 26th March 1926:—Your telegram dated March 10th. We have not yet seen the text of the speech delivered by the Minister of Interior on February 17th and are therefore glad to receive the assurance from your Excellency's Government that it was in no way discrepant with the actual course of negotiations. Your Excellency's telegram makes it clear to us that the Union Government are not averse to the idea of a conference, provided they are satisfied that such conference will hold out definite prospects of leading to a real and effective solution of the Indian problem. We appreciate the desire of Your Excellency's Ministers to obtain assurance on this and to find a formula acceptable to your Government and mine as the basis of the conference which would enable discussions to be initiated. We ourselves are equally anxious that if a conference takes place it should not prove abortive or lead to misunderstanding and it is with this object in view that we desire that there should be no misapprehension about our own attitude. As we explained in our telegram of October 9th we are unable to agree to enter a conference of which the object would be to effect a considerable reduction of the Indian population and we still adhere to this opinion. In our view the right method of arriving at a real and effective solution of the Indian question would be for both parties to enter the conference without being committed in advance to any particular solution of the question at issue. We ourselves should enter such a conference with the sincere intention of discussing frankly with the Union Government all possible methods of settling the Asiatic question, of understanding the difficulties which have led to the present policy of the South African Government and of explaining our own difficulties in acquiescing in that policy and the objects which we have in view in the atmosphere of a better mutual understanding which, we believe, this exchange of views will establish. We are hopeful that the Agreement may be rendered possible as to the general lines on which the question can be finally settled. As a preliminary step we would suggest that the Union Ministers might consent to confer informally with the Leader of our Deputation with a view to ascertaining whether the obstacles in the way of the conference cannot be overcome. We cannot of course agree to invest Mr. Paddison with plenipotentiary powers to act on our behalf and any arrangement suggested after consultation with Your Excellency's Ministers would be subject to our confirmation after the receipt by us of his report and after discussion with him. We are impressed with the difficulty of arriving at an understanding by telegraphic correspondence and it is on this account that we propose a personal discussion and have always held that the conference affords the most hopeful method of dealing with this question. In the event of agreement being reached regarding the conference, meetings between the representatives of this Government and of the Union Government might conveniently be held either formally or informally, at the time of the meetings in October next of the Imperial Conference or if necessary at an earlier date. We assume that progress with regard to pending legislation would be held up until the conference had an opportunity of discussing the question in all its bearing.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPLY.

Telegram from the Governor-General of South Africa dated 13th (received 14th) April 1926:—In reply to your telegram dated 26th March 1926., my Ministers desire to inform the Government of India, that in compliance with their request the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior have informally conferred with Mr. Paddison, leader and Mr. Bajpai, Secretary of the deputation, and that conversations have undoubtedly resulted in a mutually better understanding and appreciation of the respective points of views and difficulties of the two Governments. My Ministers do not consider the divergence in point of view or the difficulties so great that it should be deemed impossible to find a satisfactory basis for informal conversations which might lead to an amicable settlement as long as it remains understood that such conversations shall, on both sides, be entered into and conducted with sincere desire and intention to co-operate in finding a real and effective solution of the Indian problem. Any conference which could justly be interpreted as a mere attempt from outside to prevent the Union Government from dealing with its own problems in its own way will be resented by the people of South Africa and is and will continue to be unacceptable. As was pointed out in previous correspondence the European community in South Africa consider that their economic position and civilisation are seriously menaced by the presence and unfair competition of the Asiatics and the demand, on their part, that steps shall be taken without delay to counteract that menace is insistent and practically unanimous. This fact has been corroborated to the fullest extent by evidence laid before the Select Committee. My Ministers, therefore, wish to impress upon the Government of India that opinion in South Africa will not view with favour any settlement which does not hold out a reasonable prospect of safeguarding the maintenance of Western standards of life by just and legitimate means.

If the Government of India could accept this presentation of the position as the correct one and could further express their willingness to assist in exploring all possible methods of settling the Asiatic question, the Union Government will be ready to accept their offer to enter into a conference for the purpose. Any proposal which such a conference might make would be subject to confirmation by the Government of the two countries in order to ensure that the conference if finally agreed upon should meet under the best auspices. My Ministers have decided, subject to the approval of the Select Committee and Parliament, not to proceed further with the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration Further Provision Bill, until the results of the conference are available. Should the reply of the Government of India be favourable and final, and an agreement in regard to the holding of a conference be reached by the Ministers, such agreement should be embodied in the following terms which could form the basis and be included in any official public statement to be made at a later date.

TERMS.

The Government of the Union of South Africa and the Government of India have been further in communication with each other regarding the best method of arriving at an amicable solution of the Indian problem. The Government of the Union have impressed upon the Government of India that public opinion in South Africa will not view with favour any settlement which does not hold out a reasonable prospect of safeguarding the maintenance of the Western standards of life by just and legitimate means. The Government of India are prepared to assist in exploring all possible methods of settling the Asiatic question and have offered to enter into a conference with the Union for the purpose. Any proposal the conference might make would be subject to confirmation by the Governments of the two countries. The Union Government have accepted the offer of the Government of India and in order to ensure that the conference should meet under the best auspices have decided, subject to the approval of the Select Committee and Parliament, not to proceed further with the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Legislation Further Provision Bill until the results of the conference are available With a view to the limited time of the Select Committee and in order that they may be enabled to make the necessary recommendations, my Ministers will be glad to be favoured with an early reply.

INDIAN GOVERNMENT'S ACCEPTANCE.

Telegram to the Governor-General of South Africa, Cape Town, dated 17th April 1926:—"Your telegram dated 13th April. We learn with great satisfaction that conversations between Your Excellency's Ministers and the Leader and the Secretary of our Deputation have led to a better understanding and appreciation of the respective points of view and difficulties of the two Governments, and that as a result of them the Union Government are prepared to enter into a conference with us with the object of exploring all possible methods of settling the Asiatic question in South Africa consistent with the maintenance of the Western standards of life. We have constantly affirmed our belief that the conference affords the most hopeful method of dealing with this question and we gladly therefore accept the proposal which is now made to us. The terms in which it is possible to embody the agreement to hold a conference afford in our opinion a suitable basis for its proceedings and have our complete concurrence. We accept the statement of Your Excellency's Government that public opininion in South Africa would not view with favour any settlement which does not hold a reasonable prospect of safeguarding the maintenance of Western standards of life by just and legitimate means and for our own part will enter the conference with the sincere desire of co-operating with the Union Government in finding a solution of the Asiatic question which can be honourably accepted by the Governments and people both of South Africa and of India. We agree further that it is essential that any proposals that the conference may make should be subject to confirmation by the Governments of both countries It is understood that in presenting the report of the Select Committee on the Areas Reservation Bill, the Minister of the Interior will announce the agreement that has been arrived at between the two Governments and will move that Parliament should not proceed further with the Bill, until the results of the conference are available. We should be glad to know on what date this announcement will be made in order that we may arrange for simultaneous publication in this country."

Franchise for Indians in Foreign States and British Dominions: Replying to Pandit Nilkanta Das' question in the Legislative Assembly on the 12th February regarding the franchise enjoyed by Indians in Foreign States and British Dominions for their Parliaments, Mr. Bhore said: As regards foreign countries, the right of naturalisation is a condition precedent to the right of franchise. The only foreign country where Indians have been disfranchised appears to be the United States, where their naturalisation has been ruled by the Supreme Court to be against the Constitution. With regard to the British Dominions, the position is as follows: Indians domiciled in Canada enjoy Federal franchise in eight out of nine Provinces. In Australia, the Commonwealth franchise has been conferred on all resident British Indians. In New Zealand, Indians enjoy the franchise on the same footing as all other British subjects. In South Africa, only those Indians who were qualified for the Parliamentary vote under the laws existing in the several colonies on the establishment of the Union possess the Parliamentary franchise. In Newfoundland, Indians are eligible for the franchise on the same footing as all other British subjects.

against the danger of utilising Hindu-Moslem differences for the purpose of preserving the existing politics and administrative order in this country.

The only solution of this dispute, continued Mr. Pal, lay in the establishment of democratic freedom and cultural exchange between the two communities. The latter would take time and in the meantime the Government must govern. Whenever they had any political trouble in India, the spokesmen of Anglo-Indian and European press said, "Govern or get out." Could not the Indians now say honestly after their experience from the recent riots "Govern or get out?" The speaker, however, did not want the British Government to go out until the Indians had got Swaraj, but it was time for them to take strong measures to put down the elements of disorder.

RELICS OF POLYANDRY IN TIBET.

Marriage in Tibet is not the least interesting of the institutions of that remarkable country. As a rule, it takes place only in families possessed of wealth and social position. According to the laws of Tibet, the eldest brother has the prior right to marry, since he inherits the ancestral property. But if there are brothers, the wife is shared by them as by so many junior husbands. The children are regarded as those of the elder brother, the others being considered as "uncles". As a result of the tedious ceremonies, long terms of waiting, and troublesome conditions, formal marriage does not take place among the majority of people.

When a young man comes of marriageable age (which in Tibet is, as a rule, between 20 and 25 years for either sex) his parents look about for a suitable bride. Having found one with regard to her family's social standing, wealth, and so forth, as more or less equivalent to their own, the negotiations are put into the hands of an agent or go-between He approaches the girl's parents who, if they are disposed to agree first of all, consult the family priest, fortune-teller or astrologer. The verdict of these worthies being favourable they acquaint the go-between. The parents of both parties again consult the soothsayers as to an auspicious day.

The day is fixed some considerable time ahead as there must be a series of farewell banquets given for the daughter by her parents. Friends and relatives bring presents to these gatherings which are kept going for two or three weeks or even longer with much eating, drinking, dancing and general jollity. The bride receives new dresses and ornaments, among them presents and ornaments from the bridegroom and his family.

The curious feature of these marriages is the utmost secrecy preserved by the parents on either side as to whom their son or daughter is to marry. It may happen that they have not even seen each other until they meet on this occasion. The result is that divorces are not infrequent and, indeed, an agreement is actually made at the time of the marriage that either may divorce the other if not compatible. Divorce is simple in Tibet, for all that is necessary is that the couple shall agree to part. Among the gifts of the bridegroom is a jewelled head-ornament which is worn by the bride high up at the back of her hair. The husband has but to take this away from her, or she to hand it back to him, to make the divorce complete.

It might be supposed that this curious arrangement would lead to jealousies and quarrels, but this does not appear to be the case; or a wife, having several husbands to please, would have a difficult time of it. On the contrary, the Tibetan woman is very much the head of the household. The men must bring their earnings, or account for them to her. When they want money they must ask her for it. A husband who is, idle, or who does not earn as much as she thinks he should, is liable to be reprimanded or even divorced and driven away. Tibetan women are, as a rule, thrifty, and their husbands must do their bidding. Seldom does a married man undertake any enterprise or conclude any business without first consulting his wife. Occasionally it may be that a man of forceful or truculent character may dominate a household. With one woman and several men opposed to him, he has need of these qualities.—Justice, Madras.

SEND-OFF TO DR. BESANT.

Glowing tributes were paid to Dr. Besant for her manifold services to India and to her qualities of head and heart by speaker after speaker at a public meeting held on the 7th instant in Bombay to give her a hearty send-off on the eve of her departure to England.

Mr. Jayakar who presided on the occasion reviewing Dr. Besant's many-sided activities, made particular mention of her contribution to Indian philosophy by her theosophical publications and of her contribution to Indian political life by her Home Rule agitation. Dr. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill was a monument to her industry, energy and devotion to Indian freedom, declared Mr. Natarajan. All speakers while recognising that immediate materialisation of the Commonwealth of India Bill was doubtful, stressed on the necessity of all political parties backing the Bill unanimously. Dr. Besant who on rising received a tremendous ovation said that she preferred action to speech. She took this opportunity of answering why in the Commonwealth of India Bill there was no Secretaryship of State for India. At present with the Secretary of State there was a large amount of Indian money which was being used at low rates on interest by English merchants during difficult times. This money could be brought over to tide over the difficulties of the Indian merchants under the Commonwealth of India Scheme. Next Dr. Besant drew a vivid picture of the appalling misery and wretchedness of Indian villagers and emphatically declared that without freedom India would never escape starvation and the high rate of mortality under which she was groaning. Mrs. Besant deplored the conditions of the present-day disunion of the political parties and thought that in the presence of a third party there could be no unity between the Hindus and Muslims. After pointing out how the Commonwealth of India Bill was adopted as an official measure by the Labour Party she said India could be loyal to Britain only on condition that the latter insured India's freedom immediately. After her speech Dr. Besant was profusely garlanded amidst thundering and continuous cheering by several persons and all joined in wishing her bon voyage and a successful return to her adopted home. Dr. Besant left for England by the last mail to assist in the passage of the second reading of the Commonwealth of India Bill, now before the British Parliament.

THE BOMBAY PROVINCIAL NON-BRAHMIN CONFERENCE.

Resolutions.

The following are among the resolutions passed by he Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Conference held ere on the Ist instant :

This Conference earnestly appeals to all to use Swa- eshi goods and particularly to encourage hand-spinning nd hand-weaving; it calls upon the Government to ccelerate the development of Indian industries.

This Conference earnestly appeals to all Municipalities nd Local Boards to make primary education compul- ory within their areas without any avoidable delay; it ppeals to the Government to compel such action upon uch Municipalities and Boards as may be reasonably elieved to be negligent of their duties. It is of opinion hat additional taxation may even be resorted to provid- d the burdens are not thrown upon labourers and small griculturists.

This Conference is of opinion that in the interest of he physical welfare of the coming generations it is ecessary that compulsory military training should be ntroduced in colleges and that tests of physical fitness hould be introduced by the University.

This Conference recommends that the Non-Brahmins e given a proportionate number of posts of the fficers' rank in the Army, Navy and Air Services.

Whereas the hospitals and dispensaries opened in the own have not hitherto proved of any material use to ne villagers, this Conference appeals to all Local oards to institute similar facilities in the villages.

This Conferene is of opinion that prominent agricultu- sts be invited to give evidence before the Royal Com- ission appointed to enquire into the depressed condi- on of Indian agriculture.

This Conference is of opinion that in the interests of ne physical, economic and moral well-being of the ountry, the manufacture and sale of liquor be entirely rohibited.

This Conference requests the Government to lower ne qualification for the Council franchise to Rs. 3.

This Conference appoints the following Committee to nquire into the true state of the relations subsisting etween the Khots and cultivators and submit a report ithin three months after a complete spot-investigation all important places regarding the remedies to be dopted to compose the differences.

Whereas on account of the changed economic cir- umstances due to the War, the labourers and small ultivators are sinking deeper and deeper in poverty and hereas many money-lenders are taking advantage of neir condition to oppress them, this Conference appeals o the Government to give them adequate protection by egislation on lines of the Vatan Act.

This Conference appeals to the Government to pass egislation on the lines of Madras Presidency Religious ndowment enactment with a view to the safeguarding f the management, revenues and expenditures of the lindu temples of public worship; this Conference fur- her requests the Government to utilise the excess of ne income over expenditure of such temples for the urtherance of Primary education in the Presidency.

Of disloyalty to England he's accused ;
His native land is much abused ;
His plans for India are refused
By Britain.
He will not let his people fight ;
Takes no advantage of his might ;
A seer in all his people's sight ;
Their hero.
He wants his people to be free ;
Will he succeed in Victory—
To make way for liberty
In India ?
He is courteous and polite ;
He sees his people in their plight ;
And tries to show them what is right ;

A Pimp's Sentence Enhanced : At the Bombay High Court Justices Fawcett and Madgaonkar, in enhancing recently the sentence of a brothel-keeper from two months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 100 fine to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 300 fine, passed severe strictures on the trying Magistrate for holding the view that on account of her luxurious life two months' simple imprisonment was sufficient punishment for the accused.

Normal Situation in Calcutta : The situation in Calcutta is normal. There is nothing left even in the worst affected parts of the town to remind one of recent riotous orgies, nor is the tension of communal feeling visible. All shops are open. Normal business is going on and the Hindus and Mahomedans are working together.

The Lawrence Statue: The inscription on the Lawrence Statue, "Will you be governed by pen or sword?" has been removed and a new inscription has been put in its place bearing the words, "With pen and sword I served you." This change of inscription has been made very quietly, without giving any information to the public. The pose of the Statue, however, remains the same.

A. I. C. C's Resolution on South Africa: The All-India Congress Committee which recently met at Ahmedabad, unanimously adopted a resolution on the South African Indian question welcoming the Round Table Conference, congratulating the Government of India, thanking Mahatma Gandhi, Mr. C. F. Andrews and others, and declaring the opinion that nothing but an honourable and satisfactory settlement would satisfy India.

The Punjab Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha The Hon. Secretary writes: Reports of 173 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of the [illegible] Sabha, Lahore (Punjab) throughout India in the month of March 1926. The total number of marriages performed in the current year i.e., from 1st January 1926 to the end of March 1926 has reached 623 as detailed below: According to Caste: Brahmin 120, Khatri 61, Arora 53, Aggarwal 102, Sikh 89, Kaisth 17, Rajput 61, Misc. 120. Total 623. According to Provinces: Punjab and N. W. F. P. 414. Sind 36, Delhi 19, U. P. 123, Bengal 13, Madras 1, Bombay 1, C. P. 6, Assam 2, Behar and Orissa 8, Total 623. Voluntary donation received during the month is Rs. 44 and the total amount during the year is Rs. 171-10-0.

Terrible Mortality from Plague and Small-Pox in the Punjab: Plague has now assumed alarming proportions in the Punjab. The latest figures available are for the week ended April 10. These show that no less than 7,236 cases occurred during the week and deaths stood at 5,379. Practically every district in the Punjab has some areas affected by the epidemic. The districts that have so far been immune are Simla, Kangra, Shahpur, Jhelum, Jhang, Multan, Mazaffargarh, Dera Ismail Khan, Attock and Mianwali. The largest number of cases and deaths are reported from the Eastern districts, namely, Rohtak, Karnal, Hissar, Gurgaon and Ambala while the Ferozepore, Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Sialkot and Gujarat districts are also faring badly. Practically all the districts also report stray cases of small-pox. During the week 364 cases of small-pox occurred and there were 120 deaths. The figures given both for plague and small-pox include Punjab States. Mandi and Bilaspur States are reported free from the infection. The Health Department of Punjab is organizing a campaign for meeting this situation.

Education on Communal Basis : An Associated Press message gives the following: Education on communal basis was condemned by a number of the Senators at the meeting of the Senate of the Calcutta University held on the 8th inst., when the question of the affiliation of the Islamia College came up for consideration. Five University Inspectors who inspected the College recommended its affiliation though they were against the proposal of reserving the College exclusively for Mahomedan students. They considered it undesirable that an educational institution supported entirely out of State funds should be run on communal lines. An amendment was moved that while reserving a large number of seats for Mahomedans, non-Moslem students should not be excluded from the College. This amendment was lost. Another amendment was moved by the Rev. Urquhart recommending the affiliation of the College with a rider that while not opposing the realisation of the ideal of the authorities of the College, the University was of opinion that, in general, admission to the College should not be confined to the members of any one community. This was carried.

"Extremely Cruel Will" : We are indebted to the Free Press of India for the interesting decision of the Madras High Court given below: On the ground that it was extremely cruel, the will of a stenographer who died last year was set aside by Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri on the 6th instant. The testator was a stenographer attached to the Civil Justice Committee drawing a [illegible] per month. In the will he bequeathed Rs. 1,000 to his brother. The entire charge of his property worth Rs. 12,000 left managed by his father in the interests of his five minor children. For the wife, the will made an allowance of only seven rupees per month. The will was made when the stenographer was an in-patient in the General Hospital. An application was made by the wife for setting aside the will and revoking the probate granted to the father on the gound that the will was written under undue influence. Her husband had been uniformly kind to her. During his illness, she alleged, the parents of her husband managed to send her away from Madras to Coimbatore to look after the children poisoning the mind of the testator against her during her absence. They were alleged to have intercepted letters and money orders from her to show to him that his wife had never cared for him. For the exceutor, it was contended that the will was written before a doctor and a lawyer and that it was a registered one the validity of which could not be questioned. The Judge held it was an extremely cruel will and was contrary to the testator's wishes. He set aside and revoked the probate granted to the father.

NOTES

Reactionary Propaganda: Our attitude towards educational experiments like Professor Karve's Women's University and Non-Co-operation National Schools, has been that there is ample scope for them among the 22 million children of school-going age for whom there is no educational provision at present. Of about 30 million such children, 8 millions are enrolled in the existing schools, and the remaining 22 millions remain outside the present system. Anything done to give even a million or two of these derelicts some sort of education, is a valuable service rendered to the advancement of national literacy. This, however, does not seem to satisfy the ambitions of innovators. They are less anxious to extend education than to discredit the existing system. In an address which Mrs. S. Gadgil delivered in Poona, she is reported to have denounced the women who have passed through the recognised schools and colleges as making bad mothers and worse housewives. Another lady carried the matter further by denouncing tea-drinking as the outcome, apparently in her view, of modern education. These sweeping statements do not, of course, bear scrutiny. Mrs. Gadgil is clearly confounding "Society women" with educated women. Many of the former class are very little educated in any sense of the term, all their thoughts being fixed upon how to dress, when to eat, and where to kill time. The really educated woman is the opposite of this type. As for the shibboleths about teaching motherhood, surely Indian women need not go to a Women's University to learn what the birds of the air and the beasts of the field know to perfection. Are our educated men worse fathers for their education? Why should a woman because she learns algebra and history and physics, suddenly develop an incapacity for what after all is a biological function? By all means, let Mrs. Gadgil and others who think with her, avoid the recognised schools and colleges, but they have no right to indulge in ignorant and prejudiced diatribes against their sisters who choose to receive their education in them rather than in the Hingne Badruk institution.

Night Clubs in Bombay: The result of some elaborate inquiries regarding night clubs in Bombay was published on Wednesday the 19th instant in the columns of the Indian Daily Mail. A number of people representing various organisations were interviewed by a representative of the paper, and of these at least three have pointed out that a great deal of immorality resulted from excessive drinking. A responsible police officer, in his interview, has said that, though night clubs are not likely to increase in Bombay, as the majority of Indians are not addicted to drink, matters ought not to be allowed to stop there on that assumption. Br. Dayasagar said that nothing should be done to combat this evil until full investigations are made and proofs collected, as any incomplete action would harm the cause. It is, however, good that at least the newspapers—for we cannot believe that the other big newspapers will be found wanting when one of them has already taken the first step—are making an attempt to rouse the public conscience of Bombay and they can do a great deal in organising, if not in creating, public opinion against this vice. To those who read the article carefully it will be obvious that it has been severely edited and that the newspaper knows far more than it has divulged in print. We hope that the matter will not be allowed to rest here.

The Untouchables and the Die-hards: The untouchables have no greater enemy than the egoist who seeks by means of subtle reasoning to show that any change in their present condition would prove detrimental to their welfare, while really his mind is much exercised by the thought of being deprived of their services, should they be reformed. Refuting the stock complaints and arguments advanced against the removal of untouchability by one such correspondent whom he characterises as a die-hard, Mahatma Gandhi writes in the Young India: "What have we done to wean them from their ways? Do we not spend a fortune to reform members of our own families? Are the untouchables not members of the great Hindu family? Indeed, Hinduism teaches us to regard the whole of humanity as one indivisible and undivided family and holds each one of us responsible for the misdeeds of all. But if it is not possible to act up to the grand doctrine for its vastness, let us at least understand the unity of the 'untouchables' with us since we regard them as Hindus. And what is worse, eating carrion or thinking carrion? We daily create, harbour and nourish millions of untouchable thoughts. Let us shed them, for they are the true untouchables deserving to be hated and cast out." The whole trouble has risen because the suppressed classes have been denied the elementary rights of human beings and were placed beyond the pale of society. Ignorant of what was their due, they submitted so long but even a worm will turn, and if their lot is not improved betimes the correspondent and those of his way of thinking will have cause to repent of it.

A Weaving Institute for Women: Miss Wilson in her bright little book entitled "Through an Indian Counting Glass" narrates the circumstances that led to the establishment of a school at Vena Bank in Serampore by the Y. W.

C. A. to give industrial training for women. The transition from the employment of women on an industry foreign in its operation to an indigenous one was by no means slow particularly when it was found that it was more profitable. The school was mainly instrumental in giving a new vocational opening for women and removing the wide-spread prejudice that existed towards industrial education. In order to fully equip herself for the onerous task she had undertaken, Miss Wilson registered herself as a higher class student and underwent a course of instruction in the Industrial Institute. Under her guidance the school achieved remarkable success until at last it was affiliated to the Government Weaving Institute as its Women's Department. When the author mentions in the book that the cult of the charka urged by Mahatma Gandhi was intended for men as a supplementary employment, she is not far wrong, but in fairness to Mahatma Gandhi it must be said that he also urged its acceptance on women long before the Y. W. C. A. ever dreamt of doing so. The book is interspersed with descriptions of places, scenes and characteristics peculiar to India, which are interesting. It contains also many details about the process of weaving and explanations of its terminology that it is a valuable addition to the literature on that subject.

Social Evil in Northern India: The Observer, Lahore, in its latest issue, calls attention to the growth of social evil in Northern India and regrets the absence of legislation to check it. Bombay and Calcutta have already their respective Acts for the purpose and Madras also bids fair to have one shortly, but the other provinces are quiescent. No doubt, there are Municipal Committees and Societies to deal with the evil, but either they do not evince much desire for reform being imperfectly acquainted with the nature of the subject or their influence is very limited. The absence of special legislation in Northern India, of course, presupposes that the vice is not so rampant there as in Bombay or Calcutta, but we note from the Observer that it is growing and fast spreading to villages. Especially is this the case in the Punjab, particularly in the Canal Colonies and the homes of returned soldiers. To quote our contemporary: "The villages are no longer the homes of purity and innocence that they once were. Vice stalks unashamed in some of them Standards of social morality have been lowered and indulgence in debauchery is not considered a matter of shame. The obscene songs that have taken the place of the old ballads bear eloquent testimony to the deterioration that has set in. The increase in Bardafaroshi and the use of certain hotels in towns, like Lahore and Amritsar, as places of assignation, if not regular brothels, are other evidences of the spread of prostitution which it would be suicidal to ignore." If the facts as stated above are true, then no time should be lost in drafting a Bill for the Punjab at least, taking into consideration the experience of Bombay and Calcutta. As our contemporary rightly points out, this is a question on which both Hindus and Muslims can unite and incidentally it will also serve to obliterate the distinctions between rural and urban. We hope somebody will take up this question. The Hindu, Madras, is responsible for the statement that the League of Nations has decided to send out a Committee to India to investigate the evil in the bigger cities and recommend measures for its suppression.

Future of Anglo-Indians: The article contributed by Chaplain W. A. Hobson, an Anglo-Indian priest in charge of a parish in South India, to a recent issue of the Young Men of India, is illustrative of the changed mentality that has come over the Anglo-Indians In common with many other intelligent and educated Anglo-Indians, he holds that, notwithstanding their cultural and social differences from the rest of India, Anglo-Indians should regard themselves as sons of the soil and own only one mother-land, India, and that it is not only to their interests but also their moral duty to live and work for the good of India. Mr. Hobson admits that Anglo-Indians must not claim any preferential treatment over the other communities of India and we do not think anyone in the country will deny for a moment the due rights and privileges which he claims on their behalf. Mr. Hobson vigorously pleads for separate schools for Anglo-Indians and veiws with alarm the attempts made in certain quarters to discourage them. Experience, however, has taught us that communal schools have been the breeding ground of communalism and, as such, every attempt to abolish them should be welcomed. Mr. Hobson justly finds fault with the Anglo-Indian leaders, with some exceptions, for not taking active part in the work of developing the country, and he concedes that the Indian representatives are far abler from every point of view and that their own communal interests are likely to be better served by them than by their own leaders. In spite of this, however, he will not forego communal representation for his community, unless a guarantee is given by Indian leaders that their interests will be protected and developed by them. This, by itself, is a candid confession of the pernicious nature of the system of communal representation, and we hope the Anglo-Indians will also soon realise, as other communities have already done, that the protection afforded by it is illusory.

Women's Conferences: It is a hopeful sign of the times that women are waking up to the consciousness of their importance in society. We publish in this issue the proceedings of the Catholic Ladies' Conference and the Eazhava Ladies' Conference which recently held their sittings in Kerala. The Eazhavas are classed as untouchables and the fact that women of this community have found it possible to meet together and deliberate upon problems relating to them, is itself a clear proof of the awakening that has come over them as a result of modern education. The President of the Conference, Srimathi Narayani Amma, wife of Mr. T. K. Madhavan, the champion of the untouchables, gave a good lead to the Conference by her masterly survey of the problems confronting the community and the means of improving its lot in society.

Kerala Muslim Aikya Sangham: Mr. Marmaduke Pickthall, late of the Bombay Chronicle and now of the Educational Service in Hyderabad State, in his presidential address to the above Sangham which recently held its sitting at Tellicherry, Malabar, gave some good advice to his Moplah brethren. He urged them to take advantage of modern English education which they had so long neglected and take to agriculture and the care of flocks and herds, "the most ancient, the most sacred and the noblest profession of all." Above all, he warned them not to admit into their movement feelings of hatred against any one, for that would vitiate their motive and destroy their work as Muslims.

Sastri Endowment Fund: We cordially support the appeal issued by the organisers of the above Fund for subscriptions from the general public. With the proceeds of the Fund, it is proposed to found a Chair of Politics in the Madras University and to present an oil-painting of the Right Hon V. S. Srinivasa Sastri to the University. An amount of Rs. 3,700 has already been collected and it is estimated that not less than Rs. 10,000 will be required for the purpose. We hope the public will make a response worthy of the object.

BOMBAY, MAY 22, 1926.

ANCIENT INSTITUTIONS AND MODERN LEGISLATION.

Many learned books and essays have been written on the origin of caste, More convincing than speculation, is the process of its formation actually in progress in South Africa. The historic sources of ancient institutions were obscured by metaphysical theories. In modern times, however, they cannot be so concealed and we can see the real actuating impulses of their origins. Within the last few days, a Bill has been passed by the South African Parliament commonly known as the Colour Bar Bill. This Bill prohibits the employment of native Africans and Asiatics in any occupation requiring the handling of machinery. The reason given for this prohibition is that, unless skilled occupations are restricted to White men, they run the risk of losing their means of livelihood owing to the competition of native Africans and Asiatics. An exception is made in the case of so-called "coloured persons" who, in South African terminology, are Euro-Africans of mixed descent. This Bill taken together with the legislation contemplated or adopted for segregating Indians and to prevent them from owning land or being granted trade licenses, is, if anything, an aggravated reproduction of the social process which in ancient days resulted in caste and the depressed classes in this country. Incidentally, it bears out our oft-repeated contention that outcastes are the inevitable concomitants of castes and that the true remedy for the removal of untouchability is the abolition of caste, People who seek to emancipate the depressed classes and at the same time to maintain the present caste system, are attempting to reconcile two fundamentally incompatible ideas. The South African Whites are doing what the medieval Hindus did and, most probably, for similar reasons. For the preservation of their "standards of life," the latter adopted very nearly the same measures as the former are doing before our eyes. The South African Whites profess Christianity, but they claim that anti-Asiatic legislation has nothing to do with religion. British publicists who make much capital out of the existence of the depressed classes in India as an argument against self-government, are quite satisfied that the South African Whites are fully competent to work self-governing institutions notwithstanding that they are working it at present to create a depressed, untouchable and unapproachable class in their country. The Indian has inherited the institution and he is anxious to improve it out of existence, and surely his sin is not as great as that of the Africander White who deliberately and with the words of Christ's teaching on his lips, is engaged in reducing a community to a position worse than that of the Indian untouchables.

Another Hindu institution which is being sought to be reproduced in British society is that of adoption, and here also we may observe before our eyes the circumstances which probably led to its invention by Hindu law-givers. It may be observed in passing that the Indian social reformer or politician is very liable to be stampeded into apologetic pleas for his country's institutions, owing to his ignorance of social and political facts in Western countries by the criticism of religious propagandists and political reactionaries. English-educated Indians are extremely sensitive to the European's opinion of his ways, and the most "nationalist" of them is also the most hungry for the applause of the Englishman or American, the Frenchman or the Italian. The American, on the other hand, does not care to enquire what the Englishman thinks of his ways, nor does the Italian recognise that the Frenchman's opinion of his peculiarities is a factor of which he should take any account. The orthodox and conservative classes of India are similarly unaffected by the European's appreciation or ridicule of their habits and ideas. We should say that not only the Indian whose one great preoccupation in life is to be mistaken for a European or at least for a Eurasian, but also the Indian who aggressively emphasises his repugnance to Western habits, are equally influenced by European opinion, the one sympathetically and the other by revulsion. The healthy, self-respecting attitude of mind is that which is neither anxious nor afraid to have anything which savours of Western ways—does not care, in fact, to relate itself either by conformity or contradiction to Western ways. The only question is, whether a thing is good or bad, rational or irrational, and not whether it is Indian or European.

To return to the question of adoption a Bill for legalising which is now before the British Parliament. The circumstances which have induced the introduction of this measure seem to have been, if not created, emphasised by the consequences of the Great War, namely, a great increase in the number of orphans, on the one hand, and of parents bereft of children, on the other. According to a writer in the Nineteenth Century, one institution in England alone received 40,000 applications from persons who wanted to give away children and 5000 applications from persons who wanted to take children in adoption. Many parents adopt children even now, but they have no legal status as parents, as among the Hindus, and it is proposed to give them such a status by law. The writer in the Nineteenth Century, Mr. W. R. Barker, gives an interesting account of the law relating to the subject in some European countries. In France the adopter must be fifty years of age and childless and the adopted must be an adult. The law in Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Italy follows the French law with variations. Most of the States of the United States have passed laws on the subject. The Bill before the British Parliament provides safeguards against the abuse of adoption by requiring that the suitability of the adopter should be certified by a local authority and the adoption sanctioned by the High Court of Chancery. In India, any Hindu may adopt a child without the certificate or sanction

of any authority, though the validity of the adoption depends upon the fulfilment of the conditions laid down by Hindu law as interpreted or mis-interpreted by the Privy Council.

THE MADRAS ADI-DRAVIDA CONFERENCE.

The presidential address delivered by Mr. R. Veerian, the depressed classes representative in the Madras Legislative Council, at the tenth Adi-Dravida Provincial Conference held last Sunday in Madras, stands in striking contrast to that delivered by Rao Bahadur M.C. Raja at the Depressed Classes Leaders' Conference, Nagpur. While Mr. M. C. Raja was all praise to the Government and all hostility to the other classes in the country, Mr. Veerian urged the need for enlisting the sympathy and good-will of the other classes and warned his hearers against the danger of antagonising them. Like the President of the Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Conference, Mr. Veerian declared that "our movement is not a movement for hatred; but one started in self-defence." Unlike Mr. Raja who laid the entire blame for the present humiliating conditions of the depressed classes at the doors of the Hindu Society and justified the existence of British rule in India solely on the ground of the protection it afforded to the depressed classes, Mr. Veerian takes a sane and intelligent view of the matter. "I have no desire," he said, "to apportion the blame about our depressed, nay, humiliating condition in life, but the patent fact is that if the Hindu Society had bestowed attention on our spiritual and social needs, and if the British Raj had taken an early step to lift us up from our low position in the political and economic sphere, our lot would not have been as deplorable as it is to-day. We have therefore to seek and obtain our rights and liberties from the Hindu Society and the British Raj." Mr. Veerian readily recognised it as a sign of the times "that the better minds among the Caste Hindus (with the exception of a certain section of social die-hards) are in a mood of self-examination." "Slowly but surely", he continued, "they are realising the fact that the suppressed classes are depressed because the Caste Hindus neglected them. In many unexpected quarters there is a searching of hearts." This is indeed a striking testimony to the wonderful change that has come over the mentality of the Caste Hindus during the last few years. Mr. Veerian also paid a well-deserved tribute to Mahatma Gandhi, who, more than any other political leader in modern times, has drawn pointed attention to the curse of untouchability, "the greatest blot upon Hinduism", and has demanded its abolition as the first essential of Swaraj, and to the late Dr. T. M. Nair, the well known founder of the Non-Brahmin movement in Madras. The depressed classes also owe not a little to the Christian Missionaries, the Arya Samaj, the Brahmo Samaj, the Ramakrishna Mission and such like organisations. As Mr. Veerian rightly remarked, the fear of the Christian Missionary has been the beginning of much social wisdom among the Caste Hindus, and we can only repeat what we have said on another occasion and which Mr. Veerian was kind enough to refer in his address, that more than the fear, the example of the Christian Missionary, his devotion, his earnestness, his power of organisation, may in the times to come increasingly inspire our social workers.

The advice which Mr. Veerian gave to his community that it should beware of being or becoming mere pawns in the political game, is the result of a deep and painful experience. The late Dr. T. M. Nair, when he founded the Non-Brahmin movement in Madras, conceived also the idea of rallying the Adi-Dravidas under its banner, but after his death, the Non-Brahmin leaders lost sight of the great purpose which he had in view and degenerated into a party of office-seekers. No wonder the Adi-Dravidas regarded the Justice Party as even more inimical to their interests than the Brahmins. It was this charge of apathy towards the depressed classes which Rao Bahadur O. Kandasami Chetty made against the Ministerialists that called forth the provocative utterance from the Raja of Panagal, the Chief Minister, which formed the subject of the famous libel case that was decided only the other day. Education is the sovereign remedy for all the ills from which the country is now suffering and unless the Adi-Dravidas take advantage of modern education more and more, there is no hope of their rising high in the social ladder. How backward they are in point of education may be seen from the fact that only 2 per cent. of the total number of Adi-Dravidas are in school which is less than half the percentage of attendance among the remainder of the population of the Presidency. This is, of course, due to the disabilities in the matter of the admission of Adi-Dravida children in the public schools, but it is a matter for gratification that in Madras and the Nilgiris Districts all schools under public management are now open to peoples of all castes and creeds. During the year 1923-24, it would also appear that about sixty schools held in temples, chavadies and agraharams and rented buildings have been transferred to buildings to which all classes of pupils can have access. There is still, however, existing a large amount of prejudice against the depressed classes children, but it is sure to die down with the advance of education. A further cause of the backwardness of the depressed classes in education seems to be their dependence upon the land-owning classes and the Director of Public Instruction, Madras, opines that this will be largely removed by the introduction of compulsory elementary education. Mr. Veerian is for education not only for boys but also for girls and in fact more for girls than for boys, because, in his opinion, the education of a single girl means the uplifting of a whole family in a larger and truer sense than the education of a single man. One can understand Government's difficulties in solving the school problem, as the solution lies mainly, if not solely, in the hands of the Caste Hindus, but one cannot excuse Government's apathy towards grants of lands to depressed classes. The Government, it seems, has already ordered that suitable lands must be reserved for the Adi-Dravidas in each district and assigned to them under special

conditions, but effect has not been given to these orders owing to the lack of interest on the part of the subordinate officers. We may here draw attention to a letter from some Adi-Dravidas in South Arcot which we published in a recent issue. They had petitioned the Government three years back for darkhast lands, but they received no reply whatever. Government, we hope, will hereafter pay more attention to this subject and dispose of such applications without undue delay. In this connection, Government would also do well to take into consideration the suggestion which Mr. Veerian made for enabling and encouraging as many deserving Adi-Dravidas as possible to act as Karnams and Village Munsiffs to remove the difficulties and disabilities to which the depressed classes are now subjected, as the good intentions and special efforts of Government are nullified in villages which are often caste-ridden. The Conference passed many resolutions with a view to ameliorate the condition of the depressed classes, and among them we are glad to notice a resolution calling upon the Government of Madras to accept prohibition as its goal in the excise policy and to introduce local option immediately and take steps to include the depressed classes in the Nilgiris in the experiment now being tried there.

RACIALISM IN A CHRISTIAN SCHOOL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

"Is that teaching Christian sympathy or race-prejudice?" asked a correspondent, 'V. J.', of Bombay, in one of the Bombay papers more than two months back (Vide the Bombay Chronicle, 25-2-1926, p. 9, Col. 2). He has pointed out that at the Cathedral High School of Bombay while European, Anglo-Indian and Parsi students in the Cambridge Senior Class are charged Rs. 12-8-0 each per month, Hindu students are charged Rs. 25. He also enquired if such schools were entitled to grants-in-aid from public funds.

Now, it seems, nothing more has been heard on the matter through the press. But it is clear, whatever pious Christian missionaries may undertake to teach us, benighted people, such humiliations must not pass without effective protest from us whose taxes as well as fees go to support their institutions. Eternal vigilance is the price of national self-respect, as well as of liberty. So I, a non-Bombayite, have once more (after nearly ten weeks) to bring this matter to public notice through your widely-read as well as hospitable columns, and hereby call upon the Cathedral High School authorities to say whether V. J.'s allegations are true in substance, and, if so, what they have to say in justification of themselves. The Minister in charge of Education also would do well to enquire into this case.

Karwar, Yours etc.,
May 11th 1926. S. D. N.

THE BOMBAY PROSTITUTION ACT.

The following report of the Select Committee of the Council of His Excellency the Governor of Bombay on the Bill to amend the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act, 1923, and the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, are published:—

[The report is signed by the Hon. Mr. J. L. Rieu, Messrs. P. E. Percival, C. G. Adam, Hooseinally M. Rahimtoola, R. G. Pradhan, Rafiuddin Ahmad, S. K. Bole and R. D. Shinde.

Messrs. R. S. Nekaljay and A. N. Surve have signed the report subject to minutes of dissent.]

We have examined the Bill and made a few changes in it.

We have considered the question whether the punishment provided in clause 3 of the Bill is sufficient. Two of the members were of opinion that the punishment should be increased, especially for second and subsequent offences. We have, however, decided by a majority that the punishment provided in clause 3 of the Bill is sufficient.

We have redrafted the proposed sub-section (6) (b) in order to make the wording of the sub-section correspond with that of sub-section (4) of section 9 of the Act.

We have made some slight drafting changes in clause 6.

MINUTE OF DISSENT BY MR. R. S. NEKALJAY.

I am of the opinion that the punishment provided for the procurer has not proved to be effective and I would emphasize whipping with or without the addition of imprisonment as an efficient way of checking the growth of this offensive trade. Further, the police should be given power to arrest pimps without warrant and at the same time the Government should take steps to see that no corruption prevails in the police and that the guilty persons are brought to book.

For subsequent offences the procurers should be expelled from the city and thus put a stop to their dishonest living.

As for the girls who are victims of these pimps, they must be removed to the fallen homes where every assistance should be given to them to enable them to secure an honourable living.

In cases of subsequent offences I am of the opinion that segregation might prove effective and in dealing with these poor girls the Government should not lose sight of the fact that these despised girls should not be made confirmed criminals but should be helped out of their miserable condition.

Generally where women of ill-fame and ill-repute living in chawls or places occupied by other classes come to the notice of the police these should in the first place be segregated and thus prevent the evil spreading. Also persons thus segregated shoud be subjected to frequent medical examination.

MINUTE OF DISSENT BY MR. SURVE.

I am still of opinion that the punishment laid down in clause 3 of the Bill is insufficient and requires enhancement. I had urged—but unsuccessfully—that a repetition of the offence should be punished more severely. Burmah Act II of 1921, section 4, does make a distinction between first and subsequent offences for the purpose of punishing the latter with more severity. I may note here that in order to obtain an exact idea of the extent and prevalence of this form of crime, I had suggested that workers in the field of social evil who could throw light on the points, be examined as expert witnesses, but that suggestion was not accepted. Had it been accepted, my honourable colleagues on the

realpatidar.com

committee would have been on surer grounds in declaring the punishment laid down in the clause as sufficient. As the matters stand, I am constrained to say with due respect, that the majority have come to a decision without taking into consideration all aspects of the question. I therefore reserve my right of moving amendments for the purpose of enhancing punishment and also for visiting offences subsequent to the first with greater rigour.

Section 9, sub-section (1) of the Prostitution Act confers two kinds of powers upon the Commissioner of Police, viz.,—

(1) Prohibition of residing in, using of, or frequenting any house, room, or place etc., and

(2) Removal of a person within or without the city of Bombay.

Clause 4 of the Bill by adding sub-section (6) (a) to section 9 of the Act attempts to confer similar powers upon the District Magistrate, but with this difference, viz., that the Commissioner of Police derives his power under section 9, sub-section (1), whereas the District Magistrate will derive his under the proposed sub-section (6) (a) plus the notification issued by the Governor in Council.

As regards the second kind of power, viz, removal of a person, the powers of the Commissioner of Police are limited by sub-section (3) which requires him to obtain the previous sanction of the Government. Similar limitation on the power of the District Magistrate is not reproduced in the Bill. Government may, before issuing the notification, limit the powers of the District Magistrate, but that will be by an executive act and not by virtue of a statutory provision. If Government fail to impose such a limitation on the power of the District Magistrate, then the result will be that the Commissioner of Police who is a superior officer and exercises jurisdiction within the narrow limits of the City of Bombay will have but limited powers, whereas the District Magistrate who is—comparatively speaking—an inferior officer and whose jurisdiction extends over the whole district, will possess unlimited powers, so far as the previous sanction of the Government is concerned. I do not think it is the intention of the legislature to arm the District Officer with this unlimited power. Removal of a person from a place is a very great power, and it is not in the interests of the subjects that exceptional power of this magnitude be conferred on the District Officer without any statutory limitation. I would therefore humbly recommend that a limitation on the power of the District Officer be put as it is put in the case of the Commissioner of Police, and that the District Magistrate be required to obtain the previous sanction of the Government whenever he wants to exercise his power of removal of a person from his jurisdiction.

MUSEUMS IN INDIA.

( By Rev. Arthur R. Slater, F. R. G. S. )

The educational value of museums is being increasingly realised in India, and public authorities are giving more attention to them then ever before. It is true there is still room for considerable development, but museum collections are not made in a day, even if the buildings were ready. Much steady and patient work requires to be done. It is necessary for men who are interested in these things to use their energies in getting together, wherever possible, collections of value. The object of this short article is to briefly describe a few of the museums to be found in this country. The ones in Calcutta, Bombay, etc., are not referred to, but a typical selection is given of the smaller museums, several of which show evidences of the greatest care and skill in organisation. There is a tendency in this country to make a great spurt at the beginning and then to allow the collections to remain without any serious effort to increase them. Doubtless, if the plan of adding a new section for war exhibits is followed, a new interest will be aroused in these institutions.

In the centre of what is probably the finest public garden in India, laid out by the orders of the Maharaja of Jaipur, stands the Albert Hall, in which is housed a beautiful museum. The building is a sumptuous modern structure of which the Prince of Wales laid the first stone in 1876; the whole is most imposing. Here the Maharaja has collected a most complete set of objects dealing with modern works of art and industry, and also of antiquities from every part of India. Mr. Forrest says that it is one of the finest collections in India. He writes:

"As we strolled through it," "we came upon an interesting group. There are four Rajputs from the wilds, with their women, whose faces were veiled, listening with rapt attention to a guide who was dilating on the imitations of the frescoes in the Ajanta caves."

The silks and carpets and porcelain and clay vessels, are well worth a close study and it is instructive to go from the museum to the School of Art and compare the work being done now with the work of the past. The work executed there is of a high quality and great interest, but something has gone from the beauty, an indescribable something, the soul of the artist. In the museum there is a fine collection of arms of every kind, suits of chain mail, wonderful engraved blades of every description. There are specimens of every kind of brass work for which the town is famous, also many excellent specimens of jewellery work. The building itself is an imposing structure, built in a distinctly Indian style of architecture, and is quite the most imposing edifice in the town. The gardens in which it is situated are 70 acres in extent and were laid out by Dr. de Fabreck at a cost of about Rs. 400,000. These gardens cost the Maharaja Rs. 30,000 a year to keep in order.

Another museum belonging to one of the Rajputna States may be referred to, but there is no comparison between this and the imposing structure at Jaipur. Nor does it compare in its value as an educational asset of the State. The Victoria Institute situated in the capital city of Udaipur, was built in memory of the great White Queen, but like so many similar institutions in this country, very little appears to have been done since it was opened to make the collection of articles representative. In view of the fact that the Jaipur authorities have been so successful in their collection, there appears to be no reason why Udaipur, a country with a wonderful history of romance, courage and endurance should not have an equally fine collection. The famous fortress of Chitorgarh itself should provide sufficient materials to give new life to the museum. Doubtless, the authorities will seek to enlarge the accommodation in order to provide a home for the war trophies which her soldiers brought back from the great war in which they have taken an honourable share. The building, which is white like all the structures in this fairy-land city, is built in the Moslem style. It also includes a library of moderate dimensions with a statue of Queen Victoria which cannot be described as a work of art. There are modelled heads in coloured plaster, ranged in cases numbered and ticked, of all the Hindu castes, each with its proper caste mark upon the forehead. There is a miscellaneous collection of other things, native arts, industries and antiquities being represented, though not to any great extent. It does seem a pity that the authorities, having a suitable building, should not make better use of it, especially in view of the fact that many valuable treasures that can never be replaced are being lost.

In the Native States of South India we find that great interest is taken in the collections made by the orders of the ruling princes. The beautiful building erected by the ruler of Travancore for the housing of his collection, is one of the most imposing in the State. It stands in the capital city, Trivandram, in the midst of an extensive garden which is well kept. In the season the surroundings are ideal, for the whole garden is one mass of bloom. That the museum and gardens are appreciated is evident from the large number of people who use them regularly. The work of collecting the materials for the museum was begun by General Cullen, who lived as Resident in the State for several years. In 1852 he began to collect specimens of the many kinds of rocks to be found in the neighbourhood, and this work was continued by several later enthusiasts. The object of the museum is limited, being the formation of as complete as possible a collection of the articles which exhibit the manners, arts, and crafts, fauna and flora of Travancore, and the authorities are to be congratulated on their success. One of the most striking exhibits is that of a beautifully made model of a Tarwad, a typical native house of Travancore. In the compound are typical figures of the inhabitants. There are also some interesting models of the various races that inhabit Travancore, including the hill tribes which are still uncivilised. There is also a collection of ancient implements of torture which were used by these tribes years ago. The work of the State—silver work, ivory and sandal-wood—is represented by some excellent specimens. Several cases are devoted to a collection of the fishes found in the sea and back-waters. No attempt has been made to introduce objects from other parts of the world, but the collections serve to give a knowledge of the life of the Travancore State. The building in which the collection is housed retains some of the characteristics of native architecture on the Malabar Coast.

The Maharaja of Mysore has established a museum in Bangalore, the most important town in his State. The building which is of red sandstone, is not without architectural merit and stands in Cubbon Park, now most tastefully laid out in flower beds etc. The museum attracts a great number of people, especially the villagers who are always to be seen looking with interest at the objects collected here. The meaning of many they may not understand, but they are interested in those things which touch their own lives. In the vestibule of the museum is a slab with twelve Persian districts, brought from Tipu's palace in the fort, a figure of a Jain deity with a very superb carving round it, brought from a Jain temple, also some wonderful carvings from Halenid. In the large room adjoining is a valuable collection of stuffed animals, butterflies, and native ornaments and dresses, with a remarkable exhibition of fishes. The geological specimens are also of great value. This State is so rich in material that an enlarged structure will be necessary to house anything like a representative collection of the State resources. Several of the small towns of the State are trying to establish small museums which will be of service to the people in connection with their industries.

Reference may be made to two museums in British India which are typical of others being erected in various places. The handsome building in Lucknow has been made the home of a most interesting collection of sculptures from Muttra and other places where large excavations of ancient buildings and sites have been carried out by Dr. Marshall and others. Especially interesting are the Buddhist images which have been taken from the sites of the ancient temples in Muttra. The building which is in true oriental style, is visited by considerable numbers of people of all classes. The exhibits are carefully labelled and described so that the visitor has no difficulty in learning all about them.

The new museum at Sarnath has taken the place of the old structure in which were housed many articles of interest taken from the ruins of the Buddhist topes here. It is a long, low building of stone, in the vicinity of the ruins, and has a collection second to none in archaeological interest. Innumerable images of Buddha in every position have been brought to light in the course of the excavations, and these have been arranged very carefully by the authorities. Perhaps the most striking object is the capital of one of the Asoka pillars with its lion's heads. The work of these old carvers has scarcely been excelled, and the whole is as fresh to-day as if it had been recently done.

The provision previously made for the care on these valuable objects was inadequate, but the new museum will preserve for many generations the objects which speak of distant but great art.

The value of museums as an educational asset will be increasingly realised in this country, and time and money devoted to making these collections even more complete than at present will not be wasted.

In view of the very extensive excavations that are now being made in the Punjab and Sind, the need for well-arranged museums will become of even greater importance. In Taxila, Sir John Marshall has erected a small museum which will be a worthy building for the valuable finds he has made in that area. In connection with the other fields of archaeological research it will be necessary, as funds are available, to provide suitable accommodation. In Lahore there is a very fine museum containing some of the most interesting examples of ancient sculpture, together with a splendid collection of ancient coins, etc. Reference should be made to another type of museum which is of unending interest, museums in which are to be found a collection of the various types of arms etc., used in India in different periods. Those in Lahore and Alwar are well worth a visit. Of a more general type mention may also be made of the museum in Srinagar where the Maharajah has collected together a fine number of archaeological remains, typical of the various kinds of structures that existed there in ages past. In addition there is also a very full display of the products of the country. As educational aids it is difficult to exaggerate the value of these museums found in various parts of India :—The Modern Review, Calcutta.

WOMEN'S MOVEMENTS IN JAPAN.

The emancipation of women is a world-wide phenomenon. It is demanded even by followers of Confucianism in China, which prohibits children above seven years of different sexes sitting together, and by Mohammedans in Turkey and Egypt, whose doctrines demand that a girl should not show her "flowering face" before any man. It is no wonder that in Japan, where the higher education is open to women, they should come to a spiritual awakening, and claim equality with men and the "emancipation" of their sex. It will not be out of the way, therefore, to glance at women's movements in foreign countries, before I say anything about those at home.

It is a remarkable fact how women in the Orient have awakened. Madam Das, the wife of Gandhi, (?) the Indian patriot, for instance, was sent to prison several times (?) for her strong stand in the movement for the emancipation of Indian women, who are awakening to their position in politics and culture, as well as in religion. Miss Tata is the first woman solicitor in India, and there are many other Indian girls engaged in public life.

No less marvellous is the awakening of young women in China, who are a backing and support to men's movements. Chinese girls have a strong thirst for knowledge and will not be contented within the small circle of women, but aspire to living as an equal half of mankind and to freedom in society. It will not be far off when the girls take a lead in women's movements in China and help their elders out of ignorance and inactivity.

New Zealand is the paradise of women and children. These favoured women have the suffrage and can engage in any profession, except the ministry. A worker in New Zealand is entitled to a minimum wage of £175 a month when he comes of age, whether trained or not, and a woman labourer when she gets married has only to retire from work and attend to her household duties. There is a relief law for the widow, and an old spinster will receive a life-pension of £1,300 per annum. A primary school teacher receives a minimum of £2,080 and three times as many women as men are employed in the teaching of children, while social work in general has five times as many women as men in this island country. And one third of the university students are women.

How are European women situated? France is the land of female omnipotence, but French women are not yet given the suffrage. Nor do their sisters in Spain and Italy enjoy better political privileges. Woman suffrage is not recoginzed in the Latin countries, probably because in these countries a husband's absolute right at home and over his wife has been done away with from ancient times. But such is not the case with the northern countries of Europe, where women enjoy less respect and privilege, but where woman suffrage is more strongly demanded than in the south. Give women freedom, some say sarcastically, and they will not ask for suffrage.

In Russia, boys and girls receive free co-education and they have freedom of thought, but we often hear of vices in the freedom of love. The education of women is a great problem in Russia, but most women prefer clothing to education, and they naturally fall far behind their sisters of the other European countries.

Great Britain is a country of female awakening. Miss Sylvia Pankhurst is crying for the protection of English mothers and children. Life and culture must be guaranteed, she protests, and not only those who have no issue, but mothers also should be provided for.

In America, where women are more commonly educated than in any other country, there are more "old maids" than in other countries. The percentage of unmarried graduates of Syracuse University rose from 13 to 50 for every 100 in the past half-century and the women's college at Mount Holyoake has half its graduates unmarried. We give below the percentages of unmarried graduates of a few other women's colleges in America: —

| College. | Percentage of Unmarried Graduates. |
|---|---|
| Wells | 33 per cent. |
| Ohio | 46 " |
| Wisconsin | 48 " |
| Ilinois | 46 " |
| California | 40 " |
| Stanford | 40 " |

Whether higher education disqualifies girls for marriage or gives them prejudices against family life, certain it is that education qualifies girls for a wider sphere of action in society than for the family circle Public attention seems to be attracted to this growing tendency in America, that educated girls keep themselves from family life.

Japan has as yet a lukewarm and limited movement of women, for it was at the 51st session that a Bill for woman suffrage and citizenship was first taken up and discussed in the Imperial Diet of Japan. Generally speaking, Japanese women are good-natured, obedient to husbands, devoted to the bringing up of their children and faithful in house-keeping. Japanese labourers are said to be the best immigrants in Brazil, for their wives co-operate with them. While neither Italians nor Spanish like to have their wives engaged in out-of-doors work, the Japanese women leave home with their husbands and sons early in the morning, often carrying their babies on their backs, and, after their work is done in the field, they make nothing of attending to their kitchen work. In an agrarian or fishing village, women are better workers than men. It is a sad fact, however, that educated women in Japan, as everywhere else, take greater pleasure in consumption than in production of labour, and this tendency is making itself manifest in the villages.

Japanese women are receiving higher education than their mothers did before them, but knowledge seems to be the only ambition of their learning. They care little or nothing for spiritual culture or faith, and on this account they are not competent as helpers to their husbands as house-keepers or social workers Most Japanese women take little interest in religion, literature, politics, sanitation, art, music, plays, etc, which have close relation with their every-day life, to say nothing about social problems. Small wonder, therefore, that woman suffrage, which is eagerly sought in other civilized countries, is looked at with indifference by Japanese women. But everything has two sides, and we may attribute this indifference on the part of Japanese women to their devotion to family duties.

The question of Japanese women allows no indifference on their part. Unless it is well nursed in its cradle days, it will have a morbid growth and our women may lose much of their beautiful devotion and grace. Mention must be made, in this connection, of such intelligent and well-informed leaders, as Madam Kubushiro, Mrs. Kujo and Mrs. Shiodome, who are devoted Christians or Buddhists. Through their prudent guidance, we are confident, Japanese women will retain their characteristic gracefulness, chastity, diligence, prudence and patience, for which they are known in the world. Our only fear, if anything, is that Japanese women are rather narrow-minded and over-nervous, against which they should guard themselves.:—Indo Japanese Journal, Japan.

MALABAR CATHOLIC LADIES' CONFERENCE.

The second annual session of the Malabar Catholic Ladies' Conference was held on the 13th instant under the auspices of the Catholic Congress, at Panavally (Travancore), under the presidentship of Miss Thengummootil Theresa Joseph, M A., B.Sc., (London), Professor of Economics, Queen Mary's College, Madras. A fairly representative gathering of ladies was present.

Lectures.

After the President's introductory remarks Miss Rose Xavier, M.A., (Hons.) delivered the first lecture of the evening and her subject was "Women and Civilization". She condemned in strong language any blind imitation of the West and observed that true civilization did not mean well-tailored and well-trimmed apparel. She said that civilization was that which made them better men and women. She exhorted her sisters to be clean and tidy in their personal habits and thus to drive away disease from their homes. She condemned the adoption by Indian ladies of western modes of dress and said that their clothing or apparel should depend upon local climatic conditions. She also asked them to give up their extravagance in jewellery. Speaking of the educational system now in vogue in our schools and colleges, she said that it was needless and unwholesome to give the same kind of education to boys and girls without any discrimination as to their suitability to their environments. Her idea was that there should be an institution in Kerala on the lines of Prof. Karve's Women's University in Poona. She was not in favour of her sisters taking to Politics and Public Service, and said that they should make themselves useful in other spheres. She suggested that house-wifery and cookery should be taught in schools.

Miss Aley, B.A., L.T., then spoke on the position of women in society. She said that women had always occupied a unique position in every country and had contributed to the progress and prosperity of every nation. She deplored that in Malabar the Catholic ladies stood behind their sisters of other communities and said it was high time they put up a strenuous effort to keep themselves abreast of the times. Want of education was a great obstacle to their progress. She advised her sisters not to give up their study of their mother-tongue in their pursuit of English education. She asked them to keep themselves in touch with the progress of the world by reading newspapers and periodicals. She also dealt with the advantages that would result from Conferences of the kind and asked them to meet more often and form their own associations in each village and town.

Miss Mirian Joseph then spoke on the duties and responsibilities of an ideal housewife while Miss Aley Kutty addressed the gathering on "Women and social uplift." Miss Mary John Thottom then delivered a humorous speech on the present position of Catholic women and the lines whereby they could improve themselves.

Presidential Address.

The President, Miss Theresa Joseph, in her concluding remarks, said that they had already heard the several speakers of the evening who had told them what were the duties of wives, mothers and sisters and how they were to conduct themselves in society. She proposed to tell them now the 'duty that society owed towards women. She held that society should realise that women had certain important and exclusive spheres of their own in society. She extended her whole-hearted support to the modern changes in the modes of dress of women and did not see what harm would result from 'square necks' and 'short sleeves' in a tropical country like ours. She also did not see if there was any wisdom in giving up their jewellery if their husbands wished that they should have them. If it was the desire of their husbands that they should adorn themselves with costly jewellery they should by all means please their husbands.

Continuing she paid a warm tribute to the signal services rendered by missionary institutions particularly the Convents in the spread of education among Catholic women. She had spent 18 years altogether in various Convents and could speak with first-hand knowledge about the conditions obtaining therein. The one drawback she noticed was that the students were not given as much freedom as they were given in Protestant schools. This was perhaps a small defect that could be remedied. She condemned the system of early marriages and suggested that girls should be taught till they were at least 16 years of age. She said that needlework, embroidery and music should be taught in schools and Convents. She was told that the various missions in Malabar had enormous funds and could easily afford facilities to their girls in this direction. She said that Catholic women generally as a class neglected the study of music and said that this drawback should be removed. In conclusion, she suggested that a representative of their sex should be co-opted as a member of the Executive Committee of the Congress in order that she could induce her sisters to take greater interest in the Congress and its work.

The Conference terminated by 8 p m. with the garlanding of the President.

There was a dramatic entertainment the same night which was largely attended.—The Hindu, Madras.

EAZHAVA LADIES' CONFERENCE.

The Fourteenth Annual Session of the S. N. D. P. Stree Samaj was held on the 8th instant after-noon in the local Shanmuga Vilas Hall, Quilon, under the presidentship of Srimathi K. Narayani Amma, the wife of Mr. T. K. Madhavan, the well-known Tiya leader. There was a representative gathering of ladies present; and the proceedings commenced with the usual prayer sung to the accompaniment of music.

WELCOME ADDRESS.

Srimathi S. Lakshmi Amma, wife of Mr. Kunhiraman Vaidyar, S. M. P. A. Member, delivered the Welcome Address as the President of the Reception Committee. In doing so she referred to the new craze for conversion that had caught hold of the community, and advised her sisters to consider carefully whether any need had arisen for the same before they yielded to the wishes of their husbands in this matter. She extended her whole-hearted support to the movement for the abolition of caste and deplored the apathy of her sisters in matters relating to social reform. She urged that greater facilities should be afforded to her sex in entering the ranks of the public service, that their interests should be represented by representatives of their sex in the Councils of the State, and that all existing inequalities should be done away with. Srimathi C I. Rukmani Amma, Secretary, then proposed Mr. Madhavan to the chair and the motion having been duly seconded and supported the President took her seat amidst shouts of applause.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

Srimathi Narayani Amma thanked the organisers at the outset for the honour they had conferred upon her in inviting her to preside over the session. She referred to the unprecedented awakening seen throughout the world now-a-days among all races and peoples. The Ezhavas as a community have made an earnest effort in the matter of their uplift only in recent years, and it was a matter for sincere gratification for them that they had as their spiritual leader His Holiness Sri Narayana Guru. She said that they were also fortunate in having as their ruler Her Highness Setu Lakshmi Bai, the Maharani Regent, who always evinced a keen interest in the welfare of the subjects of the State. She reminded her sisters of the interview which Mahatma Gandhi had with Her Highness the Maharani Regent, in the course of which Her Highness stated that personally she was in sympathy with the aspirations of the backward and depressed classes of the State. She was sure that Her Highness would be only glad to do whatever she could for them, and it was for them to carry on their agitation to get all their social disabilities removed. What they had to do was to educate public opinion in their favour. She reminded them that when they wanted further rights and privileges they should not fight shy of their responsibilities.

She condemned caste and said that when they attempted to secure from the so-called higher castes greater privileges, they could not afford to keep back the self-same rights and privileges from those who stood in the lower rungs of the social ladder. She congratulated Mr. Aiyappan on the inestimable services he was rendering to the cause by having interdined with Pulayas and earned for himself the name of "Pulayan Aiyappan," a Tiya himself though he was. Women could do much more solid work in social reform than men and she advised everyone present to take into their own homes a Pulaya servant to start with. This would indirectly help in removing the distinctions that were now kept up between the caste-Hindus and the Tiyas.

TEMPLE ENTRY.

She then dealt with the question of temple entry and said that there was a mistaken impression among the people that this agitation was solely intended to secure freedom of worship in temples for members of the backward and depressed classes. The agitation was intended for the purpose of reforming Hinduism itself and purging it of all its evils. The temple entry agitation would help them to storm the citadel of caste which was undermining Hinduism and driving away its adherents to seek refuge under other faiths. It was their claim that all non-Brahmins should be allowed the same rights and privileges as the Brahmins now enjoyed.

PROHIBITION.

Prohibition was another direction in which women could help considerably. Their leader, His Holiness Sri Narayana Guru, had enjoined total abstinence on all and it was their duty to boycott all those who had anything to do with the manufacture, use or sale of intoxicants. They had passed a resolution at the last session to the same effect but they had not taken to the boycott in the right earnest yet.

Another important direction in which they had to exert themselves was to improve their economic resources. The Ezhava regulation favoured individual partitions, and this was just the time when they had to see that their slender resources were not dissipated but conserved. It was gratifying, she said, that they had in view the formation of a Bank. She then referred to the disabilities of her educated sisters in entering the ranks of the public service. There were several Ezhava lady graduates whose claims were ignored in the Educational Department. She appealed to her sisters to give their girls the benefits of a liberal education. She also suggested that a school exclusively for girls should be started at Varkala to commemorate the 70th birthday of His Highness Sri Narayana Guru for which a sum of at least Rs. 20,000 was required. She then concluded her address with an appeal for the formation of branches affiliated to the Central Association throughout the State. Resolutions were then passed placing on record the feelings of loyalty and devotion of the Samaj to the Royal family of Travancore, extending its whole-hearted support to the temple entry and prohibition movements, and requesting the Government to nominate a lady to represent them in the Legislative Council. Another resolution was to the effect that the Government be requested to throw open the ranks of the public service more largely to women.—The Hindu, Madras.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bhils to Abstain from Liquor: The Bhils of Broach have resolved to abstain from taking liquor. This decision has begun to tell upon the sales of liquor vendors.

A Lady Graduate: We are glad to see that Miss Shakuntala Paranjpye, daughter of Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, has obtained a first class in her B. Sc. Examination. She intends going to Cambridge to study for Mathematics Tripos.

Satyagraha in Narsipur: A report from Mysore states that Kaniyars (the people of the depressed classes) in Narsipur have started on the 16th instant satyagraha for the purpose of securing entry into the temple of the place.

Untouchables and Public Schools: The Delhi Municipality decided on the 19th instant that the schools maintained with public funds should be open to members of all classes and creeds.

Untouchables Refused Admission in School: A message from Malabar reports that the Headmaster of the Vaikom High School had refused admission to non-caste Hindus. Madhava, the leader of the "Untouchables", has wired to the Dewan asking for permission.

A Beggars' Home for Madras: A Beggars' Home with management vested in the Corporation and open only to adults is to be shortly opened in Madras by the City Municipal Corporation. The establishment would consist of a Superintendent who should be a medical man of ten years' standing in the service of the Corporation and a qualified midwife and nurse as matron.

Adi-Dravidas and Executive Council Membership: At the Adi-Dravida Conference held at Vikravandy in Villupuram, South Acrot District, under the presidency of Mr. Veerian, depressed classes representative in the Madras Legislative Council, a resolution was passed requesting his Excellency the Governor to consider favourably the claims of the depressed classes when the next vacancy arose in the Executive Council of the Governor of Madras.

Enquiry into the Back Bay Scheme: The following communique has been issued: At the request of the Bombay Government, the Government of India have decided, in exercise of their powers of superintendence, direction and control and with the approval of the Secretary of State to appoint a Committee of Enquiry in connection with the Back Bay Reclamation Scheme. The personnel of the Committee and the terms of reference to it will be announced later on.

Marriage ends in Tragedy: News has reached from Barisal of the tragic death of a Hindu girl on the eve of her marriage. Krishnakumar Ghose of Dhipur arranged the marriage of his two daughters for May 13. The elder girl, Subarna, however, did not favour the idea of marriage, and her entreaties in this connection were disregarded by her parents. On the night before the marriage Subarna took a quantity of opium which she had previouly removed from her father's box and died from the effects of it.

Personnel of Public Services Commission: The Government of India have issued the following communique: "In exercise of the powers conferred on him by sub-section (1) of Section 96 (C) of the Government of India Act, the Secretary of State for India in Council has been pleased to appoint the following as members of the Public Services Commission in India from 1st October, 1926:—(1) the Hon. Mr. A. H. Ley, I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of India in the Industries and Labour Department, (2) the Hon. Sayed Raza Ali, Member of the Council of State, (3) Sir Philip Joseph Hartog, late Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University, and (4) Diwan Bahadur Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya, M.L.A.

Arya Vysia Widow Remarriage at Guntur: The Guntur correspondent of the Swarajya writes to that paper that after a lapse of many years Guntur has again witnessed a very happy widow-remarriage of a very young girl of 11 years belonging to a respectable family of Arya Vysia community. The marriage was performed by Dr. Darsi Chenchaiah, a staunch exponent of social reform. It appears the girl was first married in her 10th year and she subsequently became a widow just in one month after the function. Kamalamma, that is her name, is the only daughter to her parents who took pity on her and consented to get her remarried. Now she is given in marriage to Manchineella Kristnayya Sastri. Many ladies in the town also attended the function. Many Vysyas came even from very distant places and attended the marriage. The marriage was celebrated according to Vedic rites. Messages of joy and congratulations were received and read out from various gentlemen in support of the noble cause like Justice M. V. Subbarao (Madras), Messrs. C. R. Reddy (Vice-Chancellor), Andhra University, Bezwada, T. Bhagavantam Gupta, Presidency Magistrate, Madras, and others. Justice M. V. Subbarao in the course of his letter congratulated the parents of the couple on their courage and sincerity.

Begum of Bhopal Abdicates: The Government of India have announced the abdication of the Begum of Bhopal in favour of Nawabzada Hamidullah Khan who has been recognised as the ruler of Bhopal. A Political Department communique says: Her Highness the Begum of Bhopal recently informed His Excellency the Viceroy by cable from London of her desire to abdicate in favour of her son Nawabzada Hamidullah Khan who was lately recognised by the Government of India as her heir. In making this communication to His Excellency the Viceroy, Her Highness explained that in the closing years of her life she wished to be relieved of cares and responsibilities of administration. His Excellency the Viceroy in reply expressed his regret at Her Highness's proposal to vacate a position in which she has so long displayed devotion to her high responsibilities and distinguished loyalty to the Crown. Appreciating however, Her Highness's natural desire for a well-earned rest, His Excellency recognised he Highness's abdication and offered sincere wishes for many happy years of peaceful retirement. On 16th May 1926, a telegram was received from Her Highness's heir announcing that he had taken over the reins of administration on the previous day. His Excellency the Viceroy has intimated that His Majesty the King-Emperor has been graciously pleased to recognise His Highness Hamidullah Khan as ruler of Bhopal.

Converts to Islam Reclaimed: The following piece of information is published in the Hindustan Times: During the last two years certain zemindars of Dighee village, Bulandshahr district, have been reported to be oppressing the Jatavs. From time to time efforts were made to compose their differences but without any success. Nearby is Pahasu, the residence of a Nawab. Taking advantage of the differences, the Nawab is alleged to have made tempting offers of relationship with his family, and promised other handsome rewards. Sixteen of the Jatavs became converts to Islam on the 2nd and for the conversion of the rest, about eighty families, the 11th instant was fixed. All this was done so secretly that even the Sabha's workers did not get scent of the happening although they were in the village. At last they heard of the actual conversion ceremony going on at Pahasu. On receipt of news, Swami Ramanand, with all available workers together with some respectable citizens of Khurja, reached on the spot and organised a big panchayat of all local zemindars and the Jatavs on the 7th. The position having been made clear, conciliation was effected, and all the 16 Jatavs were reclaimed.

The Bhil Conference: The Second Bhil Conference of Southern Gujerat met at Ankleswar on April 28th under the presidentship of Diwan Bahadur Ambashankar Uttamram Malji. Besides Bhils from distant tracts, the workers of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha, Mr. Sukadeva, Secretary of the Panchmahals Bhil Seva Mandal and workers from Ankleswar and Broach were present. Mr. Narmadashankar Pandya, President of the Reception Committee, in the course of his address, gave an historical survey of the Bhils in India from ancient times. He exhorted the Bhils to organise panchayats everywhere and give up the evil of drinking. The President in the beginning reminded the Bhils of their simple weapons, bows and arrows, and advised them to eradicate the evil of drinking from amongst them. He appealed to them to learn morals and to that end advocated the building of temples where Bhils might learn to be religious and cultivate religious sentiments in life. About seven resolutions were passed, the chief amongst which were concerning prohibition, Co-operative Societies, Spinning and the building of Rama Mandirs. A resolution requesting the Ankleswar Municipality to open two Gujerati schools in the Bhil district was also passed. After that an Advisory Committee of the local workers was appointed and on appeal Rs. 120 were collected on the spot for the Amrutpura Bhil Ashram. At night, the different Bhajan mandalis sang bhajans and magic lantern pictures were shown by Mr. Chhotalal Gandhi.

Is it Prohibition ? : Mr. Jhabwalla writes that on behalf of the Purity Mission Society, he represented to Government the inadvisability of giving extension of period of sale of liquor beyond the proper limit fixed to a particular shop at Dadar and also that of allowing one to open opposite the Church at Chinchpoogly, Byculla, but he has been painfully disappointed at Government's total apathy towards popular demand. Though it has been the vaunt of Government to uphold prohibition, yet Mr. Jhabwalla complains that it is mere hypocrisy on the part of Government to boast of 10 per cent. annual reduction, when local option is not favourably viewed. The Excise Department argues that the Dadar shop has also a Refreshment Room attached to it and therefore according to regulations, the Refreshment Rooms could be kept open till 11 at night. Mr. Jhabwalla during his discussion pointed out that if the Refreshment Room was kept open till 11, he did not mind but if along with that the grog-shop was also kept open, it was against principle and that the local residents were gravely suffering owing to the nuisance. The officers-in-charge put forward a ridiculous plea that those who wanted to eat at night also wanted to drink and that the Railway Company had specially required of the Department to keep the shop open till 11. The arguments are highly invalid and if nothing is done forthwith Mr. Jhabwalla has informed the Department that he would proceed further in the matter till those who are responsible for permitting the liquor shop open till 11, are brought to book.

NOTES

Reforms for Mysore: The Committee of the Progressive Party of the Mysore Representative Assembly which was appointed nearly a year ago to examine the working of the present reformed constitution, to point out its defects and to suggest measures for its improvement, has submitted its report. The Committee finds that the reforms of 1923 are inadequate to meet the wishes of the people and the needs of the country. The defects pointed out are the same that we are familiar with in British India, viz., the supremacy of the Executive, the subordination of the Legislature and the increasing official control of local bodies. It is a curious fact that the great democracies of Europe and America, which are our models, are themselves deliberately reproducing these features which we call defects in their own constitutions. The lines of reform which the Committee suggests aim at full responsible government for the State. They are a constitutional monarchy, responsible government with a responsible Executive which may be appointed by the Maharaja but may only be retrievably lost, the Mahomedan support by which [illegible] held up the grant for Ministers' salaries, rendering the Reforms unworkable in Bengal. It has lost a large part of Hindu support by the absence of any definite principles or policy which led it to temporise whenever any serious question presented itself. The break-down of the Hindu-Mahomedan alliance to obstruct and wreck the Reforms, has restored the normal situation in Bengal, and we may hope soon to see the emergence from the present confusion of a strong constitutional party which will make Bengal politics once more the steady force that it was previous to Lord Curzon's Partition.

A positive proof that the Hindu-Mahomedan problem is moving towards a natural solution, is the establishment at Patna by Syed Sir Ali Imam. Mr. [illegible] this, but it cannot be the sole reason. The fact is that the experiment of an Anglo-Indian Dewan of one of the most orthodox Hindu States in India—one which is almost a theocracy in fact—was undertaken without sufficient previous preparation of the ground for it. Mr. Watts had the advantage of being a Travancorean by birth and heredity and he did his best to accommodate himself to his new position. But he was without previous administrative experience for which a local domicile is an inadequate substitute. From the first the experiment, while doing credit to the breadth of outlook of the Maharani Regent, had few factors of success about it, and it is wise of Her Highness and Mr. Watts to recognise that it has been prematurely undertaken. In the circumstances, Mr. Watts is not to be blamed for not having carried out any great schemes of reform. His Press Act, however, is an unnecessarily harsh piece of legislation, and we hope it will not long continue in the Travancore statute-book after his departure. No country can develop an independent and self-respecting Press under a system of securities and guarantees, and there was the least need for a Press Act in Travancore which is about the only Indian State with some vigorous and independent journals to maintain the tone of its public life. The provisions of the Act are the most dangerous ever designed to stifle public opinion. According to it, no newspaper can now be published without the payment of a fee of Rs. 500 and no option is given to a Magistrate to dispense with the fee if he is convinced of the respectability of the promoters of the paper. The fee is to be held as a sort of security to be confiscated if the paper misbehaves or to be returned if it ceases publication. When the fee is confiscated, a fresh license may be granted, unconditionally or otherwise, only on payment of a fresh fee of Rs. 2,500. The manner in which the Act has been brought into force is also the most objectionable. Neither the public nor the Legislative Council nor the Popular Assembly was consulted on the measure.

A Step in Social Reform: Three miles from Muzaffarnagar at a village called Panchenda Kalan, a Hindu Sammelan was held from the 15th to 17th May. Bhai Parmanand presided and resolutions concerning akharas (athletic institutions), child marriage and Sangathan were passed. At this meeting the audience was exhorted to put into practice the anti-untouchability resolutions passed by the Hindu Mahasabha at its last session in Delhi. On hearing this the leading Chaudhries came forward and announced from the platform that they were prepared to throw open their wells to all classes. A procession having been formed they went with drums beating and colours flying from well to well. Ancient prejudices were removed, a step towards equality was taken, and there was general rejoicing among the depressed classes. This is one of those rare instances when practice has followed close on the heels of resolutions and conferences and now that an example has been set people in other parts of India are bound to follow it up. The Hindu Mahasabha has popularised social reform and by means of gatherings similar to this held at the villages reached the heart of the people. The throwing open of wells means much to the depressed classes, for, the exclusion of certain sections of the community from using wells rouses in them feelings of inferiority and humiliation. To attack this invidious custom is to strike at the very root of the social problem. It is a move as important as that of inter-communal dinners and one that is more spectacular. The Hindu Mahasabha is doing great service to the Hindu community and we trust it will continue the good work that it has so well begun. It has a vast field before it of social and economic activity, and however reluctant people may be to take part in political work, no one can shrink back from aiding it in its attempt to right social evils and establish a more democratic feeling in the country. We firmly believe that every Indian will stand by the Mahasabha in its efforts to do away with the disabilities of a large part of the people of India.

Vaniya Vaisya Conference: Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chettiar, M. L. A., as President of the fourth session of the above Conference which was recently held at Madura, South India, delivered a thoughtful address. Our attitude towards communal conferences has always been that, if rightly conducted, they can do much towards educating and uplifting the backward communities. Mr. Chettiar recognises that, in the existence of these communal gatherings, there is a possible danger, but he is confident that if the various communities are looked upon and utilised as convenient groups for doing national work more effectively, gatherings of this nature will become potent instruments of national welfare. Mr. Chettiar does not deny that gross injustice has been done to many communities in the past and even in the present, but he sees that no useful purpose would be served by apportioning the blame for the existence of such a state of affairs. The remedy, according to him, lies not in forming communal cliques but in each community fighting out for its rights from the national platform, and each community claiming its rights not from any one particular community or class of people but from the nation at large. His observations on caste are also tinged by a healthy spirit of introspection which is unfortunately lacking in the utterances of many of our communal leaders. While affirming his conviction that caste must go from the country, he frankly tells members of his community that so long as they consider certain communities to be of a lower social order, they have no right to complain if others consider them as low.

Banking in India: Banking is the mainspring of modern industrial life. The progress during the last ten or twelve years of banking in India has been slow although there have been steady improvements, and banking facilities are very meagre. The Department of Commercial Intelligence and Statistics has issued Statistical Tables relating to Banks in India, a publication of which consists of figures upto 1924. The Banks dealt with here are classified into (1) The Imperial Bank of India in which were merged the old Presidency Banks of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta in January 1921, (2) The Exchange Banks with head offices outside India, (3) The Indian Joint Stock Banks, and (4) The Indian Co-operative Banks. The number of Exchange Banks has risen from 12 in 1913 (pre-war year) to 18 in 1924; their aggregate paid-up capital and reserves amounted to £130 millions. The Indian Joint Stock Banks have increased from 41 in 1913 to 69 in 1924. All the eighteen failures that occurred in the last decade were in the year 1924. Of these Madras accounted for 6, Punjab for 5 and Bombay for 3. Indian Co-operative Banking too has progressed. In 1913 there were 30 such Banks, in 1924 there were 98. The Clearing House returns show a rapid increase in banking operations till 1920, but from then till 1924 there has been a gradual fall in their activity. These are but a few of the important statistics in these tables. This blue book contains much useful information about banks.

A Sikh University: It is regrettable that the Sikhs who have set a commendable example to the other minority communities in the country by their outspoken condemnation of communal representation, should have carried this separatist tendency into the educational sphere. Replying to an address a few weeks ago, Sir Malcolm Hailey, the Governor of Punjab, told the Sikhs that a separate University would retard rather than advance their progress and apparently they have not profited by this sensible advice, for at the Sikh Educational Conference recently held, they repeated the demand for a separate University "where alone it would be possible to enforce systems and schemes suited to their all-round needs, vocational, religious, cultural, social and industrial". Surely these worthy objects can be gained as much in the existing Universities as in a denominational University. The withdrawal of the Sikhs from educational contact with other communities would be fraught with the greatest danger to the Province, for it would then remove the only moderating influence at present existing in the communal struggle between Hindus and Mahomedans.

The Riff Collapse: With the surrender of Abdel Krim, the gallant struggle which the brave Riffi had been carrying on so long single-handed against the united strength of two great Western Powers, comes to an end. But even in their hour of defeat, the sympathy and admiration of the world will go to them. As was to be expected, it was only a matter of time when the Riffi would be defeated, but the fact that it has taken Spain and France five long years to subdue them does not certainly redound to their credit. It is a sad commentary upon the conduct of the League of Nations which parades itself as a harbinger of a new era of peace and harmony in the world, that it should be talking of disarmament just at the moment when two of its members are engaged in curbing the freedom and independence of a brave nation, and now that the Riffi leader has surrendered, it is to be hoped the League will bring pressure upon Spain and France to dictate honourable terms to him.

BOMBAY, MAY 29, 1926.

COMMUNALISM AND NATIONALISM.

Most problems when they reach their highest point of acuteness have a way of working out their own solution. This stage seems to have been reached by the Hindu-Mahomedan problem. The culminating point of the differences between the two communities' was touched at Calcutta and the Kharagpur riots were but the dying echo of the storm which raged in the capital of Bengal for the best part of a month. There have since been alarums of outbreaks in other places, but no serious trouble has happened elsewhere. The immediate effect of the Calcutta riots was visible in the fiasco of the Bengal Provincial Conference at Krishnagar, which, however, did not prevent a resolution being carried denouncing the Bengal Pact between Hindus and Mahomedans adopted at the instance of the late Mr. C. R. Das by the same Conference at Serajgunj the year before last. This Pact had the effect of attaching a large section of politically-minded Mahomedans in Bengal to the Swaraj Party, thus enabling that Party to create the deadlock in the Bengal Legislative Council which led to the suspension of the Reforms and the resumption by the Executive Government of the Transferred Subjects in that Province. This was considered at the time to be a triumph for the Swaraj Party which had started with the purpose of wrecking the Reforms. But it has proved quite the opposite. The Legislative Council has not been wrecked and the Government of Bengal is functioning as before in the exclusive control of the Executive Government. It is the Swaraj Party in Bengal that is fast going to pieces as was clearly demonstrated by its forced retreat from the Krishnagar Conference. It has irretrievably lost the Mahomedan support by which it held up the grant for Ministers' salaries, rendering the Reforms unworkable in Bengal. It has lost a large part of Hindu support by the absence of any definite principles or policy which led it to temporise whenever any serious question presented itself. The break-down of the Hindu-Mahomedan alliance to obstruct and wreck the Reforms, has restored the normal situation in Bengal, and we may hope soon to see the emergence from the present confusion of a strong constitutional party which will make Bengal politics once more the steady force that it was previous to Lord Curzon's Partition.

A positive proof that the Hindu-Mahomedan problem is moving towards a natural solution, is the establishment at Patna by Syed Sir Ali Imam, Mr. Hasan Imam and others of the Anjuman-Mohafazat. At the inaugural meeting on the 23rd May Sir Ali Imam defined its aims and objects as being to avoid acts of provocation against non-Moslems, to maintain friendly relations with them and to provide for the protection of Moslem interests. A unique feature of the Anjuman is that non-Muslims would be invited to become honorary members of it. We are so accustomed to fine paper constitutions that this definition of the objects of the new Anjuman would not of itself be sufficient to build any great hopes upon it. But the fact that almost immediately after its inauguration, it convened a large public meeting of Musalmans at Patna to hear an address on Hindu-Mahomedan differences from Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, who is regarded by many Mahomedans in all parts of the country as the arch-enemy of their community, is an earnest of its desire to put its principles into practice. In our opinion, the one great need of the hour is a reform and purification of the religious ideas which popularly pass for Hinduism and Mahomedanism. Pacts and compromises based upon the present corrupt conceptions may last for a time and have thus a temporary value. But they cannot permanently ensure harmonious relations unless Hinduism and Islam are understood and practised by their respective followers in their spiritual and ethical significance. So understood and practised the two religions will come so close to each other as to become the strongest uniting forces between the two communities. Hinduism has a larger outlook than Islam while Islam by limiting its outlook has gained a high power of concentration. The two combined will be one of the greatest dynamic forces of life. The Hindu ideal of ahimsa in combination with the Islamic ideal of human brotherhood, is what is needed to regenerate India. Let politicians devise their Pacts, but let the thinkers of both communities sit down and think out a synthesis of the ideals of the two great religions.

It is high time that we approached the question of communal politics from a new point of view. Everybody condemns communalism in theory and everybody in practice subscribes to it. The fact is that the community sentiment is so ingrained in Indian nature that only the very elect are able to overcome it. After all, is the community sentiment as a psychological fact on a lower plane than what is known as the national sentiment? The national sentiment rests upon a geographical, that is, a physical basis, while the community sentiment rests upon an idea. In the scale of psychological values, a sentiment which has its roots in an idea is superior to one which rests upon a materialistic or objective foundation. Both the community sentiment and the national sentiment fall short of the ideal of human brotherhood. But they are stages in the evolution towards that ideal, and we are not sure that the national sentiment is a nearer stage them the communal sentiment. In any case, we are by no means convinced that the communal sentiment must pass through the stage of national sentiment in its progress to the goal. Let us not forget in this connection that thinking men in Europe and America regard modern nationalism as an evil from which they have to free themselves in order to promote peace and harmony in world-relations There is just the danger that the change from communalism to nationalism may prove but a change from the frying pan into the fire. There is wisdom in the advice that one had rather bear the ills one has than fly to others that one knows nought of.

MORAL BEAUTY OF BUDDHA'S TEACHINGS.*

It is a very great happiness indeed to me, as a Christian, to be invited so kindly by you all to preside over this meeting in order to consecrate the memory of Gautama, the Lord Buddha, on the two thousand five hundred and fiftieth anniversary after his birth in the north of India near to the Himalayan snows.

Ever since my coming to India, more than twenty-two years ago, the amazing attraction of his gracious personality has grown upon me. Furthermore, in my travels to and fro about the world, his transforming influence has been made visible to me in countless human lives from the Indian community in South Africa to the dwellers in the islands of the Pacific Ocean. I have met and talked with his true followers, living to-day, in Ceylon and Malaya and on the borders of Tibet, in Burma and Java, in China and in Japan, and I rejoice more than I can possibly tell you that his adored memory is being revived in India itself, the place of his birth.

I have tried in some of the numbers of the Modern Review to relate what a spiritual revolution this growing attraction of the Buddha produced in my own life. There I described how it was in South Africa, in 1913-14, while I was in the company of Mahatma Gandhi, who seemed to me to reproduce in a living form the teaching of the Lord Buddha himself, that I began to perceive the intimate relation between the Buddhist doctrine of Ahimsa and the teaching of Christ in the Sermon on the Mount. It was to the great poet, Rabindranath Tagore, to Gopal Krishna Gokhale, and Mahatma Gandhi himself, that I first narrated my conclusions, which did not seem at all strange to them, but seemed strange indeed to me with my own intensely Western mind and Western outlook at that time. All three welcomed them with the fulness of love, and encouraged me to continue my search after truth.

But it was at Borobudur, in Java, that the great spiritual revolution took place in my own view of life. In the days which I spent there in solitude, the whole history of the human existence on this planet seemed to come before me in those sculptured stories. Once and for all the purely Western perspective was left behind. There came to me a new vision of humanity, in the East, intimately bound up with the supreme personality of the Lord Buddha himself. That vision has never faded from my mind and it is vividly present to-day.

Therefore, on this new anniversary,—this new Jubilee—after another fifty years have been completed, I shall mention in outline three aspects of the Lord Buddha's teaching, wherein he was the very first to bring home three vital sovereign truths to the masses of mankind in the East.
